This morning you and I received one of these beautiful paper tubes about a quarter of an inch thick, capped on each end with metal, a strategic material. We are also told that the paper is a strategic material, so much so that they are trying to cut down on the newsprint of this country. They claim there is a terrible shortage of newsprint paper and therefore they have to cut down and stifle the press. Yet here is the Treasury Department, charged with the sale of War bonds, sending each Member of Congress, and Lord knows how many more people around the country, in this great heavy carton here, just two charts. I do not know how much these cartons cost, but I am told by men in the paper business that if you and I tried to buy one, it would cost 8 or 10 cents. And, Mr. Speaker, if either you or I tried to buy these right down in the House stationery room, we would find that there were no more available—not even to Members of Congress—they just are not making them any more except for war purposes. Here are just two charts printed on the finest of paper. This is information we ought to have, but could not the great Treasury Department of ours have put it on two sides of one mimeographed sheet, stuck it in an envelope and mailed it to us? If they had done that, we would have the same information. Surely the over-all mailing cost would have been much less. That is one of the reasons why we on this side of the Capitol better be certain that the Keefe amendment adopted yesterday to curtail the free use of the mails by these Government departments remains in the Post Office appropriation bill because if we definitely and by positive appropriations limit the amount of postage to which these various departments and agencies are entitled they will see to it in the future that already overtaxed transportation systems of the Nation are not further burdened down by this wanton and wasteful dissemination of propaganda of all kinds and especially in heavyweight cartons such as this.

How much longer are the American people going to stand putting their money into war bonds and seeing it thrown away like that? Why, Mr. Speaker, I weigh 200 pounds, and I can jump up and down on that tube without crushing it. We are throwing away money for that sort of stuff. I say, Mr. Speaker, it is time that we have these investigating committees find out who is throwing away this money and why we are throwing it away, because when the boys come back from the front, and we pray God that may be soon, they do not want to come back to a bankrupt Nation. They want to come back to the America that they left and it is up to us to see that it is the America that they left and not a communistic or collectivist America, among other things.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say this. I was very much interested yesterday in the exposé of the magazine Victory by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. He pointed out that the 900,000 copies of this beautifully printed magazine in its original issue to be carried all over the world weighed approximately 400 tons, and he said that 400 1-ton bombs carried overseas by our already-hard-pressed merchant marine would be much more effective in winning this war. I agree with him.

I cannot, for the life of me, see why our Government should be going into the magazine business in competition with private industry and I fail to see any justification whatsoever for the Government compelling our war contractors into paying for advertising space at the rate of $3,000 per page in the Victory magazine. It's the old newspaper shake-down but much worse in this instance because, Mr. Speaker, you and I as taxpayers pay for it in the war bill.

Furthermore, a number of us are very much concerned about the continued curtailment of newsprint papers for the newspaper industry and paper for the magazine publishers under the guise of a war necessity. If private industry shall be so cut, why not governmental publications? Yet I was told yesterday by the Chief of the War Production Board's Division of Printing and Publishing that they had no authority whatsoever to regulate or restrict the amount of paper being distributed to or demanded by the various departments of the Government.

It is the old story so popular for the past 10 years to "do as I say—not as I do."

I have been informed that the Victory magazine will be expanded to 8,000,000 copies per issue. That means—if my rough and crude arithmetic is correct—that our overstressed merchant marine will be required to carry to all corners of the earth in this propaganda organ the equivalent of 3,000 1-ton bombs per issue. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if our Air Force could just have the opportunity—just once—from air bases strategically located in Russia, built under lend-lease funds, to drop these 3,000 1-ton bombs on the cities of Tokyo and Yokohama the little Jap rat might be suing for peace the day after.

Let us stop wasting the taxpayer's money and our resources and get to work on winning this war.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, as a new Member of this body, I was very much interested in the explanation of this resolution by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. May I say to the gentleman and also to the Appropriations Committee that I was shocked as a new Member to understand him to say that they had no power or authority to investigate why appropriations were needed. I know I would hate to go back home and tell my people, if I were a member of the Appropriations Committee, that the New Deal agencies come up here and say, "This is how much money we want. You must give it to us," and that we have no power to investigate and make them tell why they really need the money they are asking for.

I am in favor of this resolution and I hope it passes. I trust the Appropriations Committee will make the necessary investigations of all funds asked by these New Deal agencies, because it is only right and proper that the taxpayers be protected. I think the taxpayers expect authority to be given to the Appropriations Committee for the examination of all vouchers, expense accounts, and so forth. As far as I am personally concerned, I do not favor giving a blank check to any agency, be it executive or otherwise.

I came to this Congress from my district in Nebraska promising not to vote for any appropriation that was not needed unless it was in connection with the effort to win the war, and I think the people of Nebraska and the people of this country want to see us keep faith with that thought.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not meet with too many discouragements when the whitewash reports come in from the majority-controlled committee. I have endured those a long time.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman and appreciate his statement. I am wondering if that is not one reason we have such a tremendous debt facing us now, that there has not been enough minute scrutinizing of these appropriations.

I happen to be a surgeon out in Nebraska. I have taken out a great many gangrenous appendixes. I am wondering if there are not a number of gangrenous spots in the Government that need some sharp surgery used upon them.

Let us give more power to the Committee on Appropriations to investigate carefully the expenditures to be made in this Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to give my hearty approval and support of House Resolution 69. This resolution gives to the Appropriations Committee of the House the power to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such papers, documents, or vouchers by subpena or otherwise in the taking of testimony that may be helpful to this great committee in finding out if the enormous sums that are being appropriated are necessary and are being expended in an honest effort to win the war and to carry on the business of our Government.

I commend the Committee on Appropriations for making the request for this power.

The President has indicated that he desires the American people to pay into the Treasury approximately $52,000,000,000 in taxes this year, and since this new Congress met on January 6, the President has asked the Congress to appropriate for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1943, the enormous sum of $113,000,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is $113 for every minute since the dawn of Christian era.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; it is an enormous sum of money. No human mind can grasp the amount.

We will soon have 10,000,000 of the flower of American manhood in our armed forces. Most of us have boys in the Army or the Navy. It now appears that before this war is over our country will have a national debt of perhaps $300,000,000,000. That enormous sum represents almost the entire estimated national wealth of this Nation. You and I and the American people are willing to pay heavy taxes, buy bonds and spend every dollar necessary to win the war but, at the same time, neither you, nor I, nor the American people are willing to see their taxes, their bond money and a great national debt created or want this money squandered and wasted or any individuals or groups receive enormous profits. The American people insist that their money be expended only for the purpose for which it was contributed.

Investigations by committees of the Congress have disclosed that some concerns and individuals have made from 3,000 to 4,000 percent profits on war contracts. These profits came out of the people's taxes and bonds and stamp money and have helped to create this enormous debt. At the close of the last war there were 900,000 on the civil pay roll of the Government. We then knew we had thousands and thousands of people on the civil pay roll that were unnecessary. We have only been in this war about a year and the civil pay rolls now approach or perhaps exceed 3,000,000. Many well-informed persons assert that at least 1,000,000 of these or more are unnecessary, and the Government has been charged by administration officials as the great hoarder of manpower, at a time when there is a great shortage of manpower on the farms, in industries, in business, and for our armed forces.

This resolution will enable the Appropriations Committee to bring any and all those connected with the executive departments of the Government before it with their books, vouchers and other documents and find out whether or not the people's money is being squandered and wasted, and whether or not agencies are duplicated and that if we have an excess of persons on the civil pay roll of the Government. I have every confidence that this great committee will do a real job and thereby raise the morale of the people, increase their faith in their Government and lessen the burdens which they now carry and keep down as low as possible our growing national debt. They can, and I believe they will, render a real service to the American people and contribute greatly to the winning of the war.

On today we adopted Resolution 102, providing for the creation of a committee that will investigate fully bureaucratic control of our Government. It was a great forward step in restoring the liberties of the American people, the establishment of constitutional government and the assertion that Congress has found itself and has again become one of the three great coordinate branches of our Government as it was intended by the founding fathers of this Republic.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] decried the fact that there are so many investigations going on. I believe in more and better investigations, with the emphasis on the "better." He said we are now investigating the investigators, and that is exactly the point. I believe it is about time that we started investigating the investigators.

I have here an article from the Cleveland Press, a democratic daily newspaper in my home city, written by John M. Johnston. It reads as follows:

THAT LUSCIOUS WHIZZER WAS A UNITED STATES QUIZZER

Government quiz-bees are not rationed, and Washington officials are hard up for reading matter, it was apparent today from the latest Federal project to get under way in Cleveland.

A luscious young woman appeared at this reporter's door last night and introduced herself as "from the Division of Progress Reports of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics," all in one breath.

She was armed with a half-hour's catechism designed to bare the questionee's secret thoughts on matters of gasoline rationing and other agricultural matters, and incidental opinions on the kind of job being done by the administrators.

Samples:

Question. "How are you getting along on your A card?"

Answer. "All right, thank you."

Question. "How well could you get along if your ration was cut in half?"

Answer. "Half as well as I do now."

Question. "Do you think you'll get new tires?"

Answer. "Yes. I believe that tires-for-everybody stuff."

Question. "Ever hear of people getting gasoline on a friend's coupons?"

Answer. "No."

Question. "What would you think of getting gasoline that way?"

Answer. "That would be wicked."

The surveyor explained that most of the questions were designed to test public understanding of the rationing programs. Like, "How many kinds of gasoline books are there and how much gasoline does each get?"

The ones, "Is gasoline rationing necessary?" and "Are the rations fair?" seemed to your reporter to assume a somewhat greater degree of omniscience than the average citizen possesses.

Out tumbled the questions and out tumbled the answers until, hurt at not being asked about his operation, your reporter joined the game and learned that 16 such surveyors were loosed upon Cleveland from Washington, headed by Dorothy J. Hedner, whose headquarters are in Hotel Allerton.

A cross-section of the populace was obtained by taking each 118th ration card, and the interviewer said she averaged between two and three quizzes daily.

Arithmetic suggests that the survey will thus take 200 days. The request for an opinion on the kind of job being done by the administration also suggested some political significance, but on these matters your reporter was referred to Miss Hedner, the head lady.

Miss Hedner proved a slight disappointment. Her job is to give quizzes, not to answer them.

"Any information about this survey will have to come from Washington," she said.

Mr. Speaker, I understand these "luscious whizzers" have asked the Appropriations Committee for a supplemental appropriation. I trust the committee will not grant it. Here is a nuisance we can get along without.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in the language of the old Methodist camp-meeting hymn, "this is the day for which I long have sought and mourned because I found it not."

For the 10 years that I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I have been advocating the setting up of an adequate staff of auditors, who will try to get independent information for the Committee on Appropriations, in order that when we came to pass on a case, we would not have to rely entirely upon the evidence of the plaintiff. Year after year in presenting the independent offices appropriation bill I have spoken of that. Three sessions of Congress ago I introduced in a full meeting of the Committee on Appropriations a resolution for such a staff.

In the wisdom of my colleagues it was not deemed appropriate at that time to enter upon that project. I am glad that we are about to get it now. I do not believe, however, there is a very clear understanding of what is proposed. It is not in any sense of the word an investigating committee. As a matter of fact I do not think this resolution is necessary at all, except perhaps if we should wish to have hearings of the Committee on Appropriations when Congress is not in session, or should wish to subpena witnesses and documents. Except for those two things, we would not even need this resolution, because the Committee on Appropriations has ample authority to summon any department before it and inquire about an appropriation, past or present, and what has been done with money already provided. That is what we propose to do. This is not going to bring about the millennium, it is not going to break up all the abuses that we all know about, but it will do this; if we are able to get a staff of experts and I think we can, and they can be added to the fine bunch of clerks that we have now—and may I say parenthetically and most emphatically that the clerks we have on this committee, from Marc Sheild down to the messenger, are not exceeded in excellence by any other group of Government employees, there is none more intelligent, more diligent, more industrious; but with a $100,000,000,000 program of spending, it is physically and humanly impossible for these men to do more than they are doing. What we want to do is this. We want to have a corps of splendidly equipped auditors whom we can put on a certain project, who will go out and bring us back the facts. Let me mention two or three other things. There is the item of personnel. We have 3,000,000 people on the pay roll, or will have by the 1st of July next, we are told.

There is no need to get up and make speeches about how many people were in the Army 100 years ago, or how large it is now. We are in a global war and all precedents have been thrown aside. Everything is on a scale so much larger than we have done before or ever conceived and the only way you can do is to go into the situation for facts. Let me suggest that you go into the departments and see whether you see messengers there sitting around twiddling their thumbs, or whether they have more stenographers than they ought to have. If that is the case, then they should be put somewhere else where they will do some good, and we want to have a set of auditors who will be able to do just that. Then there is the matter of communications, and I know there is a great abuse there. I am confident that there are agencies of the Government where they would rather pick up the telephone and talk long distance to San Diego about a matter than sit down and write a letter and send it out air mail. I know that is being done, and the only way that we can correct it is to go out and get the facts. Then there is the matter of travel. I know there are men traveling all over the country today and that a lot of that traveling could be eliminated if the Appropriations Committee could have the facts. Also there is the matter of the field officers. If these auditors or investigators, if you wish to call them—I do not like the word—could go out into the field and bring us a comprehensive statement in respect to the field offices that are set up and the various Government set-ups, it would be of very great assistance. Every Congressman knows that when he goes into a town back home he will find many offices, particularly if it is a large city, of various Federal agencies. There is widespread duplication and unnecessary expenditure of funds, and there are places where there could be consolidations and coordination, and we propose to send these men out to make a study of that and to bring us back authentic facts on which we can act when the time comes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of this resolution. On one or two occasions I tried to offer amendments to appropriation bills which I thought would do this very thing, but the amendments were ruled to be out of order. This resolution puts into the hands of a standing committee of the House certain power which will enable that standing committee to do its job better than it could otherwise do it. No one will disagree with the purpose of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], passed by the House a short time ago, but let me make this observation. All kinds of people are talking about strengthening the hands of Congress, and upholding its position in the Government of the United States. The way in which that can be done best is to strengthen the standing committees of the House, and I submit there ought to be careful consideration given by the House in respect to giving to the standing committees whenever possible the power to follow up their legislation by reviewing the work done by the agencies of the Government, which administers the laws in question to see whether that is done in accordance with the intent of Congress, efficiently and thoroughly.

Mr. LANHAM. And may I say to the gentleman that the bill that I have introduced in Congress this session will do that very thing.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am glad to know that. I introduced a bill on the first day of the session which would give to every standing committee the power to continuously review the work of all agencies administering laws within the jurisdiction of the various committees, to determine whether they were done in accordance with the intent of Congress when we passed the legislation.

I have asked for this time to simply state that this whole question of bringing Congress into closer touch with the work of the executive agencies ought to be considered in a broad aspect. Otherwise we will be passing all sorts of resolutions and creating a lot of special committees which might do very good work, but which, after the work is done, will pass away. The way to really strengthen Congress is to build its regular standing committees to the greatest possible extent.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Before the gentleman starts, may I suggest that he bring out the fact that the safest sort of an investigating committee should be composed of a majority from the minority side?

Mr. FISH. I am in entire accord with the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, I always listen with interest to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. I was happy to hear him say that at long last the Congress is going to give the Appropriations Committee the power to investigate expenditures that he has been trying to secure for years.

I hate to resurrect disagreeable things in the House of Representatives, in which I have served for many years, and my father and grandfather before me, but it seems to me that facts are facts, and although disagreeable sometimes, it is necessary to bring them up in order to clear the atmosphere and start afresh.

During the last 10 years this Congress has surrendered its powers to such an extent that it became dominated by the President, who actually believed that he owned the Congress and controlled the legislative branch of the Government. To a large extent it was our own fault, because we permitted, and by that I mean the New Deal majorities, permitted individuals outside of the Congress to formulate measures and have them introduced into Congress as "must" bills. We were told that we had to pass them without change, and, unfortunately, on many occasions we did exactly that.

The President absorbed the legislative powers and so dominated Congress that it sunk to the lowest level, during the last 10 years, in the history of the Congress of the United States. Thank God, this last election has changed the entire spirit of the House, Republicans and Democrats alike, except for a minor minority of ardent new dealers. The House is determined not only to restore representative and constitutional government, but to restore its own independence and initiative to write legislation by itself and to give the committees of Congress the power to investigate the conduct of the administration and the Government. That is one of the basic functions of the Congress, not only to legislate but to know exactly how the laws passed by Congress are carried out. We have forgotten that right during the past decade of New Deal rule. Happily the day has now come where Members of the House on both sides enthusiastically and almost unanimously pass this type of legislation empowering its committees to investigate the activities of the administration and the Government.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I will be glad to yield to the charming and intelligent lady from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Some of us have felt that this could cost millions and millions of dollars, or it could cost very little. I am sure it is very worthy, but even though it be most worthy, we would like to have some estimate of the cost.

Mr. FISH. I do not have the faintest idea what the cost will be. I know the amounts of money that we appropriate run into billions of dollars a year, and I want some committee of Congress to have the power to investigate all those expenditures. No matter what it costs, whether it is $25,000 or $50,000, I want to assure the lady from Illinois that it will bring the greatest possible saving to the Treasury of the United States, probably running into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I have so often criticized other people for having a blank check that I dislike to do the same thing.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to say to the gentlewoman from Illinois and to the gentleman from New York that this resolution does not provide for any funds at all. We must yet get a resolution from the Committee on Accounts for whatever funds will be allowed.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I understood that, but I presumed you had some estimate of the possible cost.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It will not be a large amount, I can assure the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Mr. FISH. I hope the amount is adequate. Whatever is necessary to carry out this program I believe the Congress will gladly provide because in doing so you will save a great deal of money and stop administrative waste. That is one of our functions that we have overlooked or ignored. We are not simply a legislative body; we have the right and duty to control what is going on in the Government. It is our duty to safeguard the rights of the American people and taxpayers in all departments and agencies of the administration. I do not think anybody will deny that, although we have neglected that duty under the New Deal regime largely, I assume, because of the huge New Deal majorities recently in Congress.

So I am very happy that the day has come when the Congress is no longer a rubber stamp for the administration, for the New Deal, or for any individual. We are restoring to ourselves the powers that belong to us under the Constitution to investigate and legislate. I am in favor of more and bigger and better investigations until we have cleaned the New Deal bureaucratic house as we should, and safeguard the money of the taxpayers and stop the waste and incompetency in the administration, which is not only our right but the duty of Congress to do.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the pending resolution is the most deserving and worthy of passage of any of the investigating resolutions which we have enacted in the present session. I am sure that the committee, given the powers under its provisions, will be able to effectively investigate and place the responsibility for any wasteful expenditures where it properly belongs.

Mr. Speaker, the Republicans and a few Democrats assert day in and day out that the so-called bureaucrats and crackpots are to blame for waste and unnecessary expenditures. These charges are published in Republican newspapers and many people are actually believing them to be true. It is a fact that the minor officials and Government employees who have been designated bureaucrats and crackpots actually do not have anything to do with expenditures of moneys or jurisdiction of the funds which we appropriate. It is the heads of the departments, agencies, and Government-controlled corporations who hold the purse strings and upon whose authorizations disbursements are made. And, Mr. Speaker, who, in the main, are these heads but Republicans? Carrying from Secretary Stimson and Under Secretary Patterson, of the War Department, it also applies to the head of the Navy Department, Secretary Knox, one-time candidate for the Vice Presidency, under whose jurisdiction billions are being expended and by those under him. Mr. Stettinius, Administrator of the Lend-Lease Act, and most of his under officials are Republicans, as is Mr. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, a splendid gentleman, and many heads of the divisions in this Board.

And so it is through all of the departments and war agencies, and even to the Maritime Commission and War Shipping Administration, where billions are being expended, I have reason to believe the supervisory heads are Republicans. Therefore, those Republican Members of the House who continuously charge bureaucratic administration are labeling men who belong to their own party. I concede that the President appointed most of them and, as I have stated before, when appointing them he expressed the hope and urged that they would protect and safeguard the interests of our Nation and that economy would prevail. The President cannot be everywhere and keep a watchful eye on the functioning and expenditures of the Government agencies, and must of necessity rely upon those whom he has appointed. Therefore, when charges are made of extravagance or reckless expenditures, it cannot be justly charged to the President, but to the Republican heads in these important positions. I say those who are attempting to create resentment against the administration by charging unnecessary expenditures and waste will fall short because their criticism will be found to be hitting men in office with Republican affiliation.

Undoubtedly, if the President had not listened to the clamor of the Republican press and the Republican leaders and, instead of appointing Republicans in these important positions, had appointed Democrats, I know there would not have been unjustified criticism against wastefulness. I know that Democrats would have been mindful of their responsibility and carried out the admonitions of the President for the careful expenditure of funds. So henceforth, Mr. Speaker, the charges of reckless expenditures and waste by the bureaucrats will fall where it should properly fall, upon the Republicans.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter which appeared in today's New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF FEBRUARY 15

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in order to ask the majority leader about the program for next week.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. The program for next week, so far as it has been prepared at the present time, is this:

Monday: The Unanimous Consent Calendar will be called. Following the calling of the Consent Calendar the independent offices appropriation bill will come up under general debate.

Tuesday: The Private Calendar will be called, and following that general debate will continue on the independent offices appropriation bill. I do not want to stand committed to the following statement, but I assume that the independent offices appropriation bill will be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule on Wednesday. In any event, the independent offices bill will continue to be the order of business until disposed of.

Thereafter, unless the lend-lease bill is reported out, in which event it will be the next order of business, it is the plan to take up the bill (H. R. 1605) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to farm acreage allotment, the farm marketing of excess wheat, the use of excess corn and silage for feed to livestock on the farm, to provide for an adequate supply of peanuts, and for other purposes, on which a rule has been issued providing 2 hours' general debate. This bill relates to the agricultural situation, particularly with respect to wheat acreage and corn excess, and particularly there is a peanut provision in there in which many Members are interested. In fact, I know the bill more from that angle than from the other.

Following the so-called peanut bill we will take up the Columbia Basin project, on which a rule has been granted.

Then we will take up the bill amending the Civilian Pilot Training Act, on which a rule has been reported providing for 1 hour's debate.

That is the general program for next week.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I may say to the gentleman that the civilian pilot training bill ought to go through by unanimous consent, at least, in a very short time, since we have a rule on it.

Mr. MICHENER. That does not have anything to do with the special committee to study aviation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. That bill has nothing to do with that.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. FISH. I understand there will be a meeting of the Rules Committee tomorrow, at which time there will be a vote on the bill to create a new committee on civilian aviation in the House. If that bill should be reported out tomorrow, would the gentleman from Massachusetts be inclined to call it up next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want any answer of mine to be misconstrued, because I try to bring up for consideration of the House all these things as quickly as I can.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman realizes that there is a good deal of interest in this type of legislation at the present time.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am aware that there is interest in it, but I will not construe the word "interest."

I understand that two of these bills are rather important, and, insofar as I am able to, they will be expedited; but I think the program I have announced will precede any action taken by the Rules Committee, because I am sure the Rules Committee would not want to put me in the position of being rushed or stampeded. If, of course, they felt I was trying to delay things unreasonably, that would be another matter; but I am sure they know I am not.

TO AMEND THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may have until Saturday at 12 o'clock midnight to file a report on the bill (H. R. 1012) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, and for other purposes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that is the bill which the committee has been considering, which amends the Civil Aeronautics Act, is it not?

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is correct.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is it contemplated that the hearings will be completed by that time?

Mr. BULWINKLE. It is contemplated that the hearings will be completed and the bill will be reported out.

Mr. HINSHAW. I have information to the effect that there are a number of gentlemen who have not yet testified but who want to testify before the committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Everyone has testified who has requested that he be heard.

Mr. HINSHAW. I will have to take the gentleman's word for that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is my understanding. Nobody spoke to me about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

There was no objection.

APPEARANCE BEFORE RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there will be a meeting of the Rules Committee on next Tuesday to consider the anti-labor-racketeering bill. I think this has already been announced, but some Members have asked me to make the additional announcement.

If there are Members opposed to that bill who wish to testify, this is notice to them that they will have the opportunity to appear against that measure. The members of the Rules Committee dislike to be put in the same position they were put in when consideration of the Dies resolution was had that Members who could have appeared against that resolution did not take advantage of that opportunity and the Rules Committee was blamed. Therefore at this meeting on Tuesday anyone may appear who wants to be heard and they will have the opportunity, according to the announcement of the chairman of that committee.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the Chamber at the time the vote was taken on the Smith resolution. Had I been present I would have voted "no."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY]?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VOTE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent when the vote was taken on the Smith resolution today. If I had been present I would have voted in the negative.

STORING OF FOOD

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are other special orders, but if there is no objection, the gentleman will be recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I called attention to the fact that before the war in Europe commenced the Government of Switzerland recommended to its people that they store up supplies of food equivalent to a 3-month supply in each household, and that the Swiss Government even made loans to needy families for that purpose.

As far back as March 11, 1942, the Office of Civilian Defense, west coast area, asked the people out there to also store up a supply of food in the event of some emergency. A suggested list of such foods was prepared and distributed by the block wardens. Now the Office of Price Administration comes along and demands that these stocks be reduced under penalty of taking coupons from the rationing books of the people. It is proposed that each person may have only five 8-ounce cans stored, which is not adequate for a defense area such as exists out there, in my humble judgment and in the judgment of the O. C. D. I hope that the Office of Price Administration will modify its order to permit householders in areas that may have to be evacuated to keep on hand emergency stocks of nonperishable foodstuffs. It is essential that these stores be maintained.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks to include an editorial from the Pasadena Post.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to follows:

OFFICE OF CIVILIAN DEFENSE ASKS BOOST IN CANNED GOODS QUOTA ON WEST COAST—JAMES M. LANDIS PLACES MATTER BEFORE OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION FOR IMMEDIATE CONSIDERATION

Hope that some change in the 5-can-per-person allowance of staple goods on hand when rationing goes into effect might be modified for Pasadena and other communities in the Pacific coast combat zone was held last night when it was learned that the Office of Civilian Defense is interceding for a modification. As was pointed out editorially by the Star-News Friday, the regulations as they stand now will penalize those persons who have complied with Office of Civilian Defense and local Civilian Defense Council requests to keep an emergency supply of canned goods on hand. As far back as March 11, 1942, the Los Angeles Defense Council issued a bulletin in which all persons were urged and cautioned to keep an emergency food shelf supplied.

EMERGENCY SUPPLY NEEDED

Ernest E. East, evacuation chairman for the Office of Civilian Defense, southern sector, pointed out that all evacuation plans being prepared under his supervision require that citizens to be affected should have an emergency supply of food on hand to feed their family for several days.

"Nothing should be done to curtail residents of southern California from having a reasonable emergency supply of canned foodstuffs on their shelves," Mr. East said. "It should not be forgotten that we are in a combat zone and these emergency supplies might some day be the means of saving lives and preventing suffering."

Willard W. Keith, Office of Civilian Defense, southern sector director, who has been in communication with high officials on the matter, was informed yesterday by James M. Landis, Office of Civilian Defense National Director, that he had placed the matter before the Deputy Office of Price Administration in charge of rationing with a request for immediate consideration.

HERE'S STATE COUNCIL FOOD RECOMMENDATION

The list of canned and packaged goods suggested last August by the State Defense Council's Emergency Nutrition Committee as an emergency food supply designed to take care of four people for 3 days, follows:

Six cans of meat, 3 packages of cheese, 9 cans of evaporated milk, 5 packages of shredded wheat, one pound of coffee, one-half pound of tea, 12 bouillon cubes, 3 large cans of baked beans, 6 cans mixed vegetables, 2 cans chocolate syrup, 6 cans orange, lemon, and tomato juices, 4 packages of dried fruits, 1 gallon of water.

At that time the defense council committee suggested storing this food away for use only in emergency. This, however, represents about four more cans than allowed under rationing.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time I have for today may be transferred to Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order for 5 minutes tomorrow in which I had expected to pay tribute to President Lincoln. I ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SULLIVAN]?

There was no objection.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, as tomorrow is Lincoln's birthday, and as President Lincoln played a great part in causing the creation of the State of Nevada out of the Territory of Nevada, I desire to render tribute to him at this time.

The political questions growing out of the Civil War caused President Lincoln to term the admission of the Territory of Nevada into the Union as a State a matter of the very greatest importance. His administration had concluded that the Constitution should be amended so that slavery be abolished.

To thus amend the Constitution requires that the proposed amendment be ratified by three-fourths of the States. When that question came to be considered the administration found that the States it could rely upon were one short of the necessary number. The genius of President Lincoln solved the problem. He would create a State out of the Territory of Nevada for that purpose, and rely on the patriotism of its people to ratify the amendment.

In March 1864 the question of allowing Nevada to form a State government came up in the House of Representatives. There was strong opposition to it, but President Lincoln threw his strength into the breach and the measure was carried. It was shortly preceding this vote that President Lincoln made the following statement:

Here is the alternative, that we carry this vote or raise another million and fight no one knows how long.

So, on October 31, 1864, Nevada became a State, and from the mines of the Comstock there were poured forth into the Nation's lap millions of dollars, which enabled the Government to maintain its credit.

Nevada is called the battle-born State, and she well deserves the proud distinction, for in the Civil War, in proportion to her population and wealth, she contributed more to the Federal cause than any other State in the Union. With less than 40,000 inhabitants, she sent 1,200 men to the Army. Without being asked, she voted her proportion of the war debt. She contributed upward of $200,000 to the sanitary fund, which was similar to the Red Cross of today.

In World War No. 1 Nevada led all the States of the Nation in the patriotism shown by her citizens. Nevada is the only State that has the proud distinction of having executed the first draft call without one cent of expense. Nevada was the first State to furnish its quota of volunteers to the Army, and before she was through she furnished 11 times her quota. One out of every 9 men of military age of Nevada was a volunteer. One out of every 4 men of military age was in either the Army or the Navy. Nevada was the first State to subscribe its quota to the first Liberty loan campaign, and before she was through she oversubscribed 92 percent.

Nevada has justified the faith shown in creating her a State.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CAMP, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, February 15, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, in all the agony of this seared and sundered earth we bless Thee that through the blackness breaks the dawn, for our eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord. We thank Thee for prophetic glimpses of a new world, a radiant world in which, under all skies, reverential altars of worship shall be freely reared, none daring to molest nor make afraid—a world where no fetters shall coerce minds or silence speech; a world where the earth's abundance anywhere shall be channeled to human need everywhere. May our glad hearts rejoice that the day of salvation draweth near as against the vilest tyranny of the ages Thou hast loosed the fateful lightning of Thy terrible, swift sword.

In humility and penitence that our own democracy has fallen short of the glory, we are grateful that America has come to the kingdom for such a time as this; not flaunting her strength as a great giant, but as a Good Samaritan bending in helpfulness over a sick and wounded world. Help us to seize the whole of life and build Thy glory there. In the name of the Master of all good workmen, we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 11, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

NOTICE OF HEARING—NOMINATION OF THURMAN W. ARNOLD

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary has received the nomination of Thurman W. Arnold, of Connecticut, to be an associate justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, vice Wiley Blount Rutledge, resigned.

As chairman of the subcommittee appointed to consider this nomination and as required by a rule of the committee, I announce that Tuesday, February 23, 1943, at 10:30 a. m., has been set for a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee room on this nomination. At that time and place all interested parties may appear and give such testimony concerning the fitness and qualifications of this nominee as may be properly received.

INFORMATION CONCERNING NAVAL PERSONNEL

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have before me a letter from Rear Admiral Jacobs which is very brief and which I should like to read for the information of all Senators. The letter is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVAL PERSONNEL,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1943.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Chairman, Naval Affairs Committee,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Please be advised that this Bureau has established as of this date, a Congressional Information Service for the purpose of answering requests by telephone from members of Congress concerning factual information relating to naval personnel.

The telephone number of this service is Republic 7400, Extension 7600. Lt. Paul Whitehead, U. S. N. R., is the officer in charge.

It is suggested that Members of Congress continue to address to the Bureau of Naval Personnel by written correspondence inquiries concerning the policies of the Bureau and requests for information which are not of an urgent nature and, therefore, do not require immediate reply by telephone.

Sincerely yours,

RANDALL JACOBS,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
The Chief of Naval Personnel.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege to make about a 1-minute statement concerning remarks made over the radio by a commentator last night.

Mr. Drew Pearson, in his statement "A prediction of things to come," said that the powerful Truman committee—he was, no doubt, referring to the special committee authorized by the Senate of which I am chairman—would very shortly recommend to the President of the United States that the Secretary of War, Mr. Stimson, the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Patterson, and the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox, should be dismissed from their offices. The committee of which I am chairman has no such thing under consideration, has never had any such thing under consideration, and does not expect to go into the conduct of the war. We very carefully followed the lines laid down by the resolution as authorized by the Senate to investigate contracts and the production program, and we have, under no circumstances, considered appointments in strategic places. That was one of the things that caused difficulty in the Civil War on the part of the Committee on the Conduct of the War. They suggested to the President of the United States that he appoint certain generals, and that committee was responsible for the appointment of General Burnside, General Hooker, and General Meade. They then investigated the conduct of those generals in the field. If we, as a committee, should attempt to tell the President of the United States who ought to be Secretary of War or Secretary of the Navy or who should occupy any of the other executive offices, we would be acting entirely outside the purposes for which the Senate authorized the special committee.

I merely wanted to make it plain that there was absolutely no foundation, in fact, for what Mr. Pearson said last night over the radio.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 7 (4) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Sixth Annual Report of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, covering the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1941, and ending June 30, 1942.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1943.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—TRAVEL BY GOVERNMENT-OWNED AUTOMOBILES (S. DOC. NO. 5)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, relating to the elimination of nonessential traveling by Government-owned automobile, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I request that the report relating to Government-owned automobiles be printed in the body of the RECORD and also printed as a Senate document. I will discuss the report later on in the day.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed as a document and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In accordance with title 6 of the Revenue Act of 1941, Public Law No. 250, Seventy-seventh Congress, an additional report herewith is presented by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

The investigation of the cost of passenger automobiles, both owned and rented by the United States Government, convinced the committee a year ago that very substantial economies could be effected by eliminating all nonessential traveling by automobile.

The committee decided last year, and so reported to Congress, that the traveling expenses of the different agencies of government were exorbitant and should be carefully supervised by the Appropriations Committees, and a substantial reduction required.

The committee now presents to Congress a report on the number of automobiles owned and operated by the various Government agencies, exclusive of those used by the Army and Navy.

Despite the growing automobile crisis, both in tires and gasoline, the investigation of the committee indicates that for the first 4 months of the present fiscal year (July 1 to November 1, 1942) the various agencies of the Government, exclusive of the Army and Navy, continued for the most part to use as many passenger cars, to drive as many miles, and to consume about as much gasoline as did these agencies in a comparable period of the previous year, and this, notwithstanding the efforts of the Government to reduce the consumption of gasoline and to conserve rubber.

The committee believes that the same standard of strictly essential driving should be applicable to Government employees as it now applies to individual citizens. This, the committee is convinced, is not being done, assuming that the latest figures available for the first 4 months of this fiscal year are a criterion for the current fiscal year.

In the last fiscal year the Federal Government owned 17,305 passenger automobiles, exclusive of the Army and Navy, and exclusive of trucks and motorcycles. It now owns and operates 18,953 passenger automobiles, which represents an increase of more than 1,600 cars over the number owned and operated during fiscal year 1942.

In th last fiscal year the cost of operating these passenger automobiles, exclusive of interest and depreciation on the cars, was $4,243,602. The cost of operating these cars for the first 4 months of this fiscal year was $1,308,023, or, on a yearly basis, the cost would be $3,924,069, which is substantially the same.

In the last fiscal year these Government-owned cars traveled 203,550,280 miles. In the first 4 months of this fiscal year they traveled 66,610,310, or 199,830,930 miles on a yearly basis.

The amount of gasoline used by Government-owned cars in the past fiscal year was 13,793,594 gallons. For the first 4 months of this fiscal year the amount was 4,284,511 gallons, or, on a yearly basis, 12,853,533 gallons.

Considering, therefore, the cost, the mileage traveled, and the amount of gasoline consumed for the first 4 months of this fiscal year (according to the latest information available), there has been no appreciable decline in the use of these Government automobiles by peacetime agencies, although the Government itself is compelling the private citizen to reduce the use of automobile travel and ban all nonessential driving.

But these figures by no means tell the entire story of travel by employees on Government business. The various departments allow their employees to use privately owned cars for official business on a reimbursable mileage basis. The figures from all the agencies are not available to the committee, but 5 agencies out of 47 have reported the mileage of these cars for the fiscal year 1942. The extent of the use of privately owned cars as reported by these 5 agencies shows that they traveled 145,606,241 miles at a total cost of $7,261,856.32. Adding this mileage of 145,606,241 to the 203,550,280 miles traveled by the Government-owned cars, and making reasonable allowance for those agencies not reporting, it would appear to be conservative to estimate that in the fiscal year 1942 the various agencies of the Government operated passenger cars to the extent of from 400,000,000 to 500,000,000 miles and used from 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 gallons of gasoline.

The committee desires again to call attention to the great extravagance of the traveling costs of the various agencies of Government, and in more detailed statement which will be made to the Congress later, but at this time the committee regards, as most important, the complete elimination of nonessential operation of motorcars by the Government. In a crisis such as this the Government itself must set an example to the people. It should not ask sacrifices of the people which the employees of the Government do not themselves make. The committee has had presented to it many instances of duplicated travel of these thousands of Government employees who travel in separate cars instead of using the same car. The committee finds this practice especially reprehensible in the Department of Agriculture, which in the fiscal year 1942 traveled 143,206,000 miles in rented cars and 49,856,594 in Government-owned cars. The committee is of the opinion that a large proportion of this travel is unnecessary and should be dispensed with, and for much of the balance the same car can be used by different employees of the Agriculture Department.

It is, of course, true that in certain agencies of the Government, such as the Department of Justice, there is justification for a reasonable increase in the cars operated, due to the enlarged activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In fact, the increase of 551 cars in the past year in the Department of Justice for the most part may be attributed to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. On the other hand, in the judgment of the committee, there is no justification for an increase of nearly 100 cars in the Agriculture Department, which already had 4,359 passenger cars, or an increase of 120 in the Federal Works Agency, as in this latter Agency the activities have been greatly reduced. An increase of 34 in the National Housing Agency, as well as other increases, are noted in the itemized statement which is a part of this report.

The committee further believes that substantial economies can be made in the employment of full-time and part-time chauffeurs. In the last fiscal year there were 403 full-time chauffeurs; now there are 439, an increase of 36. In the last fiscal year there were 695 part-time chauffeurs; now there are 693, a reduction of 2.

In the last fiscal year the salaries of full-time chauffeurs was $555,295 while it is estimated their salaries this year will be $590,000, in addition to these the Government employs many chauffeurs on a part-time basis.

The committee believes the plan which the Office for Emergency Management has adopted to regulate use of the cars assigned to it, is a step in the right direction. They require every person using a car to sign a statement for permanent record that the person is traveling on official business, and to give the destination and reason for the use of the car. Such a plan adopted by the other agencies, combined with a decentralized automobile-pooling arrangement, would do much to reduce the use of Government-owned automobiles and greatly reduce the cost to the Government.

The information gathered by the committee has been very useful to several departments of the Government concerned with this problem. Last year the Bureau of the Budget and the Office of Defense Transportation availed themselves of the information to be used as a basis for their regulations and to effect economies in the use of Government owned and operated cars and trucks.

In a statement to the press on February 7, 1943, Harold D. Smith, Director of the Bureau of the Budget, pointed out that—

"Preliminary surveys conducted by the Bureau and data provided by the Byrd committee indicated approximately 100,000 tires will be pooled as a result of the order, which means that until now Government cars have had an average of 6½ tires each. This is an 'unwarranted situation.'"

RECOMMENDATIONS

The committee recommends:

1. That the Appropriations Committees carefully survey the need for the existing passenger cars of each of the agencies of Government and adjust accordingly the operation for the necessary cars.

2. That all Government officials and employees give complete endorsement to the Office of Price Administration's mileage-conservation program as it relates to automobiles used in the public service.

3. That there should be established immediately in Washington for the duration of the war a passenger-automobile pooling arrangement to transport Government employees engaged in official business when no other transportation is available within the metropolitan area of Washington. Each agency shall certify the names of those persons entitled to use official cars on official business, and at no other time, by no other person, and in no other way shall they be used.

4. That any Government official or employee who uses or authorizes the use of any Government-owned or leased vehicle other than for official purposes shall be summarily removed from office, and may, also, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

5. That every Government automobile have displayed in a conspicuous place a sign such as the following: "Owned and operated by the United States Government —— agency."

The following is a list of passenger automobiles as reported by the various agencies. This list does not include the cars that are rented by the various agencies, neither does it include trucks, pick-up trucks, or motorcycles, and is exclusive, also, of all passenger automobiles and trucks owned and operated by the Army and Navy.

A letter dated February 11, 1943, from the Chairman of the War Production Board, submitting, pursuant to law, a report on the activities of the Smaller War Plants Division and Smaller War Plants Corporation during the last 60 days, and making certain comment on the Smaller War Plants Corporation, the Smaller War Plants Division and related activities (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

October 1942 Report of Reconstruction Finance Corporation

A letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a confidential report of the Corporation for the month of October 1942, containing statement of loan and other authorizations made during the month (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, memoralizing Congress not to increase the Federal gasoline tax and to discontinue the same as soon as possible and to refuse to reenact such tax; to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when presented by Mr. BUSHFIELD on the 11th instant, p. 819, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Finance:

"Whereas title I, section 2 (a), clause (7), reads as follows: 'Effective July 1, 1941, provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of an individual claiming old-age assistance'; and

"Whereas title IV, section 402 (a), clause (7), reads as follows: 'Provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of any child claiming aid to dependent children'; and

"Whereas title X, section 1002 (a), clause (8), reads as follows: 'Provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of an individual claiming aid to the blind'; and

"Whereas these provisions restrict the States from allowing recipients of relief in these categories from accepting intermittent employment without impairment of their grant; and

"Whereas deduction of all such earnings from grants reduces the willingness of recipients to accept such employment; and

"Whereas, due to the shortage of manpower in all lines of industry during the war emergency, it is necessary that all manpower be made available to the United States Government to successfully prosecute the war effort; and

"Whereas it is imperative that all people be employed wherever they can make a contribution to the war effort: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to amend titles I, IV, and X, section 2 (a), clause (7), section 402 (a), clause (7), and section 1002 (a), clause (8), to allow for intermittent employment without impairment to the grants of recipients; be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of the memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate and Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to United States Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Edward V. Robertson, Congressman Frank A. Barrett, and to the Honorable Arthur J. Altmeyer, Chairman of the Social Security Board."

A memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"To the President; the Secretary of State; Secretary of the Department of Agriculture and its associated agencies engaged in selecting labor in foreign countries for importation into the United States of America; War Manpower Commission; to the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs; United States Employment Service; Board of Economic Warfare; and the Congress of the United States:

"Your memorialist respectfully represents:

"The strongest pillar of the moral structure upon which stands the determination of free peoples to carry the present World War to a victorious conclusion is faith that out of the smoke and grime of battle will emerge a formula for the outlawing of war for many generations to come.

"There is unanimous agreement among students that this faith may be justified only through a closer bond of unity between nations, and that such unity may be secured only through a more accurate and more sympathetic mutual understanding of the problems, customs, ways of thought, aspirations, and ideals of the peoples of the world.

"A highly important if not an essential step toward the creation of such an understanding is a thorough knowledge on the part of official national diplomatic representatives of the language and customs of the country and the people to which they are accredited.

"Wherefore, your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, respectfully prays:

"1. That all diplomatic representatives and members of diplomatic or consular staffs, in the service of the United States, accredited to or employed in any foreign nation or country, be required to have a speaking knowledge of the language of the country to which sent, and in all possible cases, familiarity with its national customs and habits."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"To the President and Congress of the United States:

"Your memorialists respectfully represent:

"Upon the shoulders of American boys, 18 years of age or over, has been placed the responsibility of forming a part of the armed forces engaged in the present titanic struggle for world liberty. They are proud to accept this responsibility, and their parents and loved ones are proud to share it with them.

"Apart from the physical aspects of the sacrifice our younger men are thus called upon to make, is the matter of their education. It is a serious and a momentous thing, to them and to their country, to interrupt, perhaps to prevent, their academic and professional training. This, of course, was well understood when the policy was considered of including teen-age men in the draft, and was waived only from necessity.

"However, it now appears that it is the purpose of The War Relocation Authority of the United States to accord eligibility to some 2,500 young Japanese-American students, located in war relocation centers, to leave such centers and enter any of a large number of colleges and universities—in other words, to accord the privileges of higher education to a group of young people, citizens by virtue of their birth in this country, whose loyalty and patriotism are rendered doubtful because of their racial extraction, thereby unfitting them to be soldiers, while denying a similar opportunity to our own young men of unquestioned loyalty.

"That these Japanese-American young men will pay their own way is no justification for such discrimination. Our young men also pay their way, and it is to the credit of American courage and determination that many of them pay their way under the most difficult circumstances.

"It is admitted that practically all of the Japanese-Americans to whom higher education is to be afforded are physically fit and capable of performing services which would be useful to the war effort, where their patriotism might be demonstrated without placing them in a position where possible disloyalty might be perilous.

"Wherefore your memorialists, the Sixteenth State Legislature of the State of Arizona, urgently request:

"1. That steps be taken, through executive intervention or order, or by means of legislation if necessary, to prevent according to Japanese-American youths the privilege of leaving concentration centers and securing an education in American colleges and universities while the same privilege is denied to loyal American young men called to military service.

"2. That no discrimination be shown in the matter of educational advantages, between America's young citizens, of whatever race or nationality—in short, while young men of undoubted loyalty and Caucasian extraction are required to serve in the armed forces, that these young men of Japanese ancestry and less certain loyalty be given opportunity to serve the war effort in ways in which their racial extraction will prove no impediment.

"3. That if any Japanese-American youths have already been given the privilege of attending colleges and universities, they be returned to their relocation camps."

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition, numerously signed, of members of the First Methodist Church, of Clay Center, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit liquor sales in the vicinity of military camps and naval establishments; ordered to lie on the table.

COMPUTATION OF PARITY—RESOLUTION OF GEORGIA HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. GEORGE. I present and ask to have referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Georgia Legislature urging the passage of the Pace parity bill, to incude all costs in the computation of parity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD, under the rule, and referred as requested by the Senator from Georgia.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas there has come to the attention of the House of Representatives of Georgia that there is now pending in the National Congress certain legislation intended to include the cost of farm labor in figuring parity on agricultural commodities; and

Whereas the certain legislation is known as the Pace parity bill; and

Whereas the cost of farm labor has increased 100 percent within the past 12 months; and

Whereas with the cost of farm labor increasing as it has, unless adequate legislation is passed immediately, it will be utterly impossible for the farmers of the Nation to compete with industry in the payment of labor, and the food program will thereby be hindered immensely; and

Whereas as a part of the war effort it is necessary that the food program be carried out: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Georgia House of Representatives, That the National Congress be memorialized, and that the Georgia delegation in Congress and in the Senate in particular be memorialized, that the passage of the Pace parity bill is urgent, is imperative, and is necessary; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted immediately to the Clerk of the National Congress and the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, there to be read and presented to the Congress in session, and that a copy of this resolution be sent by the clerk of this house to each Member of Congress from Georgia and to the Senators from Georgia, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to His Excellency, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States.

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.)

AUTHORITY OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY—RESOLUTION OF KANSAS VETERINARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted by the Kansas Veterinary Medical Association regarding the division of the authority of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Kansas Veterinary Medical Association has always cooperated with the officials of the State in the protection of livestock against infectious and contagious diseases; and

Whereas we are mindful of the correlation of the Meat Inspection Division with the field inspection of the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry in giving to this country a most effective system of livestock disease control; and

Whereas we believe that taking the Meat Inspection Division from the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry and placing it within the Food Distribution Division will greatly reduce the efficiency of animal-disease control of this State and Nation, thereby making it more difficult to raise livestock and subsequently greatly reducing food supply, which is so vitally needed during this emergency. Moreover, we believe that with the Division of Meat Inspection within the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry, the effective control of infectious and contagious diseases of animals has been an important public-health factor through the suppression of those animal diseases which are transmissible to man: Therefore be it

Resolved, That for the best interest of the entire country the Federal Bureau of Animal Industry be restored to its original authority and remain as an intact working organization with all its forces under the unified direction of a veterinarian as chief.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Education and Labor:

S. 180. A bill to provide vocational rehabilitation education, training, and other services to persons disabled while members of the armed forces, or disabled in war industries or otherwise, and to render such persons fit for service in war industries, agriculture, or other useful civilian industry, and for other purposes; with an amendment in the nature of a substitute (Rept. No. 53); and

S. Res. 98. Resolution continuing the authority for the investigation of the violation of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively; without amendment, and, under the rule, the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

By Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. 707. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Attorney General; without amendment (Rept. No. 54).

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 725. A bill to provide for the punishment of persons conspiring to violate the laws relating to counterfeiting, and certain other laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. O'DANIEL introduced Senate bills 726, 727, and 728, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. HILL:

S. J. Res. 31. Joint resolution providing for awards of honor for agricultural production; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LANGER:

S. J. Res. 32. Joint resolution suspending certain provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENT OF PRICE CONTROL ACT—WAGE RATES

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the price and wage stabilization law enacted by Congress last October, by writing into the law the letter "(a)" after "SEC. 4"; and by adding at the end of section 4 thereof the following new subsection:

(b) Except as hereinafter provided, no employer shall increase the salary or the straight-time hourly wage rate of any of his employees unless such increase has been approved by the President or such agency as he may designate to administer this subsection. No increase in salaries or in straight-time hourly wage rates above those being paid by the employer for the same work on September 15, 1942, shall be so approved unless such increase (1) does not raise such salaries or straight-time hourly wage rates more than 15 percent above the average salaries or straight-time hourly wage rates for the same work prevailing in the affected industry on January 1, 1941, or (2) is found by the President or such designated agency to be necessary to correct gross inequities. This subsection shall not apply in the case of (1) any salary increase which does not increase the salary of the affected employee to an amount in excess of $5,000 per annum, (2) wage increases which do not increase straight-time hourly wage rates of affected employees to an amount in excess of 60 cents per hour, (3) wage increases which affect fewer than 25 employees of a particular employer, or (4) any salary or wage increase which compensates the affected employee for added responsibility or added work resulting from a promotion. The President or such designated agency shall define the conditions under which such approval shall be required in the case of salaries or wages paid to new employees by an employer.

The bill (S. 713) restricting certain increases in wage rates to aid in carrying out the Stabilization Act of October 2, 1942 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL WAR SERVICE—AMENDMENT

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I submit an amendment which I intend to propose to Senate bill 666, to provide further for the successful prosecution of the war through a system of civilian selective war service with the aid of the Selective Service System, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD at this point, and printed for the use of the committee to which the bill was referred, and of the Senate.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed, to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

On page 8, line 24, to insert the following:

"Provided further, That every person assigned to service under this act, including every accepted volunteer, shall have the right to join any union or organization of employees, but no such person shall be obliged to join any such union or organization if he or she should not freely choose to do so."

POST-WAR ECONOMIC POLICY AND PLANNING

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask that the clerk read the first section, and that thereafter the resolution be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolution to create a special committee on post-war economic policy and planning

Resolved, That there is hereby established—

SECTION 1. (a) A special committee to be known as the Committee on Post-War

Economic Policy and Planning (hereinafter referred to as the special committee).

(b) The special committee shall be composed of 10 Members of the Senate, 6 from the majority and 4 from the minority, appointed by the President of the Senate.

(c) It shall be the duty of the special committee to investigate all matters relating to post-war economic policy and problems; to gather information, plans, and suggestions from informed sources with respect to such problems; to study the plans and suggestions received; to report to the Congress from time to time the results of findings made and conclusions reached. It is the sense and purpose of this resolution to make accessible to the Congress, through the special committee, the most complete information respecting post-war economic policy and post-war problems that is available, to the end that Congress may be advised respecting those problems and in a position to formulate solutions with respect to them which will result in the greatest contribution by the Congress to achievement of a stable economy and a just peace. It is intended that full authority to accomplish this general purpose shall be granted by this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The resolution (S. Res. 102) was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby established—

(a) A special committee to be known as the Committee on Post-War Economic Policy and Planning (hereinafter referred to as the special committee).

(b) The special committee shall be composed of 10 Members of the Senate, 6 from the majority and 4 from the minority, appointed by the President of the Senate.

(c) It shall be the duty of the special committee to investigate all matters relating to post-war economic policy and problems; to gather information, plans, and suggestions from informed sources with respect to such problems; to study the plans and suggestions received; to report to the Congress from time to time the results of findings made and conclusions reached. It is the sense and purpose of this resolution to make accessible to the Congress, through the special committee, the most complete information respecting post-war economic policy and post-war problems that is available, to the end that Congress may be advised respecting those problems and in a position to formulate solutions with respect to them which will result in the greatest contribution by the Congress to achievement of a stable economy and a just peace. It is intended that full authority to accomplish this general purpose shall be granted by this resolution.

HEARINGS; SUBPENAS; DISBURSEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 2. The special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the committee shall be disbursed by the chairman.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES; APPOINTMENT AND COMPENSATION

SEC. 3. The special committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under sections 661–663, 664–673, and 674 of title 5 of the United States Code for comparable duties. Officers and employees of the Government shall be detailed to the service of the special committee on its request, without additional compensation, and such officers and employees shall be paid from the appropriations regularly available for their salaries.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in connection with the resolution I present a brief statement, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The purpose of this resolution is to provide for systematic study of economic policy in the period of post-war readjustments by the Senate as a branch of the Congress. The committee system, excellent as it is, makes it difficult to deal systematically and comprehensively with the economic problems of the post-war readjustment period. It is hoped that a special committee, though lacking in legislative power, will be of service to the standing committees and to the Senate in the shaping and solution of post-war economic policy and plans.

Post-war economic policies and plans may be elsewhere developed. Finally the responsibility rests with the Congress. This resolution recognizes the responsibility of the Congress to the people of the United States for our post-war economic policy. In order that the Senate as a coordinating branch of the Congress may be able to function with the whole economic picture before it, the resolution is offered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] be assigned to service on the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. McNARY. I do not believe I have any objection to the request, but I wish to inquire whether this completes the allotment based upon our understanding?

Mr. BARKLEY. It does. The steering committee authorized me to fill these two places on this committee.

Mr. McNARY. There has been no enlargement of the committee?

Mr. BARKLEY. There has been no enlargement, except that to which we agreed.

Mr. McNARY. That is, based on the ratio of 3 to 2, or 1½ to 1?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] be assigned to service on the Committee on Education and Labor.

PAYMENT OF FARM-SECURITY LOAN

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article headed "Kreller Pays Up Farm Security Administration Loan—A Success Story," published in the Washburn (N. Dak.) Leader of February 11, 1943.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KRELLER PAYS UP FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION LOAN—A SUCCESS STORY

It was about 2 years ago now that Joseph Kreller, of Underwood, quit his job on Work Projects Administration there and secured a standard rehabilitation loan from the Farm Security Administration. This past fall Mr. Kreller retired his indebtedness to the Farm Security Administration in full.

When the Farm Security Administration made their initial advance to Mr. and Mrs. Kreller they had $1 in cash, 62 chickens, $72 worth of feed, an old automobile, and household goods. Today they have 15 head of cattle; of this number they are at present milking 6, the cream checks amounting to about $50 per month. In another month they will be milking 8 cows. They have 4 horses and 70 chickens.

They have five sows which are to farrow this spring. Incidentally Joe has a self-feeder made out of a barrel, a wheel, on a platform in his hog lot. Joe feels that it is little things like this that count and "the big things often take care of themselves." Right along the same line he rather boastfully states that he has only lost two calves since the secured his Farm Security Administration loan, and he states frankly that these losses were his fault. He feels that death losses in the case of calves is brought about by poor feeding, irregular feeding, and cold milk.

The Krellers started operating on a one-half-section farm three and a half miles north of Underwood. They secured a 5-year lease with an option to purchase this farm from the Federal Land Bank. It is their plan to execute this option just as soon as they feel they are financially able to, as they consider the farm their permanent home. In the spring of 1941 they set out 2,000 trees, and in the spring of 1942 another 500.

Each year they have attempted to have a good garden and can and store a lot of foodstuffs in line with the Farm Security Administration's policy in this respect. This past year the canning suffered from too much shocking activity, according to Mrs. Kreller. She was, however, able to can 80 quarts of rhubarb, 100 quarts of fruit, 30 quarts of corn, 13 quarts of beans, 2 bushels of carrots, 17 quarts of peas. Incidentally they also had some frost and hail in their garden during the season.

When queried about his plans for the future, Joe stated that he did not know of any in particular with the exception of purchasing the farm and making the farm turn out all the food and fiber possible to facilitate the prosecution of the war. He said that his cows were doing right well by the war effort at this time; that he felt his five sows would come through in good shape and that he was adding 25 acres of flax to his crop program this year.

According to Henry P. Sullivan, rural-rehabilitation supervisor, this story is not unusual, but is typical of how some of the borrowers of the Farm Security Administration have responded under their rehabilitation program. While the Farm Security Administration was set up as a rehabilitation agency, since Pearl Harbor food production has been its main goal with rehabilitation a byproduct of the process.

There have been 97 standard loans paid in full in McLean County since the inception of the program, states Mr. Sullivan.

JEFFERSON'S CREED

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, in the New York Times magazine of Sunday last, I find a very interesting dissertation upon Jefferson's creed. America's two immortal emancipators, Lincoln and Jefferson, are associated, along with their other great outstanding events, by the proximity of their birthdays. We have just paid tribute to the great Lincoln. His statement "that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth" is universally recognized as one of the greatest utterances of man.

On April 13 we shall celebrate the two-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, who wrote and expounded the unperishable principles of democracy. Lincoln, in unlocking the shackles of slavery, carried out the thoughts enunciated in Jefferson's creed of democracy.

The principles upon which we base our participation in this global war are the Jeffersonian principles of freedom of man. I ask, Mr. President, that the quotations from Jefferson's writings be incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the quotations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times magazine of February 14, 1943]

JEFFERSON'S CREED: A CREED FOR TODAY

FREEDOM AND SACRIFICE

We have counted the cost of this contest and find nothing so dreadful as voluntary slavery. Honor, justice, and humanity forbid us tamely to surrender that freedom which we received from our gallant ancestors and which our innocent posterity have a right to receive from us. We cannot endure the infamy and guilt of resigning succeeding generations to that wretchedness which inevitably awaits them if we basely entail hereditary bondage upon them.

Our cause is just. Our union is perfect. Our internal resources are great, and, if necessary, foreign assistance is undoubtedly attainable. * * * We most solemnly, before God and the world, declare that, exerting the utmost energy of those powers which our beneficient Creator hath graciously bestowed upon us, the arms we have been compelled by our enemies to assume we will, in defiance of every hazard, with unabating firmness and perseverance, employ for the preservation of our liberties; being with one mind resolved to die freemen rather than to live slaves. (Declaration of the Causes of Taking Up Arms, July 6, 1775.)

RIGHT OF SELF-GOVERNMENT

What has destroyed liberty and the rights of man in every government which has ever existed under the sun? The generalizing and concentrating all cares and powers into one body, no matter whether of the autocrats of Russia or France, or of the aristocrats of a Venetian senate. And I do believe that, if the Almighty has not decreed that man shall never be free—and it is a blasphemy to believe it—the secret will be found in the making himself the depository of the powers respecting himself, so far as he is competent to them, and delegating only what is beyond his competence by a synthetical process, to higher and higher orders of functionaries, so as to trust fewer and fewer powers in proportion as the trustees become more oligarchical. * * * Where every man is a sharer in the direction of his ward-republic, or of some of the higher ones, and feels that he is a participator in the government of affairs, not merely at an election one day in the year, but every day, when there shall be not a man in the state who will not be a member of some one of its councils, great or small, he will let his heart be torn out of his body sooner than his power be wrested from him by a Caesar or a Bonaparte. (To Joseph C. Cabell, February 2, 1816.)

FIRST PRINCIPLES

The diffusion of information and the arraignment of all abuses at the bar of public reason; freedom of religion; freedom of the press; freedom of person under the protection of the habeas corpus; and trial by juries impartially selected—these principles form the bright constellation which has gone before us and guided our steps through an age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment. (The First Inaugural Address.)

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Well aware that the opinions and belief of men depend not on their own will, but follow involuntarily the evidence proposed to their minds; that Almighty God hath created the mind free, and manifested His supreme will that free it shall remain by making it altogether insusceptible of restraint; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishments, or burdens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plan of the holy author of our religion.

We the General Assembly of Virginia do enact that no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burdened in his body or goods, or shall otherwise suffer, on account of his religious opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities. (Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom.)

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

Reason and free inquiry are the only effectual agents against error. Give a loose to them, they will support the true religion by bringing every false one to their tribunal, to the test of their investigation. They are the natural enemies of error, and of error only. * * * The Newtonian principle of gravitation is now more firmly established, on the basis of reason, than it would be were the Government to step in, and to make it an article of necessary faith. Reason and experiment have been indulged and error has fled before them. It is error alone which needs the support of Government. Truth can stand by itself. Subject opinion to coercion: whom will you make your inquisitors? Fallible men; men governed by bad passions, by private as well as public reasons. And why subject it to coercion? To produce uniformity. But is uniformity of opinion desirable? No more than of face and stature. (Notes on Virginia.)

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

I am for * * * freedom of the press and against all violations of the Constitution to silence by force, and not by reason, the complaints or criticisms, just or unjust, of our citizens against the conduct of their agents. And I am for encouraging the progress of science in all its branches and not for raising a hue and cry against the sacred name of philosophy. (To Elbridge Gerry, January 26, 1799.)

THE JUDICIARY

The dignity and stability of government in all its branches, the morals of the people, and every blessing of society, depend so much upon an upright and skillful administration of justice, that the judicial power ought to be distinct from both the legislature and executive, that so it may be a check upon both, as both should be checks upon that. The judges, therefore, should always be men of learning and experience in the laws, of exemplary morals, great patience, calmness, and attention; their minds should not be distracted with jarring interests; they should not be dependent upon any man or body of men. (To George Wythe, July, 1776.)

EDUCATION

I think by far the most important bill in our whole code is that for the diffusion of knowledge among the people. No other sure foundation can be devised, for the preservation of freedom and happiness. * * * Preach, my dear sir, a crusade against ignorance; establish and improve the law for educating the common people. Let our countrymen know that the people alone can protect us against these evils, and that the tax which will be paid for the purpose is not more than the thousandth part of what will be paid to kings, priests, and nobles who will rise up among us if we leave the people in ignorance. (To George Wythe, August 13, 1786.)

PILLARS OF PROSPERITY

Agriculture, manufactures, commerce, and navigation, the four pillars of our prosperity, are the most thriving when left free to individual enterprise. Protection from casual embarrassments, however, may sometimes be seasonably interposed. (First annual message to Congress, December 8, 1801.)

ESSENCE OF A REPUBLIC

I believe with you that morality, compassion, generosity are innnate elements of the human constitution, that there exists a right independent of force, that a right to property is founded on our natural wants, in the means with which we are endowed to satisfy these wants, and the right to do what we acquire by those means without violating the similar rights of other sensible beings, that no one has a right to obstruct another, exercising his faculties innocently for the relief of sensibilities made a part of his nature; that justice is the fundamental law of society, that the majority oppressing an individual is guilty of a crime, abuses its strength, and by acting on the law of the strongest breaks up the foundations of society, that action by the citizens in person, in affairs within their reach and competence, and in all others by representatives, chosen immediately and removable by themselves, constitutes the essence of a republic. (To P. S. du Pont de Nemours, April 24, 1816.)

BLESSINGS OF AMERICA

I sincerely wish you may find it convenient to come here; the pleasure of the trip will be less than you expect, but the utility greater. It will make you adore your country, its soil, its climate, its equality, liberty, laws, people, and manners. My God! how little my countrymen know what precious blessings they are in possession of, and which no other people on earth enjoy. * * * Come, then, and see the proof of this, and on your return, add your testimony to that of every thinking American, in order to satisfy our countrymen how much it is their interest to preserve, unaffected by contagion, those peculiarities of their governments and manner to which they are indebted for those blessings. (To James Monroe, from Paris, January 17, 1785.)

SOURCE OF THE DECLARATION

Neither aiming at originality of principle or sentiment, nor yet copied from any particular and previous writing, it was intended to be an expression of the American mind and to give to that expression the proper tone and spirit called for by the occasion. All its authority rests, then, on the harmonizing sentiments of the day, whether expressed in conversation, in letters, printed essays or in the elementary books of public right, as Aristotle, Cicero, Locke, Sidney, etc. (To Henry Lee, May 1825.)

THE BILL OF RIGHTS

I have a right to nothing which another has a right to take away. And Congress will have a right to take away trial by jury in all civil cases. Let me add that a bill of rights is what the people are entitled to against every government on earth, general or particular, and what no just government should refuse or rest on inference. (To James Madison, December 20, 1787.)

THE RIGHTS OF MAN

May it [the Declaration of Independence] be to the world what I believe it will be (to some parts sooner, to others later, but finally to all): The signal of arousing men to burst the chains under which monkish ignorance and superstition have persuaded them to bind themselves and assume the blessings and security of self-government. That form which we have substituted, restores the free right to the unbounded exercise of reason and freedom of opinion. All eyes are opened or opening to the rights of man. The general spread of the light of science has already laid open to every view the palpable truth that the mass of mankind has not been born with saddles on their backs, nor a favored few booted and spurred ready to ride them legitimately by the grace of God. These are grounds of hope for others. (To Roger C. Weightman, June 24, 1826, 10 days before Jefferson's death, on the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration.)

TRUST IN THE PEOPLE

Every government degenerates when trusted to the rulers of the people alone. The people themselves therefore are its only safe depositories. And to render them safe, their minds must be improved to a certain degree. This indeed is not all that is necessary, though it be essentially necessary. An amendment of our Constitution must here come in aid of public education. The influence over government must be shared by all the people. If every individual which composes their mass participates of the ultimate authority, the Government will be safe; because the corrupting the whole mass will exceed any private resources of wealth; and public ones cannot be provided but by levies of the people. (To the Abbé Arnoud, July 19, 1789.)

MAN'S VAST FUTURE

I am 81 years of age, born where I now live, in the first range of mountains in the interior of our country. And I have observed this march of civilization advancing from the seacoast, passing over us like a cloud of light, increasing our knowledge and improving our condition, in so much that we are at this time more advanced in civilization here than the seaports were when I was a boy. And where this progress will stop no one can say. Barbarism has, in the meantime, been receding before the steady step of amelioration, and will in time, I trust, disappear from the earth. (To William Ludlow, September 6, 1824.)

THE MANPOWER SHORTAGE ON THE FARM

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter addressed to me by L. W. Hamm, on the subject of the manpower shortage on the farm.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PIERCE CO.,
Fargo, N. Dak., February 10, 1943.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,

DEAR SENATOR: Possibly you have heard that there is a manpower shortage. It is not only affecting farmers but some of the rest of us as well.

It so happens that within the past week two letters have come to my attention which have some bearing on this shortage and I thought that you might be interested.

The first letter came from a young man who is a graduate chemist. He is working for a large eastern corporation and took a position with them to help out with the war work. He states that the job would be O. K. if it were not for the fact that they have 100 men in a laboratory that could be operated by 6 men. As a result he has nothing to do.

The second letter was written by a man in California. He is a man of some means and not compelled to work for a living. He took a job in an airplane factory in southern California because he thought his help was needed. After hanging around for weeks he grew tired of asking for something to do and quit the job.

I am sure that these are not isolated cases but why doesn't somebody build a fire under some of these corporations and make them let our men alone until they are really needed?

We are losing men right along and cannot replace them. We are willing to lose them and do the best we can without them if they are to go into the armed services or into necessary war work. We are not willing, however, to let them go when they go to a large corporation which uses them to swell the pay roll in order to get more of our tax money on a cost-plus basis contract.

* * * * *

Yours very truly,

L. W. HAMM.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT AT WHITE HOUSE CORRESPONDENTS' ASSOCIATION DINNER

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the address delivered by the President of the United States on Friday evening, February 12, 1943, at the annual dinner of the White House Correspondents' Association, which appears in the Appendix.]

MAXIMUM PRICES ON PORK AND BEEF PRODUCTS AND BREAD AND BAKERY PRODUCTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The resolution (S. Res. 94) submitted by Mr. REED on the 8th instant is as follows:

Whereas the provisions of the act entitled "An act to aid in stabilizing the cost of living," approved October 2, 1942, expressly provide (1) that "no maximum price shall be established or maintained under authority of this act or otherwise for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor" equal to the parity price for such agricultural commodity, (2) that no maximum price shall be maintained for any such processed or manufactured commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of the agricultural commodity the highest price received by them between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, with certain qualifications: Provided, That the President may correct gross inequities in this respect, but that in no event shall a maximum price be established for such a processed or manufactured commodity which will not reflect parity to the producers of the agricultural commodity, and (3) that "in the fixing of maximum prices on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing"; and

Whereas the act known as the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, approved January 30, 1942, as amended October 2, 1942, expressly provides that the price-fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except to prevent circumstances or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act"; and

Whereas the foregoing provisions have not been suspended or modified by any law or lawful action; and

Whereas on October 22, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued Maximum Price Regulation No. 148, Revised, now in effect as amended November 2, 1942, fixing maximum prices for pork products and using as a live-hog base approximately $13.60 per 100 pounds at Chicago, although the price of live hogs at Chicago since the promulgation of said revised regulation for a substantial period of time has been in excess of $15 per 100 pounds, causing a loss to the processors in violation of the provision of the act approved October 2, 1942, that processors shall be allowed a general fair and equitable margin; and

Whereas said Maximum Price Regulation No. 148, Revised, as amended, is in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, because the base of live animal prices used was lower than the highest price received by producers between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942, and because there has been no action by the President to permit such a lower base on the ground of any gross inequity; and

Whereas on December 10, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued Maximum Price Regulation No. 169, now in effect as amended December 19, 1942, and January 2, 1943, fixing maximum prices for beef products on a basis which fails to yield to the processors generally fair and equitable margins; and

Whereas on April 28, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued the general maximum price regulation establishing as maximum prices for bread and other bakery products, together with other commodities, the highest price charged by each seller during March 1942 for each such commodity, and said maximum prices for bread and other bakery products have since been maintained at the same levels; and

Whereas said maximum prices for bread and other bakery products were and are in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, because said products are processed and manufactured in whole from wheat and other agricultural commodities and because said maximum prices did not and do not reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodities either parity or the highest prices received by producers for them between January 1, 1942, and September 15, 1942; and

Whereas, contrary to the statement of the Office of Price Administration at the time of issuing the general maximum price regulation that "every producer whose prices are stabilized is assured that his costs, which are based upon the stabilized prices of others, will not rise," the Office of Price Administration did not at that time place any maximum price or control, with minor exceptions, upon any of the costs of manufacturers of bread and other bakery products, and it was not until October 1942 that ceilings were placed upon flour, eggs, dry, evaporated, and condensed milk, certain other ingredients used in such products, and wages, by which time such costs had undergone a substantial increase, amounting to an average increase of one-half cent per pound in the case of bread; and

Whereas the costs of producing bread and other bakery products have continued to increase substantially since October 1942, as a result in part of increases in maximum prices for flour allowed by Maximum Price Regulation No. 296 issued by the Office of Price Administration on January 2, 1943, although no increase in the maximum prices for bread and other bakery products has been allowed; and

Whereas producers of bread and other bakery products, particularly smaller producers, are therefore being denied a generally fair and equitable margin in violation of the act approved October 2, 1942, and large numbers of such producers, in fact, are operating at a loss; and

Whereas the Office of Price Administration, in violation of the provision in the act approved January 30, 1942, that the price-fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry," has used such powers to compel such changes in the bread and other bakery products industry (as evidenced by its announcement upon the issuance of Maximum Price Regulation No. 296 that "this increase in flour prices should not necessitate an increase in the present retail bread prices because the higher flour costs, it is estimated, will be completely offset by simultaneously introduced savings in the manufacture, packaging, and distribution costs of bakers"), affected by food distribution order No. 1, issued by the Secretary of Agriculture under direction of the Director of Economic Stabilization after recommendation by the Office of Price Administration, limiting varieties of bread and rolls, prohibiting slicing of bread, limiting the amounts of milk, shortening, and sugar in white bread, prohibiting certain methods of distribution and otherwise changing the practices of the industry for the purpose of maintaining present maximum prices for bread; and

Whereas said Food Distribution Order No. 1, even could it be lawfully resorted to by the Office of Price Administration for the purpose of maintaining present maximum prices for bread, has not resulted in savings which allow producers of bread a generally fair and equitable margin as required by law; and

Whereas the meat processing and bread and other bakery products industries are essential war industries and their continued operation and the foods they supply are essential to the national welfare and the successful prosecution of the war; and

Whereas the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration are threatening extinction of these industries or their concentration in the hands of a few large operators able to withstand the price squeeze imposed, by reason of large financial resources; and

Whereas the action of the Office of Price Administration in maintaining maximum prices for pork and beef products and for bread and other bakery products at present levels in violation of the foregoing provisions of law is defeating the intent of the Congress that producers of agricultural commodities shall receive fair and reasonable prices, due to the inability of processors to pay such prices: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or through a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman, is hereby authorized and directed—

(1) to investigate and study the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration, the Office of Economic Stabilization, and any other governmental agency, their officials, employees, agents, and representatives, in respect to the establishment and maintenance of maximum prices for pork and beef products and for bread and other bakery products; and

(2) to report its findings and to recommend further legislation or action by the Congress or the Senate, if any, needed to insure compliance by any or all such agencies, officials, employees, agents, and representatives with the provisions of the aforementioned act approved January 30, 1942, as amended, and the act approved October 2, 1942.

For the purpose of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-eighth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, as it deems advisable.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas, and also the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], to allow the resolution to go over without prejudice. I should very much like to have it go over until a later session of the Senate, which would deprive no one of any right, since it is not very convenient for me to discuss it today because of other matters which are to come up, especially the call of the calendar. If we get into a discussion of the resolution, it will probably take some time, and I should very much appreciate if it could go over.

Mr. REED. I always like to accommodate my colleagues, especially the Senator from Kentucky. I am reluctant, however, to agree to his suggestion for a further delay of the resolution. Last Thursday, when it was in order for it to be brought up, I was very glad to yield to the requests of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and other Senators, who desired to present specific matters.

One of the reasons for my reluctance to agree to further delay is that I should like to read a telegram which is typical of the attitude of the smaller packers and the smaller bakers in this country under the order of the O. P. A. I have before me a telegram from Kansas City, dated February 11, addressed to me, in which it is stated:

KANSAS CITY, MO., February 11, 1943.
Senator REED, of Kansas,

DEAR SENATOR: I have just finished reading with considerable interest Senate Resolution 94 that you have presented to the Seventy-eighth Congress for consideration.

You may be sure that we appreciate your interest in the situation and from the thorough manner in which you are investigating the unfair margins under which the packer is now forced to operate I am sure you have a thorough knowledge of our problem.

We have just received under date of February 9 a mandatory order from the field headquarters office of quartermaster general in Chicago, Ill., for 250,000 pounds of fresh chilled carcass beef to be delivered at Office of Price Administration ceilings in carload lots between February 15 and February 20. To fill this order would cost this firm in excess of $7,500 for the 5 days' operation.

We are already operating on a weekly loss from $2,000 to $3,000, but the additional loss that would be imposed by the acceptance of this order would be unbearable.

Government business as price order No. 169 now defines it, is less profitable in the commodity of carcass beef than domestic business because we are forced to sell carload lots to the Government at 75 cents per hundredweight less than we are permitted to sell the domestic trade in less-than-carload lots.

In addition, Government regulations require that carcass beef delivered them must be sold on delivered weights. This involves an additional 1- to 2-percent shrink, which on the price of livestock today is a considerable item. Regulations further require that carcass beef must be quartered and then each quarter individually weighed and wrapped. This expense amounts to approximately 25 cents per hundredweight, for which there is no provision in regulation No. 169. A further insult has been added to injury. Government purchases in carload lots call for shipment on Government bills of lading.

The initial icing and salting charge, which is included in domestic business on shipments from the West to the East by virtue of the $1.50 spread between Kansas City and the eastern seaboard, is not permitted to be charged to the Government on such Government bills of lading. All in all, our position has become intolerable.

We trust that you cannot question our patriotism, for we have within the past 6 months delivered from 40 to 50 percent of our entire production to the armed forces directly. If we were financially able to subsidize the armies of our United States, we would be happy to do so. Unfortunately, we are not in this financial position, and, furthermore, do not feel that the Congress of the United States has any such desire. Your prompt reply will be appreciated.

A. B. MAURER,
MAURER PACKING CO.

Mr. President, this telegram is typical of dozens of telegrams and letters I have received from the smaller packers and the smaller bakers in every State of the Union. They are being forced out of business, contrary to what I believe is the plain intent of the Congress. Day by day and week by week more and more of them are going out of business.

The whole question of an adequate food supply, whether through production by the farmers or by processing, is in such chaotic condition that there is no more important question before the people of the United States at this time.

Senate Resolution 94 does not seek to change the law. All it proposes to do is to direct the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate to make an investigation. The whole question between the distinguished majority leader and myself is whether the resolution shall go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or to the Committee on Banking and Currency. It will not take me more than about 10 minutes to tell why I think it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I think we can dispose of the whole matter in 30 minutes. I do not see any necessity for a prolonged discussion. Therefore, though I have great reluctance in refusing to accede to any request of the Senator from Kentucky, which I seldom do, I prefer to proceed at this time.

Mr. President, there is nothing new, nothing novel, in the directions contained in Senate Resolution 94 and the request for its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Last year I, myself, submitted Senate Resolution 308, which was referred to that committee. On October 26 the committee held a hearing on this subject, and this very question of meat ceilings and meat prices was discussed before the committee at length.

On the same day the committee had before it Mr. Byrnes, Mr Wickard, and Mr. Henderson. The hearings have been printed, and on pages 51 to 62 is contained a discussion of this very question with Leon Henderson, Mr. Wickard, and Mr. Byrnes. Nothing was done about the matter at that time.

Later the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and I submitted Senate Resolution 312, which, again, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Again, on November 19 and 20, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held hearings on this subject.

The same subject, and nothing else, is covered in Senate Resolution 94. This is not a new question; it is not a question of jurisdiction as between some other committee and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, there is no question that is new and fresh and novel. It merely involves a continuation of the consideration of matters which were brought up last fall. Senate Resolution 312 was then approved by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It went to the calendar, and remained on the calendar to the close of the last session of Congress, when it died. Now the question comes up again.

Mr. President, there is no question about the serious, in fact, the desperate situation of the small bakers and the small meat packers. If these small businessmen cannot continue to operate on a competitive, free enterprise basis, then they must go out of business. I am not going to sit in this Chamber and bear my share of responsibility and fail to raise my voice when businessmen in the United States are put out of business by arbitrary orders from bureaucrats downtown—orders which have no foundation in the mandates or instructions given those officials by the Congress of the United States. That is what is happening now. That is what we ought to stop.

The only question involved in the resolution is that of investigation. Investigation of these very same subjects was begun after we passed the price-control measure, which was signed on October 2 of last year. These subjects have been under continuous consideration. Hundreds of businessmen have been forced out of business by the arbitrary orders which have been issued. All that Senate Resolution 94 contemplates is an investigation by a standing committee of this body, and that standing committee should be the committee which already has dealt with this subject, is dealing with it now, and which has made public announcement within the last few days of its intention to make a thorough investigation of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the production, the processing, and the distribution of food products. Why there should be any question about the proper committee to consider the subject matter of the resolution is not clear to me.

Mr. President, a question of psychology is involved. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that five times I refused the requests made by the bakers, through their organization, before I finally consented to frame and submit the resolution. I have shown a reluctance, I think about an equal number of times, to take up the question at the behest of the small packers. They finally convinced me, however, of the seriousness of their situation, and I prepared the resolution, submitted it, and hope to obtain its prompt consideration.

The resolution has been framed in such a way as to be very thorough. It contains 12 whereases, which set out for the information of Senators the various infringements of the law on the part of the Office of Price Administration. That information is given by date and verse and chapter; that is, the number of the regulation and the date upon which it was issued.

One of the whereases, standing by itself, would cause the resolution to be sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] mentioned to me last week that one or more of the whereases touched a subject matter which should be considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency. I agree, so far as one whereas is concerned, that, standing alone, it should be the subject of investigation by that committee. With that one whereas, standing by itself, the resolution should go to that committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I hesitate to interrupt the very distinguished Senator from Kansas. I have just read the resolution itself—not the whereases—and am strongly of the opinion that the resolution does not confer any additional authority to that now possessed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make the proposed investigation. The Senator from Kansas well recalls that 2 weeks ago today the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in connection with the resolutions favorably reported from that committee, said that a reserve of $5,000 was provided for all the major committees save three—the three being the Committees on Finance, Appropriations, and Foreign Relations, which were provided with $10,000 for the purpose of making investigations.

I presume the situation now to be that if the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or a majority of its members, should ask for this investigation, the committee would be able to conduct it without the adoption of the Senator's resolution, to the point of expending $5,000. Expenditures beyond that amount would require additional legislation and additional appropriation. The right to subpena witnesses is inherent in the committee. The committee does not claim the right to employ counsel. Probably a word or two should be omitted from the resolution, that is as to places and times, of holding hearings. The hearings would be held by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. President, it appears very plainly to me that the resolution does not confer any rights which are not inherent in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the committee could just as well make the investigation without the adoption of the resolution.

For that reason—while the inquiry is a long one, and is awkwardly propounded—I wonder why the resolution is proposed, concerning a matter over which the committee now has jurisdiction, unless there is a reluctance on the part of the chairman of the committee to function under the terms and philosophy of the resolution.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am always happy to be interrupted by my good friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry can investigate all these matters at any time it feels like doing so. Any standing committee of the Senate can investigate anything which comes within its jurisdiction, and the things which are within its jurisdiction are generally the things which it feels like investigating.

It is customary, however, when especially important questions involving definite interests are raised, to prepare a resolution, and name therein the proper committee to make the investigation. I submitted this resolution before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had announced its purpose of making a general investigation. I did so because I thought these particular questions ought to be investigated at the earliest possible time. There is no dispute with respect to the seriousness of the matters involved. Not even the distinguished majority leader questions the seriousness of the situation. Therefore I think we ought to proceed.

Let me say again, and then I shall conclude, that it is true that the Price Control Act came out of the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is also true that the way the measure was handled last year left some unpleasant memories. I have no desire to revive those memories—I want them to lie quiet—but there is a question of psychology involved. Those who came to me requesting that I submit a resolution with respect to the matter, and who, after five refusals on my part, induced me to take up their case, asked only one thing, and that was an investigation to be conducted by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. They said they would be satisfied with that. If they can have that kind of an investigation, then whatever the result of it may be, whatever the finding of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry may or may not be, they will be content, and, at least so far as I am concerned, they will have to be content. But if we send the resolution to a committee which they believe lacks friendliness, if it is not actively hostile, then we shall fail in the purpose both of the resolution and of satisfying those who have a just complaint.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. REED. I yield the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. If the only conflict of jurisdiction rests in the whereases, why not drop the whereases from the resolution, and simply refer the resolution itself to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and thus avoid all possible friction?

Mr. REED. The distinguished Senator from Michigan has before him a copy of Senate Resolution 94. The whereases have no binding or probative force of any kind, and are merely explanatory. The whereas on page 2, the beginning of the first paragraph on that page, is as follows:

> Whereas the act known as the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, approved January 30, 1942, as amended October 2, 1942, expressly provides that the price-fixing powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except to prevent circumstances or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act."

That language is taken from the act itself. I agree with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that if the resolution contained only that one whereas it might properly go to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am deeply in sympathy with the purpose of the resolution, and so far as that is concerned, I am deeply in sympathy with the whereases. But after all is said and done, the whereases are simply an indication of the reasons for submitting the resolution, and do not actually add anything to it. As the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has suggested, the whereases tend to cause a dispute with respect to jurisdiction. Much as I am in sympathy with the whereases, I am in favor of deleting them.

If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I wish to say that I think the situation in question is a very desperate one. If the O. P. A. continues the present policy of putting a ceiling on prices of processed meat and processed flour, while at the same time leaving the production costs without any ceiling, I think they are going to put out of business every independent baker and every independent miller in the United States. There is no question on earth about that. When they do that they will very seriously interfere with the food supply of the Army and the Navy, of all the armed forces of the United States and her allies, as well as the civilian population.

I think the resolution should be adopted, but if it will lend any facility in the reference of the resolution, I think the Senator from Kansas, having already had the resolution published in the RECORD with the whereases in it, could well afford to let the whereases be stricken out.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Missouri has said precisely what I rose to say in further reference to my suggestion to the Senator from Kansas. I wish to see his resolution acted on today. I think he removes all reasonable chance for an argument when he strikes the whereases out of it. Why not strike the whereases, inasmuch as they have no probative force anyway, and thus circumscribe the argument to a point where there cannot be any question?

Mr. REED. I may say to the Senators from Michigan and Missouri that I do not understand the objection of the Senator from Kentucky to be lodged against the whereases. I understand that the objection of the Senator from Kentucky goes to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. So far as I am concerned, I do not care anything about the whereases. We put them in the resolution only for the purposes I have stated. If Senators will read the whereases they will find that they give Senators the chapter and verse—that is, date and regulation number. They give all the information any Senator needs, if a Senator wishes to examine the RECORD with respect to the facts and the documents behind the resolution. That is all they do.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not serve a useful purpose to have the resolution printed in the RECORD as a part of the remarks of the able Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED. The resolution, including the "whereases," has already been printed in the RECORD in full. I am perfectly agreeable to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], to drop the "whereases" if that will meet the objection of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to make a few remarks in my own time with reference to the subject now under discussion, if the Senator from Kansas is through.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. With reference to the possible assignment of the resolution to the Committee on Banking and Currency, am I to understand that my friend from Kansas implies that the friends of agriculture feel that it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry rather than to the Committee on Banking and Currency, because the Committee on Banking and Currency is thought to be hostile to agriculture?

Mr. REED. I have not said that the Committee on Banking and Currency is hostile to agriculture.

Mr. TOBEY. Is there any implication that the Committee on Banking and Currency is hostile to the agricultural interests?

Mr. REED. No; I did not mean to leave that inference. What I stated was that the small packers and small bakers, who have consulted me individually and through their organizations, have stated to me that they would be satisfied if they could get an investigation of this question by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I have said, as is well known, that price-control measures were handled by the Committee on Banking and Currency and reported to the Senate by that committee. There are some unpleasant memories in that connection which I should dislike to revive.

If the resolution goes to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, those who are now complaining will be satisfied. I cannot give that assurance should the resolution be referred to any other committee.

Mr. TOBEY. The only reason I ask the question is that I thought I distinctly understood the distinguished Senator from Kansas to state that the Committee on Banking and Currency is hostile to agriculture. I desire to correct the RECORD in that regard, because among the stalwart supporters of agriculture in the Senate there is a large group on the Committee on Banking and Currency.

As a member of that committee, and as one who believes in agriculture, I can assure the Senator that on that committee there are those who recognize the needs of agriculture, and that should the resolution be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency it would receive a square deal from that committee in connection with any matters pertaining to agriculture.

Mr. REED. My friend the Senator from New Hampshire is the ranking minority member of that committee. My equally good friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is also a member of that committee. There are other members of that committee who are just as good friends of agriculture as is any other Member of the Senate. I am talking about the psychology of meeting the complaints by letting the committee which would be satisfactory to those making the complaints conduct the investigation. I have said at no time that I hold any belief that the Committee on Banking and Currency is unfriendly to agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me discuss for a moment my request that the resolution go over without prejudice. The other day, when it went over until today, I did not know that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], could not be present today. The distinguished Senator from Kansas is not responsible for the absence of the chairman of the committee, and neither am I. I believe that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I believe that no harm could result from another postponement of the resolution. Out of courtesy to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who is unavoidably absent, I believe that the resolution should go over for the present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to make a personal statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REED. I have no warmer personal friend among the Members of the Senate than the distinguished and able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The Senator from Kentucky will recall that a couple of years ago, on a close vote, it was proposed to call the Senator from New York back from Florida, where he was recuperating. I asked the secretary of the minority not to require the Senator from New York to return. I told him that I was willing to be paired with him, to take care of his vote on that important question. The Senator from New York and I have carried a general pair during all these years. No one likes him better than I do, and no one is less desirous than I of doing him any discourtesy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate what the able Senator from Kansas has said, and I am sure the Senator from New York will appreciate it as well.

These requests frequently involve mutual concessions and courtesies. The Senator from Kansas was the sponsor of a measure which was placed on the calendar on January 11, 1942. The purpose of the bill was to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act. On the surface, the Senator apparently thought that the Committee on Education and Labor, to which it would naturally be referred, should be bypassed. Because the Senator from Kansas was absent for 2 or 3 weeks, consideration of the bill was postponed until he could return.

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that the attitude of the Senator from Kansas was not "on the surface," but was the result of mature consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not doubt the accuracy of the Senator's statement. However, if a bill of that nature could be placed on the calendar without any consideration having been given to it by any committee, I could introduce a tax bill and, by the same method, have it put on the calendar and considered by the Senate without being referred to the Committee on Finance. At the proper time we shall have to discuss the question of the reference of that bill. I regret to say that I fear that a chaotic situation is developing in the Senate with respect to the reference of bills and resolutions.

I have discussed that situation on several occasions. I hope I shall not become monotonous or boresome to the Senate in my effort to bring some order out of chaos in the matter of proper reference of proposed legislation. I hope the Vice President—and I say this with the greatest affection and respect for him—will not persist in his inclination, which seems to have developed in the past week or so, to leave it to the Senate to vote on the question when there seems to be any doubt as to where a bill should go. It is conceivable that in the midst of the war we may be debating for hours the question of where a bill should be referred, when in my judgment the reference should be made by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

I realize that the rules of the Senate are somewhat vague and chaotic; but in national or county conventions, without any precedents under general parliamentary law, the right is inherent in the presiding officer to refer resolutions to the appropriate committee. The rules of the Senate do not specifically require the Vice President to do so, but ever since there has been a Senate the Vice President has been following that procedure.

I desire to say frankly that, rather than remain in this chaotic situation, in which, every time a bill or a resolution is introduced, we must have a joint debate with reference to where it should go, I shall propose an amendment to the rules which would require the Presiding Officer to exercise that function. I have no doubt that the Vice President would be glad to exercise the function if he were assured that he should do so. Senators can see what a chaotic situation will develop in the future if every time a controversial bill or resolution is introduced we must have a debate on the floor of the Senate before it can be determined to what committee it should be referred, and then vote on the question of reference according to the inclinations of Senators, depending upon what they think they will get from a given committee, rather than to follow the parliamentary and logical procedure of referring bills to the committees to which they should be referred.

Mr. President, let me return to the pending resolution. It contains five pages of "whereases," and every one of them refers to the administration of the Price Control Act by the Office of Price Administration. Even if the whereases were eliminated, the resolution would authorize the committee to investigate and study the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration. I dare say that if I were to offer a resolution authorizing an investigation into the conduct of the Bureau of Internal Revenue—the agency of the Government which collects taxes—that resolution would go to the Committee on Finance without any question whatever, because the Committee on Finance sponsors, writes, and puts through the Senate all legislation with respect to the collection of taxes. I do not believe anyone would seriously question the propriety of referring to the Committee on Finance a resolution to investigate the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

There is no question that if any Senator should submit a resolution providing for an investigation of the manner in which the Federal Reserve Board has conducted the financial operations of its department, pertaining to the currency of our country, Federal Reserve notes, and the entire law affecting the situation pertaining to currency and banking, such a resolution would go to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which has jurisdiction of legislation dealing with subjects of that nature. A similar situation would obtain in the other House.

I have no doubt that if a resolution were offered providing for an investigation of the way in which the Secretary of Labor has conducted her office, or the course which has been pursued by the National Labor Relations Board in its administration of the Wagner Act, such a resolution would go to the Committee on Education and Labor, which sponsored the legislation and put it through the Senate.

Here is a resolution to investigate the whole set-up, the whole policy, the whole course of action of the Office of Price Administration in regard to the matters set forth in the whereases as well as in the resolving portion of the resolution.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Kentucky would want to add that the investigation would apply only insofar as the establishment and maintenance of maximum prices for pork, beef, and bakery products are concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I understand that; but the Senator from Kansas could just as well have included in the resolution clothing and shoes and everything else.

The bill providing for the control of prices was sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency. It was properly sent there because the bill provided for legislation designed to prevent inflation, which is directly associated with the question of our currency and the value of our currency. Inflation is a term which is applicable to our currency, the amount of it, and the value of it in terms of purchasing power; and the bill was properly referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The bill was debated in the committee and was reported from the committee; and I think I can say for the committee, and I believe that every member of the committee will agree with me—including the ranking minority member, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who was and is a very valuable, able, and sincere member of the committee, and one of the outstanding advocates of fairness to the farmers of the country—that the committee has had the interests of farmers at heart. I, myself, claim a little credit along that line. For 30 years I have been voting for legislation to help the farmers of the country. As I have said heretofore, I voted for the original McNary-Haugen bill, which was going a good distance; but I never regretted doing so. I thought it was the best measure offered, and I never apologized for voting for the bill. Of course, at that time I was not a Member of this body. If I had been a Member of the Senate at the time, and had had the benefit of my very warm, intimate and delightful association with the author of the bill, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], I might have been even more enthusiastic for the bill than I was. But even in the House, where I was very well acquainted with the Member of the House who was one of the sponsors of the bill, Mr. Haugen, I with some enthusiasm and conviction voted for the McNary-Haugen bill; and all my life I have been an advocate of legislation to help the farmers of the country.

In the Committee on Banking and Currency we finally went further in the provisions for the benefit of agriculture than the farm organizations themselves had already advocated. So I think there is no evidence which would convict the Committee on Banking and Currency of any dereliction or any lack of enthusiasm or any hostility whatever toward the interests of the farmers of the United States.

We all studied psychology when we were in college, I am sure. The question here is not one of psychology. It is a question of the orderly procedure of legislation and the reference of bills to the committees having jurisdiction of them, and which should have jurisdiction of them. I suppose the Senator from Kansas means that, from a psychological standpoint, if the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry made the investigation and did nothing, then those who are complaining would be better satisfied with nothing coming from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry than they would be with nothing coming from the Committee on Banking and Currency. However, I do not think the question under consideration is a purely psychological one. We have to bring some form of order out of the legislative and parliamentary chaos which has grown up in regard to the reference of bills.

Let me show what the resolution would do. All of it refers to the manner in which the Office of Price Administration has administered the law which we passed. The fact that the resolution is limited to pork and beef and bakery products does not change the situation. It might have included shoes and clothing; it might have included everything upon which the Office of Price Administration has fixed a ceiling.

It begins:

Whereas the provisions of the act entitled "An act to aid in stabilizing the cost of living," approved October 2, 1942—

That is the second price control act which came out of the Committee on Banking and Currency—

And so forth. Then over on the next page:

Whereas the act known as the Emergency Price Control Act—

And so forth. Then further down:

Whereas on October 22, 1942, the Office of Price Administration issued Maximum Price Regulation No.—

So-and-so; and—

Whereas said Maximum Price Regulation No. 148—

And so-and-so; and—

Whereas on December 10, 1942, the Office of Price Administration—

Did so-and-so; and—

Whereas on April 28, 1942, the Price Administrator—

Did so-and-so; and—

Whereas—

All the way through it—

The Price Administrator—

Or—

The Price Administration—

Has done something under the act that is a subject of protest from a large number of people in the country—and with whom I sympathize let me say to the Senator from Kansas and other Senators. The whole resolution is based upon the situation set out in the whereases; and then finally:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry * * * is hereby authorized and directed—

To investigate and study the policies and actions of the Office of Price Administration * * *.

So the whereases are forerunners of the resolution itself which orders the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to investigate the way in which the Office of Price Administration, created by a law which was enacted on report from the Committee on Banking and Currency, has conducted its affairs in the certain respects enumerated. If that is to be done, there certainly would be created such a situation that the Senate would never know how its future conduct would be charted.

I sympathize with the meat packers. Some of them have been in my office. In my State of Kentucky, as well as in other States, there are packers. Kentucky is not the location of large packers, but we have many small packers in Louisville, Covington, Newport, and various other localities in the State. I realize the hardship which is being done to them. They are being squeezed. I read the telegram which the Senator from Kansas had placed in the RECORD. It is only a repetition of what certain of my constituents have told me in my office. So there is no dispute about the fact that the small packers have been squeezed. That condition has grown out of a situation for which the Office of Price Administration may not have been responsible originally. It may have been that the War Department and Navy Department, in the making of contracts with the large packers who are supplying the Army and Navy, have had some part in bringing about the situation which contributed to the condition complained of—not altogether responsible for it, but making some contribution to it.

However, regardless of that, and be that as it may, undoubtedly the small packers are in a bad way and are losing money. I have taken up the matter with the Office of Price Administration, first under Mr. Henderson and, since he has been out of office, under Mr. Brown; and I think that if they can find any formula under which they can remedy the situation they are anxious to do so. They have not as yet been able to find one.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate by discussing the matter further at this time, because I hope that the calendar may be called in a few minutes; but, in view of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who I think desires to have a little something to say about the situation, I do not think any harm can come if the resolution goes over again. I hope the Senator from Kansas will agree that that may be done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as I tried to say, I have none but the warmest feelings for the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Senator from Kentucky has emphasized what I said: This matter has been running for months. The small processors of meat products which are essential to the welfare of the country have been going out of business and are going out of business every day and every week. I think this is a matter which should be disposed of.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Undoubtedly the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction of legislation amending the Price Control Act. I do not suppose that will be disputed. Does not the Senator think that if the investigation is made by the committee which sponsored the legislation, if it should find that the policies inaugurated under the legislation are not being carried out according to the intention of Congress, it would be more likely to report proposed legislation dealing with and correcting the situation than would another committee which has not had jurisdiction of the legislation?

Mr. REED. I do not. In the first place, the heart of the question is going to be the price of hogs and the relation of the price of hogs to the wholesale price of meat—not the retail price, but the wholesale price. I think that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry knows more about the price of hogs, and ought to know more about the price of hogs and its relationship to the price of meat, than does the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The investigation would be confined to subjects having to deal with price ceilings, with going market prices, with parity prices—all of which have always been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the final judgment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has had weight with the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that the individual members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry know more about the price of hogs than do the individual members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, although I doubt it. But in spite of any such superior knowledge on the part of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, it has never reported any measure dealing with the price of hogs. It has suggested legislation dealing with corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, and rice. I do not criticize it for not bringing in legislation dealing with hogs; because we all agree that the basic products should not have included cattle or hogs at the time when the Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed. However, I am not prepared to agree that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has any greater knowledge in regard to hogs than does the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There are a lot of hogs in the banking business.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to "hog" the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am through. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, if it is necessary, that the resolution go over without prejudice until Thursday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. What was the request, Mr. President?

Mr. BARKLEY. I asked that the resolution go over without prejudice until Thursday.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me inquire whether it is in order to move to postpone consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No motion relative to reference of the resolution is before the Senate at the present time; and a motion such as that to which the Senator from Kentucky has referred is in order.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I have not done so, I was about to make a formal motion that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We have now, acting under a resolution which covers this very subject, appointed a subcommittee, and have subpenaed certain witnesses to come before us; and the identical matter is included in the resolution which the Senate adopted and under which we are acting. I am of opinion that meat is a part of the food of the Nation, and we are investigating the food situation—f-o-o-d, not f-o-o-l. We hope to have a hearing. If the resolution should go to any other committee, it would merely be cumulative of the work being done by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection, unless the Senator from South Carolina wishes to proceed further, I desire to say that I agree with the position taken by the Senator from Oregon. Any standing committee of the Senate has a right under, its own authority, to investigate any subject upon which it might bring in legislation. We do not have to authorize the Finance Committee to investigate taxes; we do not have to authorize, by resolution, the Committee on Banking and Currency to investigate the banking and currency laws. The standing committees, practically all, if not all, of them, have been given an appropriation of $5,000 each to conduct investigations, and if any committee can show reason why it should have more, it, of course, will be given more. But the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Committee on Banking and Currency, and every other committee has the right, without any specific resolution or authority, to investigate any subject over which it may have legislative jurisdiction.

Nobody can ever tell, when an investigation is inaugurated, whether it will result in legislation. We have investigations that do not result in legislation and we sometimes have legislation that results in investigations; but still the committee would have the right to go forward, according to what I understand was its action last Friday, and investigate the food situation and any collateral matter that might pertain to the food situation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I agree with what the Senator from Kentucky has said and what the Senator from South Carolina has said, but this thought came to me: In the first place, if the Committee on Forestry is already doing the work, why have a resolution at all? If the resolution is adopted by the Senate, and another investigation is authorized, perhaps by the Committee on Banking and Currency, we would have two committees investigating identically the same thing. That is the reason I asked why the necessity for the resolution at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt the wisdom or necessity of it, but the point is this, if I may emphasize it: In our legislative course here and in the reference of bills and resolutions to committees we must try to preserve some order of sequence in the reference of bills and resolutions of various kinds. I think it would be a bad precedent to take this resolution or any other resolution proposing to investigate the administration of the price-administration laws from the committee that fathered the original legislation and refer it to another committee. I should infinitely prefer that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry go ahead with its own investigation in its own way than to have a resolution investigating the O. P. A., which was promoted by the Banking and Currency Committee, taken away from that committee and by action of the Senate referred to another committee.

Mr. SMITH. The only thing which urged me to make a statement was the fact that the resolution is pending. The committee of which I am chairman is operating and has charge of the food situation. I am under the impression that meat comes in that category. Meat is becoming pretty scarce; the committee is investigating that very thing. As the Senator from Kentucky has said, it looks as if it is proposed rather to multiply investigations from different angles. I do not know but that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is in duty bound to find out what is the matter with all the miserable mess, for that is what it is. Almost every branch of the Government seems to want to regiment something; they want to deal things out, and now they have gotten down to the heels of women's shoes, which must not be more than so long, and all that kind of thing. Such actions have caused the American people to reach a point where they are just about ready to say, "All of you quit."

I cannot, for the life of me, see why a question of food should not be considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I do not know that food is produced by chambers of commerce or in banking houses. I really think that the resolution of the Senator from Kansas would result in a duplication of what we are already doing.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Under what resolution is the Senator's committee now investigating?

Mr. SMITH. Under a resolution—I have forgotten its number—under which the committee is to go into all food products.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the able Senator, a subcommittee has been appointed by him as chairman to do, in connection with a number of other things, the very thing proposed by the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SMITH. To do the identical thing. We deal with transportation and its effect upon the price of food products; with processing; with the price paid the original producer and then the difference in price of the processor, the wholesaler, and the retailer. We want to get some line on what is being done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may do so, I move that the consideration of this resolution be postponed until next Thursday without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, am I to understand that the motion of the Senator from Kentucky takes precedence over the motion made by me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Kentucky takes precedence.

Mr. REED. Let me discuss the question for a moment.

I am somewhat surprised at the Senator from South Carolina. A constituent of his, a meat packer, sent me a telegram received by him from the Senator from South Carolina saying that the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had considered Senate Resolution 94 and desired that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I may say to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who raised the question about an investigation already announced to be made by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that I submitted my resolution in advance of the public announcement made by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

If I had had that announcement before me possibly I would not have submitted the resolution; but it was presented at the request of numerous small business organizations representing small businesses which are being squeezed out of business. Starting with the President, continuing through the Cabinet, through various agencies, and including Members of the Senate and the House, if you please, we talk about small businessmen, and here are a number of small businessmen being squeezed out of business under a process that has been going on for months without anything being done about it. That is the reason the resolution was drafted and offered in the Senate.

Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that the committees are agencies of this body and nothing else. No committee has any jurisdiction except such as this body gives it. If this body says that the investigation should be conducted by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry—and I think all the argument is that way—certainly no discourtesy would be done by the Senate to any subordinate agency of the Senate. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before the roll is called, I inquire what is the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to postpone the consideration of the pending question until Thursday. The clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] are conducting hearings in Puerto Rico on behalf of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is detained on official business for the Senate.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] are necessarily absent.

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand sufficiently seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky will state his inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. The vote will come on my motion to postpone the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Kansas until Thursday, will it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct, to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Thursday.

Mr. BARKLEY. If my motion shall be agreed to, then the resolution will be laid before the Senate automatically Thursday, if the Senate shall adjourn until Thursday, at the end of the routine morning business, just as it has been today?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be laid before the Senate just before the conclusion of the routine morning business, just as it was today.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate more than a moment or two to express my views as to the reference which should be made of the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

I think that the subject matter touched upon by the resolution involves one of the most serious questions now confronting the American people. In my opinion, it involves a situation which in the very near future is likely very seriously to affect the food supply of the United States. Since it involves the disposition entirely of agricultural products, and since it does involve the food supply not only for the civilians of the United States, but for the armed forces of the United States, in my opinion the reference of the resolution should be to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the committee which has been specially charged over a long period of time with jurisdiction of the production, marketing, and distribution of agricultural products.

What has happened in this situation is that the O. P. A., through a lack of understanding of the agricultural problem, by putting a ceiling on processed agricultural products and not on the production of agricultural products, has brought about a situation which in the immediate future is likely to put out of business all the processors engaged in processing agricultural products, taken in connection with the practice of the Government in issuing mandatory orders which have to be filled, even though they are filled at a loss.

It is entirely true that the O. P. A. was the putative child—and I say "putative" because everyone knows it was not the actual child—of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Everyone knows that the child was the product of the brain of Mr. Ginsberg, whose services were too valuable to the O. P. A. to permit him to go into the Army, as a man of his age would ordinarily be expected to do. That being true, the Committee on Banking and Currency has a shadow of claim to jurisdiction of the resolution; but the purpose of the resolution is to get something done for the agricultural interests of the United States, and that includes the producers as well as the processors.

I suggest that the way to get something done to correct the present situation is to refer the resolution to a committee which is interested in agricultural production, rather than to a committee which, as I have said, is the putative parent of the O. P. A., and therefore is naturally interested in trying to show that it did not make a mistake in the law as it was originally passed.

I say that any one member of this body who is interested in having something done to correct the present situation should vote to refer the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and not to postpone consideration.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate very long in the discussion of the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas, which is now before the Senate for determination. I am as much interested in the packers' problems as is any other Senator on the floor at the present time. Many of the problems of the small packers have come across my desk, and I have attempted, in my limited way, to contact O. P. A. and other officials in Washington with the view toward having those packers given some relief.

Mr. President, that is not what disturbs me at this moment. We have heard from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, who says point blank, and without any equivocation, that the question covered by the resolution is now being considered and discussed by a subcommittee which has been appointed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It should be sufficient for the Members of the Senate that this very problem is now being discussed and investigated and debated by a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

What disturbs me is that the Members of the Senate, at least a great number of them, are constantly complaining about the duplication of effort, the duplication of authority, and the lack of an organized program in the bureaus of the executive branch of the Government. Yet, here on the floor of the Senate, in our own body, there is a discussion consuming almost an hour and a half over a resolution covering a subject which is now being considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I am delighted to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. What interests me about the resolution more than anything else is that it specifies two products which are to be investigated, when our committee proposes to investigate the whole field affecting food. If we take the resolution up and it shall be agreed to, we will specify and give preference to two products, which I do not think are more important than others.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his contribution. The resolution under which the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is now investigating is all-inclusive. It does not cover merely two particular subjects in which some Senator may be interested because he lives in a particular section of the country, and because that problem involved commands his interest. The resolution to which the Senator from South Carolina referred covers the entire field, as he has so ably said.

So, Mr. President, here we are, wasting an hour and a half—and we did the same thing last Thursday—on a resolution which in my opinion has no place whatsoever before the Senate, because it is cumulative, it will do no good, whether it goes to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Its reference will make no difference, because the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is now in the course of an investigation of the entire subject.

I wish to elaborate upon what the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], the minority leader, has said with respect to this kind of a resolution.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I have examined the general resolutions applying to committees which have come before the committee, and I believe I know what each committee's duties are with respect to investigations. I have examined the resolution which is now before the Senate. In my opinion, there is no question that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has, under the general resolution authorizing it to hold hearings, which has hertofore been adopted, full and complete authority to do the very things contemplated by the resolution now before the Senate. Similar investigations have been made many times. If the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry desires the Secretary of Agriculture to come before the committee and testify upon any question that we agree should be investigated, he will do so. Such a thing has been done many times without the adoption of a special resolution.

I am as much interested in this question as is any other Senator on the floor, but what I am complaining about is the fact that we as members of the Senate stand here constantly condemning bureaus and bureaucrats because of their duplication of authority and because of their bungling efforts, yet here we ourselves have a perfect case of bungling in the submission of this resolution and the taking up of the time we have taken here on two different occasions to debate it.

So far as I am concerned, I do not care to what committee the resolution is referred. It ought to go into the waste basket. That is where it belongs, so far as doing any good is concerned, because the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is doing more, under the general resolution adopted with respect to that committee, than can possibly be done under the specific resolution now before the Senate.

THE RECENT RUSSIAN VICTORIES

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, dispatches last night and today bring the news and the confirmation that the Russian city of Rostov, heretofore in the hands of the Nazis, has capitulated, and that Russian forces are now in possession of that strategic point.

Late news dispatches also reveal that Russian forces are rapidly investing Kharkov, another industrial and commercial center to the north of Rostov, now and for the recent past a center of German supplies and munitions and activities.

Mr. President, I simply wish to take a few moments of the Senate's time to express a message of admiration to the Russian people for the heroic and gallant conduct of the Russian armies. The winter season has presented many difficulties to military campaigns, but notwithstanding these natural impediments the Russian forces have moved forward and driven back the lines of the invaders to what they say are "new positions," but in doing so, the Russians have redeemed large territories of Russian soil, and have no doubt stiffened and increased the granite resistance of the Russian people until they will be encouraged and stimulated to greater and more heroic efforts to carry the war to a successful conclusion.

Russia has amazed the United Nations. There were many who believed that under the impact of the hammer blows of the Axis, Russia would collapse for lack of organized industrial power and for lack of military training and stamina, but Russia, throughout the entire campaign, from the time of the initial attack to this moment, has revealed an astounding ability for the organization of her industry and the supplying of her vast forces. She has likewise similarly astounded the people of the United Nations by her military organization, by her strategy, and by all the elements of warfare upon a grand scale.

I am gratified to know that American supplies and munitions are now reaching the Soviets in a larger volume than they have for a considerable period in the past. The details of that situation cannot be properly discussed here, but our convoys are now reaching Arctic ports with much smaller losses than they have in the months which have preceded.

Mr. President, not alone have the Russians shown unflagging resistance to the invader but they have been able, through their gallant attacks, their heroic campaigns, not alone to arrest the invader but to drive him back toward his own boundaries.

I wish to say a further word regarding Russia. Mr. President, Russia's domestic policies and internal institutions are not the proper concern of the United States to the extent of intervention or interference with those institutions. Whether we like them or whether we do not like them, it is not a matter for the United States to undertake to determine for Russia her political institutions or her economic system. We must remember that Russia is relatively a new nation. The Soviet Republic's form of government has been in existence for only a quarter of a century, and she has behind her only 25 years of development and advancement, but I think it will be the judgment of history that during that time Russia has shown to the world a power of self-government—a power of caring for her resources and ability to organize her industry—that few of us realized in the years that are gone.

So while I do not subscribe, as I know most Senators do not subscribe, to the political concept of Russia and her people, my own hope is that God may grant her strength to develop her institutions in a manner suited to the needs of her own people and to enable her to meet her international obligations as she shall be forced to meet them in the future into which we look.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Texas has just stated, entirely accurately in my judgment, that Russia in her resistance has amazed the United Nations. I know the Senator will agree with me that she has not only amazed the United Nations, but she has amazed Germany as well, and I think Germany will be even more amazed at the wonderful progress of Russian armies than United Nations are.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the eminent Senator from Tennessee for his observation. I have no doubt that Germany and her master, Hitler, at the moment that German armies swept across the Russian frontier in their campaign of invasion and conquest, believed that Russia within a few weeks would suffer the same fate that befell Poland in 1939 when the German infantry and panzer divisions poured over the plains of that unhappy country. I think Germany had a concept that Russia was a great inert, unorganized mass which would succumb to the organized military power, the organized military strategy of the great machine which has swept over the face of Europe and crushed under its feet practically every nation on the continent of Europe that did not subscribe to the policies and did not accept the suzerainty of the German authority and power.

Mr. President, I wish to say that Russia, great nation that she is, with 160,000,000 people, sovereign over vast areas both in Europe and in Asia, cannot be ignored in post-war arrangements and in consideration of what shall follow victory by the United Nations.

There are those who seek now to bring about an arrangement among the United Nations as to what shall immediately follow peace. Mr. President, my own view is that the most that can be accomplished along those lines at the moment is simply an agreement upon a few general policies, a few general principles, that shall actuate the United Nations when victory is achieved. It is manifestly impossible for us to peer into the uncertain dramas of the future in detail and to settle definitely now the various and multitudinous issues which shall come before the peace conference.

However, what I rose to say, as a citizen of the United States, if my voice can be heard by any Russian citizen, or any representative of the Russian Government, is that I believe that by her sword Russia has earned the right to be consulted at the peace table. She has earned her right to stand among the great powers of the earth and have her voice heard in whatever arrangements may take place when victory shall have been accomplished by the United Nations.

Mr. President, the collapse in part of the German forces in South Russia and, I hope, in the Caucasus, is one of the encouraging and stimulating things which have recently been brought to our attention. I wish to salute Russia, the great leadership of her armies, and the striking power which has enabled them to drive back the greatest military machine that modern times have known.

Mr. President, when the Soviet Union was first established it seemed that Russia then had some ambitions of propaganda among other nations, to convert them to her political concepts. However, my information is that that movement has been abandoned and that no longer will she undertake, at least in the United States, to press those concepts. I have no fear of the Russians undermining or attacking the institutions of the United States. I welcome her comradeship in arms in this titanic struggle in which she and her armies have played so valiant and so heroic a part.

SHORTAGE OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS IN NEW ENGLAND

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, New England, and particularly Massachusetts, is at this time suffering the dire consequences of an acute shortage of all petroleum products. I regret to say that much of this suffering is due to the public confidence in promises made by various governmental agencies which have had to do with oil. I am advised that a series of contradictory regulations, imposed one upon another, has baffled the public, prevented the fair functioning of the oil industry, and caused one of the greatest disasters which this section of the country has ever faced. There is an extreme difference between the suffering, privation, or self-discipline imposed by war conditions and the misery caused by departmental stupidity, lackadaisical action, and unplanned, unthought-out, unworkable rules and regulations. New England, and particularly Massachusetts, always has been and always will be willing to make any sacrifices necessary when fundamental principles and the winning of the war are involved. But New England will not willingly be nailed, drawn, and quartered on the rack of administrative incompetence.

Last May the present oil shortage was forecast by men of practical experience in the oil industry. One of them, Joseph F. White, president of the White Fuel Co., evolved a plan which depended upon tank car movements from the oil fields into New England. Backed by representatives of every major oil company in New England, he tried to convince officials of O. P. A., O. P. C., O. D. T., and W. P. B. that immediate action was necessary. That was in May. In June, July, August, September, and October he and other oil men together made a series of trips and visited the bureaucracies which control oil from the moment it leaves the ground until it reaches the consumer. Their visits were in vain. The White plan went into effect in November.

I became alarmed at the oil situation last August, and after considerable study I introduced a bill to have placed under one man definite control of the whole petroleum situation. That bill did not become law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a copy of the bill which I introduced, which would establish a single Petroleum Administrator. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD following the bill a statement which I made at that time explaining the proposal.

There being no objection, the bill and the statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Emergency Petroleum Act of 1942."

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act, unless the context otherwise indicates—

(a) The term "Administrator" means the National Petroleum Administrator.

(b) The term "petroleum" means petroleum and motor vehicle fuels, fuel oils, and other fuels produced from petroleum.

SEC. 3. There is hereby created and established an agency of the United States to be known as the National Petroleum Administration (hereinafter referred to as the "Administration"). At the head of the Administration there shall be a National Petroleum Administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year. The Administrator shall have no other vocation or employment and shall have no financial interest in any enterprise with which he transacts business in his official capacity.

SEC. 4. The Administrator shall employ and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, and shall make such expenditures, as may be necessary for carrying out his functions and the functions of the Administration. The Administrator is authorized to accept gifts or loans of real and personal property and to utilize voluntary and uncompensated services. With the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, any officer or employee of any department or agency of the Government may be assigned to assist in the work of the Administration. Any function of the Administrator may be exercised by such officers or employees of the Administration as he may designate for that purpose.

SEC. 5. (a) The following functions are hereby transferred to and vested in the Administrator:

(1) All functions of the Office of Petroleum Coordinator for War.

(2) All functions of the War Production Board and its Chairman, of the Price Administrator, and of the Office of Defense Transportation, relating to the production, transportation, distribution, sale, or price of petroleum.

(b) The Petroleum Conservation Division of the Department of the Interior is hereby transferred to the Administration and shall perform its functions within the Administration subject to the direction and control of the Administrator. All powers and duties of the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the functions performed by such Division are hereby transferred to and vested in the Administrator.

(c) The Administrator is authorized to formulate and require the execution of such policies, programs, and measures as he deems necessary to provide for the coordination of the functions of departments and agencies of the Government relating in any manner to the production, transportation, distribution, sale, or price of petroleum and to provide for the execution of such functions in such manner as the Administrator deems best. All officers and agencies of the Government authorized to perform any such functions shall, in performing such functions, conform to such policies, programs, measures, and requirements as the Administrator may prescribe in the execution of the powers vested in him by this subsection.

(d) The Administration is authorized to direct the manner in which and the purpose for which transportation facilities available for the transportation of petroleum shall be used, and shall have authority to direct the shipment of any petroleum to any particular destination.

SEC. 6. (a) Such personnel and property (including office equipment and records) of the various departments and agencies of the Government as have been employed in the execution of the functions transferred to the Administrator or the Administration by this Act and as may be determined by the President shall be transferred to the Administration upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe.

(b) Such appropriations or other funds as have been available for expenditure in the execution of the functions so transferred by this Act and as may be determined by the President shall be transferred to the Administrator on such date or dates as the President may prescribe, and shall be available for expenditure by the Administrator in carrying out his functions and the functions of the Administration.

SEC. 7. The Administrator is authorized, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to delegate to any department or agency of the Government any of the functions vested in the Administrator. Any functions so delegated shall be performed by such department or agency upon such terms and conditions as the Administrator may determine. The Administrator is authorized to reimburse, out of any funds available for expenditure by him, any such department or agency for expenses incurred in the performance of such functions.

SEC. 8. All rules, regulations, orders, and requirements issued or made in the exercise of any function transferred by this act, and in effect when this section takes effect, shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or repealed by the Administrator, by any court of competent jurisdiction or by operation of law.

SEC. 9. The Administrator is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations and to make and issue such orders and directives as may be necessary for carrying out his functions.

SEC. 10. Such sums as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act are hereby authorized to be appropriated.

SEC. 11. The provisions of sections 5 and 8 of this act shall take effect on the tenth day after the date of its enactment.

SEC. 12. This act shall cease to be in effect upon the termination of 6 months after the end of the present war, or upon such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HENRY CABOT LODGE, JR.

I am today introducing a bill to establish the Office of National Petroleum Administrator. This bill seeks to remedy several defects in the present system, and in particular to meet three major criticisms of our present petroleum policy.

1. This bill sets up a Nation-wide control in place of the present sectional control which is confined to 17 Eastern States.

2. It sets up a unified authority replacing the present divided authority which has led so many people to complain that they were victims of "passing the buck." The mayors of Massachusetts and a great many of the petroleum dealers have strongly expressed themselves as favoring the unified control of this great problem.

3. It confers a grant of power sufficiently broad to enable the Government to compel petroleum shipments into critical areas.

I believe the need for Nation-wide control is already apparent to many people and will be apparent to the entire Nation within a short space of time. I understand that it is by no means certain that the Middle West will continue to enjoy an abundance of petroleum products. Moreover, the need to conserve rubber is just as great in one section of the country as it is in another, and control of petroleum is a practical way to conserve rubber. I believe that Nation-wide control not only appeals to one's sense of fairness and justice, and that it not only would meet a criticism which is being voiced within the rationed area, but that it would be definitely in the interests of the Nation as a whole.

In a telegram to me of recent date, Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, Coordinator of Defense Transportation, stated that the oil shortage was "not a matter to be controlled alone through distribution of tank cars, because neither the railroads nor I can bring buyers and sellers together nor require shippers to make consignments to a particular destination."

This message makes it clear that there is at present a lack of authority to compel oil shipments. Although the granting of such authority might normally be repugnant to our notions of free enterprise, we are confronting an emergency which justifies the taking of effective steps to see to it that people in our Northern States do not grow cold during the winter, and that essential war industries in all the rationed States are enabled to continue war production. I believe this is a proper delegation of power in time of war.

I introduce this bill with the hope that it will be enacted into law, and in the belief that in any event it sets up a standard to which those of us who are so vitally interested in the petroleum situation can repair. Obviously it would be much quicker if this same object were to be achieved by action of the executive branch. I still hope that this may be the case. This bill, however, represents the thoughts of a great many people who are vitally concerned with this problem.

In the final analysis this bill centralizes control and definitely places responsibility on a very vital concern of the home front.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on September 4, 1942, I addressed a letter to the President of the United States in which I called his attention to the seriousness of the situation. I received a reply under date of October 1, 1942, in which the President agreed with my contention that the control of the entire oil problem should be unified under one agency. I ask to have a copy of my letter, together with the reply from the President, printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 4, 1942.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Only the seriousness of the problem would justify me in taking your precious time with a letter, and I would not think of doing so unless the matter about which I write carried such a grave threat to our program for the production of weapons.

I refer to the impending shortage of fuel oil in New England. This shortage will not only threaten the health of all people who must live in a cold-weather climate, but it menaces the many industries in this section which need fuel oil in order to manufacture weapons. The seriousness of these two dangers must not be minimized. In studying this question, and in conferring with the numerous agencies of the Government having to do with it, I have been led to the conclusion that, while the shortage is real, its effects could be considerably reduced if two principal things were done:

First. Unify the control of this problem under one head instead of distributing the authority, as is now the case, among a number of different Federal agencies.

Second. Institute a Nation-wide rationing or conservation plan so that amounts of fuel oil now being used for nonessential purposes in other parts of the country could be made available to this section.

In order to accomplish this purpose, I have drafted legislation which confers additional authority on the Executive. I enclose a copy of the bill and would be deeply obliged to get your reaction.

I recognize that legislative action is slow and that many of the things embodied in this bill could be done by you without legislation. I hope that you will take cognizance of this important matter and act early so as to avert the dangers which threaten New England and which have such grave implications to the Nation as a whole.

With assurances of my esteem and high regard,

Faithfully and respectfully yours,

H. C. LODGE, Jr.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, October 1, 1942.

Hon. H. C. LODGE, Jr.,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR LODGE: I have read with much interest your letter of September 4, and the enclosed copy of S. 2716, a bill to establish a National Petroleum Administration, which you have introduced in the Senate.

I share your view that governmental control and direction of the problem of petroleum supply should be centralized in a single agency. An intensive study has been under way for some time to determine the type of organization best suited to accomplish this objective and so designed as to fit into the over-all pattern of organization of the war agencies. A decision on this matter may be expected within the near future.

Since statutory powers already exist to create, by Executive order, an agency with adequate power and responsibility to deal with the oil problem, I do not think that new legislation in this field is necessary at this time.

Steps have already been taken to ration fuel oil in the States on the Atlantic seaboard and in the Midwest in order to distribute the available supplies equitably among all affected. Affirmative action has also been taken to increase both the production of fuel oil and the ability of our transportation system to move such oil to the areas of shortage.

I have been assured by the agencies that are primarily concerned that there will be adequate fuel oil supplies for all military and essential industrial requirements, and that all possible measures are being effected to minimize the shortage of fuel oil for civilian consumption.

I appreciate your interest in this matter and I am glad to have had the opportunity to express to you my views on it.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. LODGE. In his reply the President stated that he thought the idea of a unified petroleum administration was good, and thanked me for my interest. However, nothing was done, until December 3 when, at long last, Mr. Ickes was given some of the authority that he needed. I say some of the authority, because he still has not enough power to do the things which he knows should be done.

I spoke of contradictory regulations. Let us look at the record. Originally, the Office of Price Administration conceived the beautiful theory—and I use the word "theory" advisedly—that in order to ration the New England public to 75 percent of the amount of oil consumed last year they would freeze the industry and allow oil companies to sell 75 percent of the amount sold last year to their respective customers. This policy resulted also in freezing the customers. If a major oil company, for example, sold to a number of oil marketers a certain amount of petroleum products in the fall of 1941 and the spring of 1942, then he could this year sell but 75 percent of that amount in the fall of 1942 and the spring of 1943.

The public, through various rationing boards, were given coupons. These coupons were supposed to represent about 75 percent of the amount of oil each consumer used in the last heating season. That rule, of course, did not work. Some companies had gone out of business. Their customers could get no oil from anybody under that ruling. Some oil companies discriminated in favor of their better customers; and so the O. P. A. changed the rule. It promulgated another rule 3 weeks ago. The new rule stated that any person with money and coupons would have to receive oil. Chaos followed the rule. A small oil company which bought its oil from a major company and which had depended upon the major company for supplies for years was told that no longer could it be sold its supplies.

So the picture changed for the worse. Small independent oil marketing were forced to drive their trucks from one major oil company to another major oil company in the hope—often a vain hope—that they could buy oil for their customers. About half the time they could not buy anything. The cupboard was bare. On February 3 that order was revoked. As if those conditions were not enough to drive oil marketers and consumers to the belief that they were the forgotten people of this country, the Petroleum Administration for War issued a decree in December setting forth a list of priorities which, said P. A. W., must be provided with oil. These priorities naturally included hospitals, transportation companies, and all departments having to do with the public safety and public health. The utilities of necessity were listed on this priority scale. So the major oil companies found themselves facing a fine of $10,000 from W. P. B. if they did not sell their product to those on the priority list established by W. P. B. They faced another fine from O. P. A. if they refused to sell oil to anyone who proffered coupons and cash. Orders and cancelations of orders came too fast. Rules clashed, confusion resulted and still continues.

I ask, in all fairness, how any honest, intelligent human being or industry could operate under such conditions.

Those are only the most recent examples of bungling. Let us go back to the time when the O. P. A. announced that coupons would be good for 10 gallons. They are no longer worth 10 gallons; they are worth 8 gallons. Let us think back to October 13. At that time the Governors of the six New England States came to Washington and consulted with Mr. Ickes and with the President of the United States. Mr. Ickes told them that they would receive 75 percent of last year's consumption. What the President told them I do not know. All I can say is that the Governors said they were very optimistic after having talked with the President; so it is reasonable to assume that he reassured them.

It must be remembered that such technicalities as "degree days" and the relationship of "degree days" to the consumption of oil are technical matters about which the New England public has had no cause to be concerned. "Degree day" is a technical expression. It means the number of degrees on any day below 65°. If, for example, the temperature on any given day averaged 30°, that day would be a 35° day. Oil companies use the "degree day" system and know when customers' tanks are empty. The practical public knows only that the colder the weather the more oil they burn, which is enough for them to be concerned about. So when O. P. A. blithely announced that the public would receive 75 percent of its last year's consumption, a few commented that the season of 1941 and 1942 was about 10 percent warmer than average. The authorities either knew or should have known that 1941-42 was not a normal year and that by promising 75 percent they aroused false hopes on the part of the public.

Let me put it another way. The last heating season was a 90-percent heating season. Seventy-five percent of 90 meant that the public, at most, would receive only 66 percent of the oil it needed for a normal year. O. P. A. founded its rationing plan on what it thought was the rock of temperature, but it knew, or should have known, that actually it founded the rationing plan on the shifting sands of New England's varying temperatures.

So far—to make conditions worse—the winter in Massachusetts is 12 percent colder than normal. Rationing coupons for the present heating period have been cut in value from 10 gallons to 8 gallons, a reduction of 20 percent. Hence, the public who looked with confidence to our Government and who naturally expected to receive 75 percent of their normal oil requirements have found—what? They have found that they have coupons for only 50 percent of the oil they need in order to keep warm for the remainder of the winter. There is no assurance that they will receive even that much oil.

At this point let me take up the question of conversions. People were urged to convert their heating plants from oil to coal.

They made inquiry and found there were no parts available. Later the W. P. B. made available some iron with which to make grates. Gradually the public started again to take heart. But on October 14 O. P. A. got busy. On that date a ceiling price was placed on grates. Grates at the foundry were priced at 11 cents a pound. The wholesalers bought the grates from the foundry at 11 cents. But O. P. A. put a ceiling price on the wholesalers, too. That ceiling price was 13.75 cents a pound—a so-called profit of 2¾ cents a pound. For that sum the wholesaler was supposed to truck the grates from the freight yard to his warehouse, inventory them, sell them, and pay the freight on them when he sold them. The wholesalers lost money on every transaction. So they stopped handling them. People who wanted to convert could not get the necessary parts.

That ceiling price lasted from October 14 to November 26—during the very 6 weeks when conversions would have been made. So, on the one hand, people were urged to convert, and then price ceilings made it impossible for them to get the parts. Meantime, O. P. A. officials kept repeating that the public would get 75 percent of its oil. The price ceiling was lifted to 15.75 cents a pound to the wholesaler only after cold weather had set in. Planned economy!

I believe that the people have the right to look to their Government for help in time of crisis. Those who did look to their Government for help were sadly misled. But let us go on.

It is tragic but true that if the disaster now confronting Massachusetts and New England could better be seen, more help from the Federal Government would be forthcoming. I know how the American people react to a visible catastrophe. When the Mississippi overflowed its banks and people were driven from their homes, the generosity of the American public sent food and clothing and materials to the flood victims. But the tragedy in New England is not visible. It is hidden behind the four walls of each home. A temperature of 65°, as was promised by the O. P. A., might be comfortable, but temperatures running in thousands of homes as low as 50° are not comfortable or conducive to health. These low temperatures have caused sickness and hardship and suffering. But the tragedies cannot be seen.

Let me speak for a moment about the 500,000 persons in New England who depend upon kerosene for their only fuel. Kerosene is distributed by peddlers. The peddlers buy their kerosene from an oil company and peddle it up and down the streets. The families to whom they sell the kerosene usually buy 5 gallons at a time, enough to last a day or 2, depending upon the weather. But in Boston, Lowell, Lawrence, Brockton, Fall River, New Bedford, and other of our communities the peddlers were unable to get the kerosene they needed in order to take care of their customers. For weeks in October and November the peddlers were instructed by O. P. A. not to take oil coupons from their customers. They were told to accept promises that the coupons would be given to them later. The reason is simple—the coupons were not then available. The rationing boards did not have them. After between fifteen and eighteen million gallons of kerosene had been sold the coupons became available. The consumers went to the rationing boards and got their coupons. Many of the peddlers are of foreign extraction. So are many of their customers. Many of the peddlers cannot read or write and are unable to digest ever-changing rules, and say so frankly. Neither can many of their customers. So we have the picture of a situation developed by O. P. A. where a peddler, unable to read or write, or harassed by complex procedure, was supposed to get from a customer who could neither read nor write a promise that when coupons were available he would turn them over to the peddler. The result, of course, was chaos. Some customers refused to pay the peddler for kerosene and said the Government would do it. Some refused to give their coupons to the peddler in spite of their promises. Coupons worth 15,000,000 gallons of petroleum products are still floating around. I have been told, although I do not know it of my own personal knowledge, that there is a black market on them now.

Meantime, however, someone conceived the idea of shipping oil, both kerosene and furnace oil, in steel drums which hold 53 or 54 gallons. The drums could be packed in freight cars. Each freight car—and there are still enough freight cars available, although tank cars are short—could be packed with 195 drums. So packed, each boxcar could carry about 10,000 gallons of precious oil. That is as much as even the largest tank cars can handle. The Army had thousands of those drums, and were not using them.

At first the idea was pooh-poohed. Then it was said that the cost would be too great. As though cost should be allowed to matter. Finally it was agreed that the Defense Supplies Corporation would pay the extra freight and handling charge. So some freight cars were shipped full of kerosene oil. They arrived in Boston, and 20 of them were unloaded on a specially built unloading platform. It was zero weather. Because of those 20 cars, some 40,000 families received 5 gallons of kerosene—a whole day's supply. I hope there is a thought there that the authorities here will develop and take prompt advantage of.

Now comes the other side of the picture. The Defense Supplies Corporation now refuses to pay the extra charges. Oil dealers find themselves unable to collect for the costs. Is this America?

Let me stress the importance of this matter not only in regard to the people who live in New England and whose health and the welfare of whose children depends upon an adequate supply of fuel oil, but from the standpoint of war production; because in the area where I live a very large war industry is located.

In Massachusetts and, I believe, in other sections of New England, a great many plants making goods that are needed by the armed forces have been forced to curtail operations and in some cases to stop.

It is incidental that schools have been closed in 17 different communities in Massachusetts. Only by the dint of the greatest ingenuity and effort have some essential war industries been kept operating. That picture is bad enough, but when I say to the Senate that bowling alleys, country clubs, and other nonessential plants have been furnished petroleum for heating while our war industries have been in danger of closing, and in some cases have been closed, because of lack of fuel oil, Senators can see for themselves the absence of foresight and brains on the part of the bureaucracies involved in this petroleum mess.

Even institutions such as hospitals have been in danger of closing. I cannot understand why some form of priority has not been evolved for the utilization of fuel oil just as in the case of every other material resource of war.

Vainly did I plead with W. P. B. to have petroleum placed on priority just as are steel, copper, manganese, rubber, and other war essentials. This war is being fought for and by petroleum. Yet we have the picture of the War Production Board—notice the word "War"—and the Petroleum Administrator for War—again note the word "War"—saying that the war was responsible for the shortage of oil for heating. It is said the military authorities unexpectedly seized the supply of petroleum destined for New England. I talked with the military, and they said: "If the choice is between the homes of New England and the troops of north Africa, we will give your people every consideration. But as long as it is a question as between pleasure resorts and the troops in north Africa, the troops in north Africa will come first." I agree; I cannot disagree.

Mr. President, in the name of New England, and particularly in the name of my own State, Massachusetts, I ask that 1,500 more tank cars be assigned immediately to bring heating oil into New England. In the name of Massachusetts, I ask that all nonessential buildings burning oil for heat be denied oil until this crises is over. In the name of Massachusetts, I ask that more 53-gallon drums of oil be shipped in box cars from the oil fields into New England. In the name of Massachusetts, I ask that inventories be published daily or weekly so the public may know what to expect. In the name of Massachusetts, I ask that the minimum essential civilian needs be met forthwith, to the end that the suffering of mothers and children may cease, and that our war work may be maintained.

MERGER OF TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—AUTHORITY TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to file a conference report on Senate bill 158 during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session. The request is made solely for the personal convenience of the Senator from Arizona. I desire to be out of town on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, let me say that it is hoped, or at least the Senate conferees hope, that a complete agreement with respect to the bill will be reached at a conference to be held this afternoon. I understood that the Senator from Arizona desires to leave town for a short while, and that his request contemplated only permission to file the report during the recess or adjournment of the Senate, if the report should be agreed upon this afternoon.

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

RESCINDING OF 3-PERCENT INCREASE IN AGRICULTURAL FREIGHT RATES—STATEMENT BY FRED BRENCKMAN

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a summary of a statement made before the Interstate Commerce Commission by Mr. Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange. Mr. Brenckman made the statement in support of the application by the National Grange and other farm groups to have rescinded the 3-percent increase in railroad freight rates on agricultural products, which went into effect March 18, 1942.

While I have the floor, I wish to state that I am in complete accord with the position taken and the statement made by Mr. Brenckman. The railroads today are receiving the highest revenues in their history. I call attention to Mr. Brenckman's statement that operating revenues for the first 11 months of 1942 increased 39 percent over the corresponding period in 1941, that passenger revenues increased 97 percent, and that net income increased 41 percent.

I also call attention to the fact that after the I. C. C. order allowing the 3-percent increase in agricultural rates went into effect, a transportation tax of 3 percent was levied under the 1942 Revenue Act, making the increase in effect 6 percent. I cannot see the reason for the 3-percent increase in freight rates on farm commodities when manifestly the railroads do not need the revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In appearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission on behalf of the National Grange, in January 1942, with reference to the petition of the railroads for a 10-percent increase in freight and passenger rates, we opposed any increase in the freight rates on agricultural commodities but offered no objections to an increase in passenger rates.

We were perfectly sensible of the fact that the increase in wages for railroad workers recommended by the mediators appointed by the President would call for increased revenues on the part of the carriers. However, we expressed the opinion that the increase in traffic of all kinds occasioned by the war emergency would provide ample revenue to meet the situation. We also had in mind the fact that passenger traffic would reach new high levels, and that an increase of 10 percent in passenger fares would probably produce hundreds of millions of dollars in added revenue.

As figures of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself so conclusively demonstrate, these expectations have been fully realized. The record shows that the operating revenues of the railroads for the first 11 months of 1942 amounted to more than $6,763,000,000, as compared with $4,867,000,000, for the same period in 1941. This represented an increase of 39 percent. During the first 11 months of 1942 the revenues derived from passenger traffic rose to $909,000,000, compared with $460,818,000 in the first 11 months of 1941. This represents an increase of more than 97 percent. Comparing November 1941 with November 1942, the increase in revenues from passenger traffic amounted to more than 166 percent.

After paying all operating expenses and making allowance for tax accruals, the carriers had a net income of $1,473,762,000 during the first 11 months of 1942. This was an increase of more than 41 percent as compared with the previous 11 months.

We hold that it is not in accord with sound public policy for the railroads to earn so much in excess of all their expenses. While freight and passenger rates should, of course, be compensatory, the excess earnings of the roads under present conditions cannot be justified.

One of the most important battles we have to fight on the home front is the battle against inflation. The Government has set up elaborate machinery to protect the country against the evils of inflation, but in spite of all the efforts that have thus far been put forth, prices continue to rise and the inflationary spiral threatens the well-being and security of every man, woman, and child in the country.

Higher transportation rates are naturally reflected in the price of commodities transported. Higher transportation costs also reduce the net returns of agriculture. The farmer pays freight rates both ways, and he is hit both coming and going by the higher rates that are now in effect.

The farther the farmer lives from market, the more he is penalized by higher transportation rates. As an illustration of the hardships under which agricultural producers on the Pacific slope are laboring, it should be kept in mind that the intercoastal steamship service has been discontinued. To clearly illustrate what this means, let me quote just a few preemergency intercoastal steamship rates and compare them with current railroad rates in carload lots: Wool in bags, $1.18 per hundred pounds, and $2.40; canned fruits and vegetables, 58 cents and $1.08; dried fruits, 69 cents and $1.28; eggs, $1.50 and $1.91; apples, $1.10 and $1.25; rye grass seed, 60 cents and $1.03; agricultural implements other than hand, 77 cents and $1.98; wheat to Savannah, Ga., $6 per net ton and $22.20 per ton. Steamship rates quoted apply from principal Pacific ports to principal Atlantic ports of the United States, and rail rates except on wheat, apply from north Pacific terminals to New York City and related points.

In addition to this, it is pertinent to say that since the 3-percent increase in freight rates on agricultural commodities took effect, under the present revenue act a 3-percent tax on all transportation of property within the United States was levied. To all practical intents and purposes this amounts to the same thing as a 6-percent increase in rates on agricultural commodities.

The task devolving upon the American farmer in this hour of crisis is to produce the food and fiber needed to feed and clothe our armed forces and the civilian population, besides making up the deficiencies of our allies. This is a huge responsibility, and the farmer is already laboring under many severe handicaps, including the most acute shortage of labor in our agricultural history. He is short of equipment and supplies, and the returns he receives for his products are insufficient to enable him to compete with the war industries for skilled and competent labor. Rescinding the 3-percent increase in freight rates which is now in effect would materially assist agriculture in achieving the production goals that have been set by the Government itself.

In recognition of the supreme importance of maximum production of meat, dairy, and poultry products, in particular, prices of corn and wheat have been fixed to bring these grains within easier reach of the livestock producer, the feeder, the dairyman, and the poultryman.

According to an inventory made by the Department of Agriculture, nearly 2,000,000 hogs, including pigs, are on the farms of the Dakotas, and nearly two and one-half million in Nebraska. The figure for the States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho is over a million. California alone has close to a million.

In normal times very little corn is produced in the mountain-Pacific area. Formerly most of the corn consumed on the Pacific coast was transported by water. Today all feed grains are carried by the railroads.

Lower freight rates in this connection will stimulate our food-for-freedom program.

FARM PRODUCTION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the American farmer is being called upon these days to make superhuman efforts to produce food for a good part of the world. And he is being asked to do this with diminished manpower—reports are that this shortage amounts to more than 3,000,000 men—and with inadequate machinery.

It is true that farm income, measured in dollars, is the highest in history. But it also is true that production costs are rising, and rising rapidly.

Several governmental agencies having to do with farm production and farm income are proposing, in fact, trying to put into effect a huge subsidy program, through which instead of receiving fair prices for his products, the farmer will receive subsidies from the Treasury.

I feel, and have felt all along, that if our American way of life is to be preserved on the home front, the farmer should receive fair prices for his products, not prices admittedly below cost of production, the difference being made up by means of subsidies.

I am not one of those who believe that the way to maintain the economic freedom of the farmer is to make him dependent upon the Federal Treasury for his income. That is the road to national socialism, the other word for which is nazi-ism. I know the farmers feel the same way about it. Farmers want to produce on their own; they want to market on their own; they want to feel that they are earning their own way in the world, not that they are being supported by a paternalistic government. They know that a paternalistic government soon becomes a despotic government.

In this connection I ask unanimous consent to have placed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a joint statement from the heads of three major national farm organizations of America.

As spokesmen for the great bulk of family farm production in the Nation, Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation; Albert S. Goss, master of the National Grange; and Ezra T. Benson, executive secretary of the National Council of Farm Cooperatives, assert in this statement that only the American farm family stands between the United Nations and hunger. They are unanimous in their opinion that an immediate right-about-face by Government in many of its agricultural policies and programs is imperative if we are to avert grave food shortages.

There being no objection, the joint statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Today the American farm family stands between a large part of the world and hunger.

Only through the initiative, the ingenuity, and the hard work of our farm families can our people, our armed forces, and our allies possibly be fed.

American farmers are handicapped and the food supply for the United Nations jeopardized by:

(1) The Government's manpower and labor policies;

(2) The confusion and loss of confidence created by an impractical and wasteful bureaucracy more concerned with social experimentation than the production of food;

(3) The policy of using subsidies in lieu of a fair return to the farmer in the market place.

As spokesmen for the national farm organizations, which represent the great bulk of family farm production in the Nation, it is our unanimous opinion that an immediate right-about-face by government on these policies is imperative.

We emphasize the vital necessity on the part of Government to take such steps promptly as will restore the confidence of farmers and end confusion.

We are unalterably opposed to the use of subsidies in lieu of a fair return in the market place. The Department of Agriculture has announced a program of so-called incentive payments for the production of certain crops. We insist that these payments as now projected are nothing but subsidies disguised. Despite repeated protests, it continues to be the policy of the administration to restrict returns to farmers by ceilings and to attempt to compensate them by subsidies with their attendant uncertainties. For the first time in 20 years, normal adjustments in the national economy, if permitted to function, would put the farmer on an equal basis with American labor and industry.

We warn that any economy which does not pay the cost of its food bill will inevitably collapse. If this situation persists, we consider it a grave danger to the Nation.

We insist upon price-control policies which will assure maximum production as the best protection against both inflation and hunger.

We urge an immediate reduction in nondefense expenditures and in the volume of directives sent out from Washington. We also urge a decentralization and restriction of the enormously expensive bureaucracy which polices these orders.

Finally, we recommend that immediate assurance be given American farmers by the Congress and the administration of their intention to preserve agriculture as an independent and self-supporting industry.

ALBERT S. GOSS,
Master, the National Grange.
EDWARD A. O'NEAL,
President, American Farm Bureau Federation.
EZRA T. BENSON,
National Council of Farmer Cooperatives.

MAXIMUM PRICES ON PORK AND BEEF PRODUCTS AND BREAD AND BAKERY PRODUCTS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, I ask unanimous consent that further consideration of Senate Resolution 94 be deferred until next Thursday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, automatically the resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. REED. I am asking unanimous consent that it remain in its present position.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should have to object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces that the morning hour having expired, the resolution, under the precedents of the Senate, will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. REED. I serve notice that at the next meeting of the Senate I shall move to take it from the calendar and make it the business of the Senate.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the calling of the calendar for the consideration of bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order that Senators may be present, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Aiken | Green | Radcliffe |
| Andrews | Guffey | Reed |
| Austin | Gurney | Revercomb |
| Bailey | Hatch | Reynolds |
| Ball | Hawkes | Robertson |

| Downey | Nye | Wherry |
| Ferguson | O'Daniel | White |
| George | O'Mahoney | Wiley |
| Gerry | Overton | Willis |
| Gillette | Pepper | Wilson |

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Clerk will report the first bill on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 217) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to requisition property required for the defense of the United States, approved October 16, 1941, to continue it in effect" was announced as first in order.

Mr. McNARY. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS

The bill (S. 218) to authorize relief of disbursing officers of the Army on account of loss or deficiency of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in their charge, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think these bills relating to Army officers should be explained by the author. I have asked that the first bill go over for today. To the second I have no objection. The first one I believe has gone over.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, Senate bill 218 provides that the General Accounting Office shall relieve any disbursing officer of the Army charged with responsibility on account of loss or deficiency, while in line of duty, of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in his charge, when such loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on the part of the officer.

The bill also provides that the Secretary of War shall have determined that the officer was in line of duty, and that the loss or deficiency occurred without fault or negligence on his part. It further provides that the determination by the Secretary of War of the aforesaid questions shall be conclusive upon the General Accounting Office. Provision is also made that all cases of relief granted under this authority during any fiscal year shall be reported in detail to the Congress. It is further provided that the bill shall be applicable only to actual physical loss of Government funds, vouchers, records, or papers, and shall not include deficiencies in the accounts of disbursing officers of the Army resulting from illegal or erroneous payments which might have been made by the disbursing officers.

In 1919 Congress enacted into law the act of July 11, 1919, which provides for the relief of disbursing officers of the Navy under circumstances similar to those proposed in the pending bill. The language of the bill now before us follows that of the act relating to the Navy, the only changes being those made necessary by reason of its application to the Army instead of to the Navy.

Heretofore, when Army disbursing officers lost records by reason of fire or storm or under unusual circumstances, the facts of each case were presented to Congress and relief requested for each officer. Under present conditions accountable disbursing officers are required to make shipments of funds, vouchers, records, and papers, by every means of transportation, such as the airplane, boat, and so on. It is a hazardous undertaking, and if loss occurs in making such shipments the Department, without the proposed legislation, would have to submit each loss to Congress for relief, as heretofore they have done, or as they did prior to the enactment of a similar law applying to disbursing officers of the Navy.

Under present war conditions the physical loss of funds and of vouchers, records, and papers, resulting from enemy action or due to accidental circumstances, might occur with increasing frequency.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are there such cases? Have such cases been reported? Is there some specific case to be settled, or is this a provision for the future?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is a general provision such as has been made for the disbursing officers of the Navy. As I have just stated, prior to this date, in the case of every loss by accident or otherwise, it has been necessary to make specific reports to Congress. For instance, recently moneys were sent to South Africa, and it was the understanding of all of us, through the columns of the press, that great sums of money were lost. That is a specific instance of a loss. From time to time there will be occurrences of this sort. This measure is merely to cover the disbursing officers of the Army as heretofore the naval disbursing officers have been covered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, there is one provision of the bill which does not meet my approval at all. On page 2 of the bill it is provided:

> The determination by the Secretary of War of the aforesaid questions shall be conclusive upon the General Accounting Office.

The General Accounting Office is set up by the Congress for the purpose of ascertaining the very things mentioned in the bill. For instance, suppose a claim is made, which the Secretary of War allows in due course, probably never looking at it, some subordinate examining it, but suppose it is approved and is sent in. Suppose the General Accounting Office, which we have set up to examine into just such claims, finds the facts to be diametrically opposed to what is sent up by the Department. It is provided in the bill—

> The determination by the Secretary of War of the aforesaid questions shall be conclusive upon the General Accounting Office.

I do not think such a provision should be in the law. I doubt the wisdom of the general authority proposed, because we have the General Accounting Office to examine into such matters, and the Congress will always appropriate the necessary money in cases where the General Accounting Office reports in a way favorable to the claimant. It seems to me this would be very unwise legislation. It is too general; it is too all-inclusive; it rules out the General Accounting Office, which is a congressional set-up, not an administration set-up, an agency provided by Congress to pass on just such things as are covered by the bill.

I think I shall ask that the bill go over for today, if the Senator is not too insistent on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

EQUALIZATION OF CERTAIN DISABILITY BENEFITS FOR ARMY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 219) to equalize certain disability benefits for Army officers was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will not the Senator from North Carolina explain the bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The purpose of the bill is to place all officers of the Army of the United States on the same basis, with respect to certain benefits, now authorized for disability incurred in line of duty.

Under existing law, officers of the Regular Army, the National Guard of the United States, and of the Officers Reserve Corps, if retired or relieved from active duty by reason of physical disability, receive retired or retirement pay, computed on the basis of their commissions in the respective components of the Army of the United States to which they belong. The fact that they may have held or are holding temporary higher rank in the Army of the United States would have no effect, although undoubtedly a majority of such officers will be holding higher temporary rank.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Who is supposed to be discriminated against and for whom is the bill presented?

Mr. REYNOLDS. My understanding is that the discrimination is between those holding temporary higher rank and those holding permanent higher rank in the same category.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. If I understand the bill, it makes the law now applicable to similar officers of the Navy applicable to officers of the Army?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is quite true.

Mr. LODGE. It puts the civilian officer, the National Guard officer, or Reserve officer on the same footing with the Regular officer.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is the purpose of the bill. Thus, an officer in the Officers' Reserve Corps, commissioned therein as a captain but holding temporary rank in the Army of the United States as a lieutenant colonel or a colonel, would, if relieved from active duty because of physical disability, receive the retirement pay of a captain, although his service until the time of disability may have been in a much higher temporary grade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer of the Army of the United States or of any component thereof, except an officer of the Regular Army, who incurs physical disability while serving under a temporary appointment in a higher grade and becomes entitled to retirement pay because of such disability shall receive retirement pay computed as otherwise provided by law for officers of such higher grade.

SEC. 2. Any officer of the Regular Army who heretofore or hereafter has been or may be retired for physical disability determined or incurred while serving under a temporary appointment in a higher grade shall have the rank and receive retired pay computed as otherwise provided by law officers of such higher grade.

SEC. 3. Any officer of the Regular Army on the retired list who shall have been placed thereon for reasons other than physical disability, shall, if he incurs physical disability while serving under a temporary appointment in a higher grade, be promoted on the retired list to such higher grade and receive retired pay computed as otherwise provided by law for an officer of such higher grade retired on account of physical disability incident to the service.

SEC. 4. Any officer of the Regular Army on the retired list who shall have been placed thereon by reason of physical disability shall, if he incurs additional physical disability while serving under a temporary appointment in a higher grade, be promoted on the retired list to such higher grade and receive retired pay computed as otherwise provided by law for officers of such higher grade: Provided, That the Secretary of War, or such person or persons as he may designate, shall find that the additional physical disability is incident to service while on active duty in the higher grade and not less than 30 percent permanent.

SEC. 5. Any officer of the Regular Army on the retired list who shall have been placed thereon for reasons other than physical disability shall, if he incurs physical disability while serving on active duty in the same grade as that held by him on the retired list, receive retired pay computed as otherwise provided by law for officers of such grade retired on account of physical disability incident to the service.

SEC. 6. The benefits of this act shall apply to officers of the Army of the United States who were retired subsequent to April 6, 1917, or who may hereafter be retired for physical disability in line of duty in time of war or any emergency declared by the President, or within 6 months thereafter, determined or incurred while serving under a temporary appointment in a higher grade, including any officer given a temporary appointment in a higher grade under the act of June 16, 1936, who has been retired for physical disability in a lower grade.

SEC. 7. The provisions of this act shall not apply in any case unless proceedings to obtain the benefits provided herein are initiated within 6 months from the termination of the temporary appointment held at the time when the disability is incurred or the disabled officer's release from active duty, whichever occurs earlier: Provided, That such proceedings may be initiated within 6 months from the date of the approval of this act in any case where such termination of appointment, retirement, or release from active duty occurred prior to such approval. The Secretary of War is authorized to prescribe such regulations as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. Nothing contained herein shall be construed to limit the power of the President under existing law, or to affect the right of any officer of the Regular Army to have the rank and retired pay of a higher grade than herein provided, or of any other officer of the Army of the United States to have the retirement pay of a higher grade than herein provided, if entitled thereto under other provisions of law.

SEC. 9. No back pay shall accrue by reason of the enactment of this act. The provisions of this act shall not otherwise affect the method in which officers are to be retired.

"THEY PLOTTED 'BUNDLES FOR CONGRESS' "—ARTICLE FROM PIC

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, about a year ago there was enacted by the Congress of the United States and signed by the President a pension law, and subsequently that pension law was repealed. We all remember the campaign which was conducted to smear Congress and to vilify certain Members of Congress relative to their activities and their votes on that measure. I did not happen to be present at that time; I was sick in the hospital; but I followed it with a good deal of interest.

Recently, there has come to my attention an article in a magazine called Pic, which discusses the two authors of the move for "Bundles for Congress" and the campaign to vilify and smear Congress because of their action on the pension bill. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to these two men. One is a man by the name of Joe Albi. He was a representative of the Italian Government. He was an Italian consul in the western part of this country, and served as the acting consular agent for the Italian Government until July 15, 1941, when the consular office was closed by order of the President.

The second is a man named Ashley Holden. He was connected with the Spokane Spokesman-Review. He was secretary of the Seattle Japan Society. He assisted the Japanese Government in this country, and he aided in the publication of the All-Japanese Society Bulletin. He admitted that he had taken a trip to Japan, and that expenses had been paid by the All-Japanese Society.

It is an interesting thing that in a very critical era of this country, when Congress passed a pension bill, regardless of the merits of that plan, the leadership of the campaign to smear and vilify Congress was taken by two men who had official or friendly connections with two governments with which we are now at war, namely Italy and Japan, as I have indicated. I think it is well that we take note of the record. These men inspired the campaign. It was at their instigation that the move was made which swept all over the country.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point the article from the magazine Pic entitled "They Plotted 'Bundles for Congress.'"

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THEY PLOTTED "BUNDLES FOR CONGRESS"

Shortly after the passage of the act which authorized members of Congress to enter the retirement system applying to Government employees, one Joe Albi, of Spokane, Wash., who is the leading spirit of a play organization known as the Athletic Knights of the Round Table, conceived the idea of the bundles campaign. In order to publicize it, he sought and received the assistance of one Ashley Holden, a political and editorial writer on a newspaper called the Spokesman-Review of Spokane, Wash., which is the largest daily in eastern Washington. The campaign to smear Congress was then set in motion by these two men.

Their previous affiliations are all the more interesting by reason of their authorship of this campaign of vilification.

Joe Albi is an American-born Italian, and is a practicing attorney in Spokane. On November 11, 1929, he was appointed acting consular agent of the Italian Government. He served in this capacity until July 15, 1941, when, on the President's orders, all Italian consular offices were closed. Italy is under a dictatorship, and dominated entirely by the personality of one man—Mussolini. Serving in the capacity mentioned, Albi thus became and remained the personal representative of Benito Mussolini until July 15, 1941.

As a coauthor of the Bundles for Congress campaign, his past connection with the Fascist government is interesting—and significant.

Ashley Holden is influential in shaping the editorial policy of the Spokesman-Review. He had been frequently regarded by citizens of the State of Washington as a publicist of Japanese business interests. He had appeared in the political picture of the Pacific Northwest at times when protests were being registered against the sale of scrap iron to Japan. His expressed friendship for the Japanese and the Japanese Government made his attitude in such matters very evident to the people of that section.

A Japanese lawyer by the name of Thomas S. Masuda was recently placed on trial in the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, at Seattle. Ashley Holden had been in touch with an agent of our Government, and gave that agent certain information about Masuda. The Government then subpenaed him as a witness, but when he appeared at trial time he surprised the Government attorneys by stating that he did not recall making the statements to the agent attributed to him, whereupon the Government dismissed him as a witness. Holden immediately was examined by Masuda's lawyer and became a favorable witness on behalf of the defendant, who was charged with being an unregistered agent of the Japanese and acquitted.

Holden testified at the Masuda trial that he has been in the newspaper business for approximately 20 years; that he had resided in Spokane for 6 years, and, prior to that time, had resided in Seattle for about 15 years. He testified that he had known Masuda for at least 15 years, and that he had had business, professional, and social contacts many times with the defendant, Masuda. He further testified that he had been a member and also secretary of the Seattle-Japan Society, which was an American organization, composed of businessmen, professional men, educators, clergymen, and outstanding Japanese businessmen. The primary purpose of the organization was to promote trade and commerce between this country and Japan.

He stated that he had been personally acquainted with all the Japanese consuls in Seattle since 1919. He stated that when Masuda graduated from law school, he (Holden) endeavored to help him get established in the legal profession. He testified that he had met Masuda at Olympia, the State capital. He stated that Masuda was much interested in the resolution before the legislature which called for an embargo on material being shipped to Japan.

In response to questions by counsel for Masuda, he testified that out of his experience and acquaintanceship with Japanese, it was quite customary for the Japanese to make gifts to friends or acquaintances, and to those who had done favors for them, and that he had been the recipient of such gifts upon numerous occasions, including gifts from the last Japanese consul in Seattle.

Holden stated that the Japan Society published a bulletin for its own members called the Japan Society Bulletin, and that he assisted.

Holden testified that the Japan Society of Seattle was organized in 1923, and that he served in a purely honorary capacity until about 1927 or 1928, at which time he was paid a monthly stipend for 2 or 3 years, until he resigned the position to leave Seattle. He testified that he had run for a post on the city council of the city of Seattle, and that at that time he had been known as "Banzai" Holden; that he had been the subject of cartoons which identified him as "Banzai" Holden. He stated that the term "banzai" is a sort of salutation in Japanese. He further testified that he had made one trip to Japan in 1939, which was financed by the Japan Society, of which he was then secretary. He stated that the Seattle Japan Society did not furnish all the money for this trip, but that he took the trip "as its secretary."

He testified that the present Mrs. Masuda (wife of the defendant) was his secretary while he was acting as secretary of the Seattle Japan Society.

The long-time official agent of Benito Mussolini and the long-time friend of Japan must chuckle to themselves as they contemplate their cleverness in enlisting a considerable part of the press of the country in their campaign. Some good may come out of it since we now know how our domestic experts in smear technique set about to discredit a parliamentary body.

PROTECTION ON NAVIGABLE WATERS ENDANGERED BY BOMBING OR FIRING PRACTICE

The bill (S. 221) to amend sections 1 and 2 of chapter XIX of the Army Appropriation Act approved July 9, 1918, relating to protection of life and property in water endangered by activities of the Army, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of chapter XIX of the Army Appropriation Act approved July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 892), be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Protection of life and property in waters endangered by activities of the Army of the United States: That in the interest of the national defense, and for the better protection of life and property on the navigable waters of the United States or waters under the jurisdiction of the United States, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to prescribe such regulations as he may deem best for the use and navigation of any portion or area of said waters endangered or likely to be endangered by the Army of the United States while engaged in bombing or firing of any kind in target practice, or otherwise, in proving operations at any proving ground or elsewhere, or any other activities, and of any portion or area of said waters occupied by any plant or facility engaged in the execution of any public project of river and harbor improvement, or by submarine mines, mine fields, submarine cables, or other material and accessories of the Army of the United States: Provided, That the authority hereby conferred shall be so exercised as not unreasonably to interfere with or restrict the food fishing industry, and the regulations prescribed in pursuance hereof shall provide for the use of waters included in such regulations by food fishermen operating under permits granted by the War Department: Provided further, That said authority shall also be exercised as not to conflict with any duly authorized and promulgated order or regulation of the President or appropriate United States naval authority governing persons or vessels within the limits of any defensive sea areas or maritime control areas heretofore or hereafter established, or with any of the powers conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury by section 1, title II, of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 191), or on the Secretary of the Navy by section 2 of the act of November 15, 1941 (55 Stat. —; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 191a)."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act be, and is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That to enforce the regulations prescribed pursuant to this section, the Secretary of War may detail any public vessel, craft, facility, or agency in the service of the War Department, or, upon the request of the Secretary of War, the head of any other department may enforce, and the head of any such department is hereby authorized to enforce, such regulations by means of any public vessel, craft, facility, or agency of such department."

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND TO PUERTO RICO

The bill (S. 222) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the people of Puerto Rico certain real estate now under the jurisdiction of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, it is the purpose of this bill to transfer to the people of Puerto Rico a strip of land containing 1.26 acres, which is a part of the military reservation of San Juan, Puerto Rico, and no longer required by the Army. The property involved is a strip of land comprising a portion of the main reservation of the post of San Juan set aside by Executive order dated June 30, 1903. The strip fronts on property of the Government of Puerto Rico, and is bounded on the north by the Atlantic Ocean. This land is of no strategic value to the military post, and is desired by the people of Puerto Rico in connection with the extension and beautification of the land adjoining the Capitol building and the School of Tropical Medicine.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 222) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to convey to the people of Puerto Rico a strip of land containing 1.26 acres, more or less, located at Ward Puerta de Tierra of the municipality of San Juan, P. R., adjoining Salvador Brau Boulevard on the north, and comprising a portion of the San Juan Military Reservation, San Juan, P. R.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT FORT SILL, OKLA.

The bill (S. 223) to authorize the exchange of lands between the War Department and the Department of the Interior, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior that portion of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., now occupied by the Department of the Interior under revocable permit from the Secretary of War dated January 23, 1942, and in exchange therefor the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of War that portion of the Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge, Okla., now occupied by the War Department under permit from the Secretary of the Interior dated October 2, 1941.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The bill (S. 224) to authorize the exchange of lands in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., between the War Department and the city of Philadelphia, trustee under the will of Stephen Girard, deceased, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to the city of Philadelphia, trustee under the will of Stephen Girard deceased, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a triangular parcel of land containing 13,715.84 square feet, more or less, situated at the northeast corner of and comprising a portion of the Philadephia Quartermaster Depot, Pa., and fronting on Oregon Avenue east of Twenty-first Street in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., and to accept in exchange therefor the fee-simple title to a strip of land containing 9,819.75 square feet, more or less, and being the northern portion of what was formerly Johnston Street west of Twentieth Street in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., the exchange herein authorized to be made under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 220) to provide for payment of certain travel costs of dependents of military and civilian personnel of the Army and the War Department on a mileage basis in order to promote efficiency and economy in such payments was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LOANS FOR MINERAL DEVELOPMENT PURPOSES IN TIME OF WAR

The bill (S. 12) to amend the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes, as amended, by authorizing loans for mineral development purposes in time of war," was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRIDGES. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. RADCLIFFE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to order of business No. 11, Senate bill 12.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. The bill would increase the discretion which may be exercised by the R. F. C. in making loans to companies engaged in the development and production of minerals. As the law now stands, before such a loan can be made it is necessary that the R. F. C. find in advance that if the loan were made the company would probably be in a position to operate at a profit.

In view of the fact that the need for the development of mineral ores is increasing steadily the present restriction is onerous. All the bill would do would be to enable the R. F. C. to make a loan without first ascertaining whether the company could operate at a profit. The bill would suspend for the duration of the war the requirement that the R. F. C. make a finding in advance that the project can probably be operated at a profit.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the Senator's attention to order of business No. 13, Senate bill 381, which deals with the same subject. It is a bill to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to those desiring to engage in producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war. What is the relationship between the two bills? If one should be passed, why should the other one be also passed?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I believe that both bills should pass. The bill to which the able Senator from Michigan has made reference refers mainly to loans made to companies preparing to go into business. At present it is necessary that a company be already engaged in business. Under the provisions of Senate bill 381, a company would not be required to be in business at the present time. Therefore that bill would permit the R. F. C. to make loans to companies which are planning to go into business. In other words, Senate bill 381 is more or less of a companion bill to the one which we are now discussing, namely, Senate bill 12. It is certainly not antagonistic to it in any way. Senate bill 12 does not make any reference to new companies. It provides that it shall not be necessary to show that a profit would result from the intended operations. It might be that that point would be covered by the bill to which the able Senator from Michigan has referred. I am by no means sure, however, and I believe it would not be wise to act on such an assumption. Consequently we have both bills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there a difference between the bills in the basis upon which loans are to be made?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Since I have not charge of Senate bill 381, to which the Senator has referred, I hesitate to be positive in my reply as to the exact respective bases of the two bills.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Is it not true that under the present law a company must actually be engaged in mining operations before a loan can be made to it?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Yes; that is the situation.

Mr. HATCH. Under Senate bill 381, if a company were planning to go into business it could apply for a loan. That is the only difference.

Mr. VANDENBERG. During the morning hour today the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] had a great deal to say about confusion and chaos in the reference of Senate bills and resolutions. The two bills now under discussion were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Have they been correlated in any way?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. They have both been studied by the Committee on Banking and Currency; and it is quite possible that both bills could have been incorporated in one measure. However, they have been submitted as two separate bills and it seems to me to be advisable to allow them to continue to be considered as separate measures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What is the Senator's answer to my question, as to whether they provide different bases for making loans?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is this difference: Under the terms of the first bill, Senate bill 12, a company applying for a loan must already be engaged in the mining business. Under the terms of Senate bill 381, if a company, though actually not engaged in the mining business, desires to go into the development of mines, it may make an application for a loan. As the Senator from Maryland has said, the bills might have been combined, but they were not. They were introduced by different Members of the Senate, and for that reason they were reported separately.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would not the provisions of Senate bill 12 apply to the provisions of Senate bill 381, which also appears upon the calendar, if they should both be enacted?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so. I do not think the basis for the loans provided for in Senate bill 12 is the same as that in Senate bill 381.

Mr. BRIDGES. If Senate bill 12 were passed would it be necessary, under the provisions of Senate bill 381, to show that the company would be in position to earn a profit as a result of its operations?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. If Senate bill 12 were passed and became a law, it would not be necessary for the R. F. C. to submit an opinion in advance that a profit could be made. I presume that would apply as well to Senate bill 381.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. To help clarify the situation, let me say that in 1934 I introduced a measure which became section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, providing for loans to companies engaged in small mining operations. Senate bill 381 would amend that act and make it apply also to those who desire to engage in mining instead of only to those who are actually engaged in mining.

That is substantially the only change that would be made. Senate bill 381 has little or no connection with Senate bill 12, which is for the purpose of authorizing loans for mineral deposits based on ore development. The two bills are for different purposes.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Nevada one question pertaining to these two bills. Would the proposed authorization apply to strategic minerals only or to all minerals?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. It would apply to all minerals. However, it would apply primarily to strategic minerals. The section to which I referred applied originally to gold, silver, and tin. It was later amended to include all strategic minerals.

Mr. BRIDGES. Then it includes all minerals, and is not limited to strategic minerals.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That is correct.

Mr. BRIDGES. The objection I have to the proposed legislation, as I understand it, is that the proposal is made by Senate bill 12 to allow the R. F. C. to loan money to mining companies without first finding that a profit could probably be made, and to apply the authorization to all minerals, not limiting it to strategic minerals. I could see a reason for the proposed legislation if it were to be limited to strategic materials. I cannot see a reason for it if it is to be left wide open to all minerals.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Of course, the able Senator from New Hampshire realizes that this is permissive legislation. It would merely permit the R. F. C., whenever it seems to be necessary and desirable to make such loans, to go ahead and make them. It may be possible to define exactly what is strategic and what is not strategic, but the dividing line is not very clear and not very simple. It varies from time to time, and therefore it seems desirable that the R. F. C. should have wide discretion to make these loans without the previous finding which it now is required to make. I do not know whether it can be determined just where the dividing line should be. If the able Senator from New Hampshire can suggest some language by which that distinction can be outlined and emphasized, I shall be glad to consider it in the hope that a bill helping to provide substantially for what is required by our war program in such matters may be passed.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. As I understand the existing law, if a mineral were strategic and most vital the R. F. C. could not make a loan to a company producing such material unless it could show it could make a profit. Senate bill 12 is to correct that situation, is it not?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. That is the situation, exactly. It would eliminate for the time being the necessity of showing that operations can probably be conducted at a profit. I believe it is not desirable that such restrictions as exist at the present time should continue. It also seems that there should be a wide discretion in the R. F. C. in the making of these loans. We know that the needs of our war program in regard to metals vary. New needs arise from time to time for metals already regarded as strategic. Also now and then needs develop for metals which had not heretofore come under the classification of strategic or vital materials. I think it may be assumed that the R. F. C. will not launch upon a general campaign of making loans to companies where there is not any real need for strategic materials.

Mr. BRIDGES. Would the Senator have any objection to inserting in the bill the words "or strategic minerals," or "minerals to be used for the purpose of aiding the prosecution of the war effort," or something of that kind?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I should have no objection to such an idea being incorporated in general terms in the language of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think it would be most unfortunate to circumscribe the permission with a great many rules and regulations. Some ores are complex. Some of the minerals in the complex ores may not be strategic, while others are very strategic; and restrictions placed in the bill by the kind of definition suggested by the able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] might entirely defeat the objectives of the bill. As a matter of fact, almost no minerals are now being produced which are not critical or strategic. "Strategic" is a very technical term, and I believe it would be most unfortunate if the bill should be encumbered with any language of that kind.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill go over until further study can be made of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. RADCLIFFE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of Calendar No. 11, Senate bill No. 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 12) to amend the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," as amended, by authorizing loans for mineral development purposes in time of war, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 2, line 7, after the word "war" to insert "or on December 31, 1944."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 14 of the Act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1934, as amended (54 Stat. 897; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 606 (d)), as reads as follows: "when, in the opinion of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, there is sufficient reason to believe that, through the use of such loan in the development of a lode, ledge, or vein, or mineral deposit, or placer gravel deposit, there will be developed a sufficient quantity of ore, or placer deposits of a sufficient value to pay a profit upon mining operations," shall be suspended during the period commencing upon the date of enactment of this Act and ending 6 months after the termination of the present war or on December 31, 1944, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 40) to provide that the term of the Governor of Puerto Rico shall expire upon the enactment of this act and at the end of each 2-year period thereafter was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

R. F. C. LOANS TO PERSONS PRODUCING MINERALS OF VALUE TO UNITED STATES

The bill (S. 381) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to those desiring to engage in producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRIDGES. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SCRUGHAM subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of Calendar No. 13, Senate bill 381.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The clerk will read the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 381) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to those desiring to engage in producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I would have the same general objection to that bill that I had to Calendar No. 11, Senate bill No. 12. I believe the bill should be confined to strategic materials.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the bill passed without objection during the closing hours of the last session. In view of the lack of time it was not considered by the other House. It applies to minerals needed in the war. There is a difference between strategic minerals and critical minerals. Strategic minerals, generally speaking, are those which are not produced in sufficient quantity in the United States. A critical mineral is any mineral which is needed critically in the war program.

The bill is intended to apply to both strategic and critical minerals, but only to minerals needed in the war.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the bill so state?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator read the part of the bill which so states?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I ask that the bill be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 (authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for mineral development purposes) of the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1934, as amended (54 Stat. 897; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 606 (d)), is hereby amended by inserting in the second sentence of such section, after the words "engaged in" the words "or desiring to engage in."

SEC. 2. Section 14 of the act approved June 19, 1934, as amended (54 Stat. 897; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 606 (d)), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and adding the following: "Provided further, That nothing contained in this section, as amended and supplemented, shall be construed to limit or modify the authority to make mining or other loans vested in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by subparagraph 2 of the fourth paragraph of section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, or by any other act of Congress or Executive order."

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I do not see anything in the bill of the character indicated by me. So I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SCRUGHAM subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to the consideration of Calendar No. 13, Senate bill 381.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 381) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to those desiring to engage in producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. President, I offer a clarifying amendment: On page 2, line 2, after the words "engage in", I move to insert the words "producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to one further point. Calendar No. 11, Senate bill 12, dealing with the same subject or a related subject, is definite in its terms in respect to being restricted to the war period. Apparently the bill now under consideration very definitely should be restricted to the war period.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I have no objection to having such a provision added to the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that language similar to that contained in Senate bill No. 12 be added to the bill now under consideration, and in that connection, on page 2, after line 13, I suggest that the following language be added: "Provided further, That the authority herein contained shall end 6 months after the termination of the present war or on December 31, 1944, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate."

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That amendment is acceptable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 14 (authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans for mineral-development purposes) of the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1934, as amended (54 Stat. 897; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 606 (d)), is hereby amended by inserting in the second sentence of such section, after the words "engaged in," the words "or desiring to engage in" producing minerals of value to the United States in time of war.

SEC. 2. Section 14 of the act approved June 19, 1934, as amended (54 Stat. 897; U. S. C., title 15, sec. 606 (d)), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting a colon and adding the following: "Provided further, That nothing contained in this section, as amended and supplemented, shall be construed to limit or modify the authority to make mining or other loans vested in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by subparagraph 2 of the fourth paragraph of section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, or by any other act of Congress or Executive order. Provided further, That the authority herein contained shall end 6 months after the termination of the present war or on December 31, 1944, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate."

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 17) to provide for a temporary adjustment of salaries of the Metropolitan Police and the United States Park Police, the White House Police, and members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this bill and the bill immediately following should be passed over in the absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 17, Calendar No. 15, and Senate bill 18, Calendar No. 16, will be passed over.

The bill (S. 414) for the relief of Thaddeus C. Knight was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] favor us with an explanation of Senate bill 414?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like permission to return to that bill in a moment. I do not have a copy of the report of the committee before me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

PREVENTION OF SPECULATION IN LANDS OF THE COLUMBIA BASIN PROJECT

The bill (S. 408) to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? I see the Senator who reported the bill from the committee is present.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation has considered this measure fully at this session, and considered a similar bill at the previous session of the Congress. The bill now before the Senate, except in comparatively minor aspects, is in exactly the same form as the bill which was passed at the last session. Its purpose is to permit an agreement between the State of Washington and the Bureau of Reclamation to organize and develop the Grand Coulee Dam project. Its purpose is to safeguard the investment of the Federal Government in the Columbia Basin and to safeguard, also, the investments of the settlers upon that project. It is in harmony with the program which has been followed for the last 20 or 25 years by the Interior Department and the Congress with respect to projects of this kind.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN], one of the authors of the bill, is in the Chamber, and perhaps he might add a word or two about the measure. I should say, first, however, that the bill was most thoroughly examined by the committee in a full session. It was not referred to a subcommittee, but represents the unanimous judgment of the entire Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. WALLGREN. Mr. President, I should like to say that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and I would both like to see this bill passed at the present time, because whatever we do here must be ratified by the State legislature of the State of Washington, which is now in session. We are anxious that the proposed improvement be made in the act of 1937.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill does not change the ownership of the projects? It is merely to prevent speculation in lands there?

Mr. WALLGREN. It does permit the ownership of more land than the act of 1937 permits. It provides for the establishment of farm units up to 160 acres, instead of 40 acres, as under the last bill.

Mr. HATCH. Does the bill fix a limitation on the price of the lands?

Mr. WALLGREN. No; it does not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments.

The first committee amendment was, on page 13, line 4, after the word "lands", to insert "to improve such lands, or other lands within the project under contract with the owners or organizations thereof as herein provided, by clearing, leveling, and preparing them for handling of irrigation water."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 1, after the word "thereon.", to insert "Contracts for repayment of costs incurred by the United States in clearing, leveling, and preparing lands for the handling of irrigation water may, in the Secretary's discretion, be made with individual water users or any form of water users' organization satisfactory to him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 14, after the word "therein" to insert "after it is"; and in line 15, after the word "act", to insert "and before execution by the United States of a contract of sale covering it."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 22, to strike out down to and including line 7 on page 15, as follows:

(b) Any lands or interests in lands acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act shall be subject to all provisions of the laws of the State of Washington relating to the organization, government, and regulation of irrigation, reclamation, and conservancy districts and shall be subject to liens for charges legally assessed by any such district, to the same extent and in the same manner as public lands subject to entry are or may be subject to said laws and charges by the provisions of sections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 7 of the act of August 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 506), as amended by the act of May 15, 1922 (42 Stat. 541).

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b) Any public lands within the project and any lands or interests in lands acquired by the United States under this act, beginning at such date or dates and subject to such provisions and limitations as may be fixed or provided by regulations made under section 8, shall be (i) subject to the provisions of the laws of the State of Washington relating to the organization, government, and regulation of irrigation, reclamation, and conservancy districts, and (ii) subject to legal assessment or taxation by any such district, and to liens for such assessments and taxes and to all proceedings for the enforcement thereof, in the same manner and to the same extent as privately owned lands of like character. The United States does not assume any obligation for amounts so assessed or taxed; and any proceedings to enforce them shall be subject to any title then remaining in the United States, to any prior lien reserved to the United States for unpaid installments under land sale contracts made under this act, and to any lien for any other charges, accrued or unaccrued, under and by virtue of such contracts or any contract between the United States and the district in which the land is located. Regulations to carry out this subsection shall be effective when filed for record in the manner provided in subsection 2 (f).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 5, to strike out the word "upon" and to insert "(c) In addition to taxation or assessment under subsection 5 (c) upon"; in line 12, after the word "enforced", to strike out "by the sale of the lands"; and in line 14, after the word "lands", to strike out the colon and the following: "Provided, That the title or interest which the State or political subdivision thereof may convey in any tax proceeding shall be subject to whatever title remains in the United States and to any prior lien reserved to the United States for all unpaid installments upon the contract of sale, whether accrued or otherwise, and any other charges upon said land which have accrued or may accrue under and by virtue of said contract of sale or the contract between the United States and the district in which the land is located."

And to insert in lieu thereof "subject to the limitations in favor of the United States that govern the enforcement of district assessments or taxes as provided in subsection 5 (b). If lands under any such contract shall at any time revert to the United States before transfer of title under the contract by reason of default thereunder, all liens or tax titles resulting from taxes levied pursuant to the authority of this subsection upon such lands shall be thereupon extinguished; and the levying of any such tax by such State or political subdivision shall be deemed to be an agreement on its part in the event of such reversion, to execute and record a formal release of such lien or tax title."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. In addition to the primary purposes for which the Grand Coulee Dam project (hereafter to be known as the Columbia Basin project and herein called the 'project') was authorized under the provisions of the act of August 30, 1935 (49 Stat. 1028), the project is hereby authorized and reauthorized as a project subject to the Reclamation Project Act of 1939; and the provisions of each of those two acts together with the provisions of this act shall govern the repayment of expenditures and the construction, operation, and maintenance of the works constructed as a part of the project.

"SEC. 2. (a) No part of the funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated or allotted for project construction or for the reclamation of land within the project shall be expended in the construction of any irrigation features of the project, exclusive of Grand Coulee Dam and appurtenant works now under construction and of the pumping plant and equalizing reservoir and dams, until the requirements of the following subdivisions (i) and (ii) of this subsection (a) have been met:

"(i) All lands within the project shall have been impartially appraised by the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter called the 'Secretary') and evaluated at the date of appraisal without reference to or increment on account of the construction of the project. Reappraisals may be made at any time by the Secretary, and will be made upon the request of the landowner concerned accompanied by an advance to the United States of $15 for each quarter section or fraction thereof involved, on account of expense thereof. In such reappraisals the Secretary shall take into account, in addition to the value found in the first appraisal, improvements made after said appraisal, such irrigation construction charges on the land as have been paid, and other items of value that are proper, other than increments on account of the construction of the project. The term 'appraised value' as used in this act shall mean appraised values determined as provided in this subsection.

"(ii) Contracts shall have been made with irrigation, reclamation, or conservancy districts organized under State law embracing the lands within the project providing for payment thereby of that part of the cost of construction of the project determined by the Secretary to be the part thereof to be repaid by irrigation. Each such contract shall conform to the requirements of this act, shall require repayment within the maximum period permitted under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto (hereinafter called the Federal reclamation laws), and provide that payments shall be enforceable by all means and remedies provided in said laws.

"(b) (i) The lands within the project shall be developed in irrigation blocks, as that term is defined in the Reclamation Project Act of 1939. The Secretary shall segregate the lands in each irrigation block into farm units of sufficient acreage for the support of an average-sized family at a suitable living level, having in mind the character of soil, topography, location with respect to the irrigation system, and such other relevant factors as, in his judgment, enter into the determination of the area and boundaries thereof; and shall establish the units as hereafter provided. No farm unit shall contain more than 160 or less than 10 acres of irrigable land, except that any nominal quarter section comprising more than 160 acres of irrigable land may be included in one farm unit, and except that lands owned by the United States may be established into units of lesser size for part-time farming purposes.

"(ii) Prior to the initial delivery of water to an irrigation block, the Secretary shall prepare a plat of all the farm units in the irrigation block and shall publish a notice of the intention to establish such farm unit plat in 6 weekly issues of a newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which any part of the irrigation block is located.

From the date of first publication, a copy of the plat shall be available in the county auditor's office of each of said counties for public inspection during the business hours of the office. Any interested landowner shall have the right to file written objections to the plat with the county auditor of the county in which his lands are situated before the close of the period of publication. After expiration of the period of publication the Secretary shall consider and determine all such objections, draw the plat in final form, and file it for record in said county auditor's offices. With the consent of the owners of all farm units affected, the Secretary may revise the plat or any part thereof from time to time, and place the revisions of record with the original plat.

"(iii) Water shall not be delivered from, through, or by means of the project works to or for lands not conforming in area and boundaries to the farm units covering the lands involved, nor to or for more than one farm unit held by any one landowner, except that as to lands held by the one having equitable or legal title on May 27, 1937, or the heir or devisee of such owner, delivery may be made to or for a total irrigable area not exceeding the maximum provided in this section. The limitations of this subdivision shall not apply to lands owned by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof, corporate or otherwise.

"(iv) Lands within the project in excess of one farm unit held by any one landowner shall, except as otherwise provided in this act, be deemed excess land: Provided, That if excess land is acquired by foreclosure or other process of law, by conveyance in satisfaction of mortgages, by inheritance or by devise, water therefor may be furnished temporarily for a period not exceeding 5 years from the effective date of such acquisition, delivery of water thereafter ceasing until the transfer thereof to a landowner duly qualified to secure water therefor.

"(v) As used in this act, the terms 'owner,' 'landowner,' and 'any one landowner' denote any person, corporation, joint-stock association, or family; the term 'family' denotes a group consisting of either or both husband and wife, together with their children under 18 years of age, or all of such children if both parents are dead; the term 'their children' includes the issue and lawfully adopted children of either or both husband and wife; and the term 'lands within the project' denotes those lands within the boundaries of the existing Columbia Basin irrigation districts, or revisions thereof approved by the Secretary, which the Secretary determines may be supplied water from through, or by means of the project works and are required to be included to provide for sound development and operation of the project. Lands shall be deemed to be held by a family, if held as separate property of husband or wife, or constitute a part or all of their community property, or if they are the property of any or all of their children under 18 years of age.

"(c) As a condition precedent to receiving water from the project and in consideration thereof, each landowner shall be required to execute, within 6 months from the date of the execution of the contract between the United States and the district within which the land is located, a recordable contract covering all his lands within that district, agreeing as to such lands for and on behalf of himself, his heirs, successors, and assigns to the provisions set forth in this subsection (c): Provided, That any landowner, having failed to execute such a contract within this period, may be permitted to execute such contract within 1 year after the date of judicial confirmation of the validity of the contract between the United States and the district but only in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed under section 8 concerning this privilege.

"Each such recordable contract shall provide—

"(i) That the landowner will conform his lands by purchase, sale, or exchange at the appraised values to the area and boundaries of the pertinent farm unit or units shown on the plats filed under subsection 2 (b) and will dispose of excess land then or thereafter owned by him at its appraised value; that the Secretary is thereby given an irrevocable power of attorney to sell in behalf of the landowner any such excess land at said appraised value; and that the United States is thereby given, without further consideration, an option to buy any such excess land at said appraised value: Provided, That sales under such power or such option, unless otherwise provided in writing by said owner, shall be only for cash and only such that surrender of possession by the owner of any area of excess lands then operated as a single unit for dry farming or grazing may be effected substantially at one time.

"(ii) That in the period from the date of execution thereof and to a date 5 years from the time water becomes available for the lands covered thereby, no conveyance of or contract to convey a freehold estate in such lands, whether excess or nonexcess lands, shall be made for a consideration exceeding its appraised value, and in connection with any conveyance of, or contract to convey, such an estate within such period the grantor or vendor or the grantee or vendee or any lien holder thereof shall, within 30 days from the date of such conveyance or contract, file in the office of the county auditor in the county or counties in which the land is located an affidavit describing the conveyance or contract and the consideration therefor.

"(iii) That in the event that within such period such a conveyance of, or contract to convey, is made without filing within said 30 days the affidavit required in (ii) of this subsection, or is made for a consideration in excess of the appraised value, the Secretary, at any time within 2 years of the day on which there is filed for recording in the official county records the contract or deed involved, whichever is filed earliest in the event both the contract and deed are filed in a given transaction, may cancel the right of such estate to receive water from, through, or by means of the project works by a written notice of cancelation: Provided, That said power to cancel as to any given parcel of land may be waived by the Secretary at any time within said 2-year period by a written notice of waiver: And provided further, That after any such cancelation a project water right for the estate involved may be acquired only on terms and conditions satisfactory to the Secretary.

"(iv) That should any freehold estate in land covered thereby be conveyed or contracted to be conveyed within the period defined in (ii) of this subsection, the transaction, and any mortgage or other lien covering any deferred consideration thereunder, shall be subject to all the provisions of subsection 3 (b) hereof.

"Any or all of the provisions of this subsection (c) required to be included in the recordable contracts may be made covenants running with the land when said recordable contracts expressly so provide.

"(d) Each contract made pursuant to subdivision 2 (a) (ii) shall provide that no water will be delivered from, through, or by means of the project works except in accordance with the provisions and limitations of section 2 hereof.

"(e) Each district contract may include provisions—

"(i) Requiring that all lands within the district not covered by recordable contracts provided for under subsection (c) or otherwise not eligible to receive water shall be subject to assessment in the same manner and to the same extent as like lands eligible to receive water, subject to such provisions as the Secretary may prescribe for postponement in payment of all or part of such assessments but not beyond the expiration of the period during which the price limit under subsection 2 (c) applies.

"(ii) That, without compliance with other provisions of State law for the exclusion of lands, lands may be withdrawn from the district by filing a written notice of withdrawal with the district board on or before such date fixed by such board between a date 10 days after the official notice of the election on the contract between the United States and the district and the date of such election. The date limiting the time of such filing shall be announced in the official notice of the proposed election, and lands for which such notice is filed shall be deemed excluded from the district for all purposes as of the time of such filing. Thereafter lands so withdrawn and excluded so long as they remain in private ownership shall not be entitled to receive water from, through, or by means of the project works.

"(f) Any instrument, action, determination, rule, or regulation of the Secretary or his duly authorized representatives under the authority of this section 2 which is or may be determinative of the title to lands or interest in lands in private ownership within the project shall be effective as to any given parcel of land, as against purchasers for value without actual notice, only from the time of the filing for record in the office of the county auditor of the county or counties in which the lands affected are located of a copy thereof authenticated in the manner authorized by law. Such filing shall impart legal notice to the public of the matters and things set out therein.

"SEC. 3. (a) Fraudulent misrepresentation as to the true consideration involved in the conveyance of, or contract to convey, any freehold estate in land covered by a recordable contract made under subsection 2 (c) hereof, in the affidavit required by that subsection shall constitute a misdemeanor punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"(b) Should any freehold estate in lands subject to the recordable contract made under subsection 2 (c) hereof be conveyed or contracted to be conveyed, after the date of execution of such recordable contract and within 5 years from the time water becomes available for such lands, at a consideration in excess of the appraised value of said estate, the transaction, and any mortgage or other lien covering any deferred consideration thereunder, shall be invalid and unenforceable by the vendor or grantor, his successors or assigns as to that part of the consideration in excess of the appraised value of the estate involved. In the case of any such transaction involving deferred payments, said invalid portion of the consideration shall be deducted first from the deferred payments in the inverse order of their due dates.

"The vendee or grantee in any such transaction, at any time within 2 years from the date of any such conveyance or contract and on filing a correct affidavit as required in subdivision 2 (c) (ii), may recover from the vendor or grantor, or the successors or assigns thereof, an amount equal to the payments made in excess of the appraised value.

"In connection with any judgment or decree hereunder in favor of a vendee or grantee, said vendee or grantee shall have the right to recover court costs and reasonable attorneys' fees.

"SEC. 4. (a) For the purposes of assisting in the permanent settlement of farm families, protecting project land, facilitating project development, preventing speculation in project lands, and providing for the general welfare, the Secretary is authorized to administer public lands of the United States in the project area and lands acquired under this section; to sell, exchange, or lease such lands; to improve such lands, or other lands within the project under contract with the owners or organizations thereof as herein provided, by clearing, leveling, and preparing them for handling of irrigation water; to establish town sites on such lands; to dedicate portions of such lands for public purposes in keeping with sound project development; to acquire in the name of the United States, at prices satisfactory to him, such lands or interest in lands, within or adjacent to the project area, as he deems appropriate for the protection, development, or improvement of the project; to accept donations of real and personal property for the purposes of this act; and to disseminate information by appropriate means and methods. Any moneys realized on account of donations for purposes of this act shall be covered into the Treasury as trust funds.

"(b) Contracts, exchanges, and leases made under this section, shall be on terms that, in the Secretary's judgment, are in keeping with sound project development. In addition, land-sale contracts shall be on a basis that, in the Secretary's judgment, provides for the return in a reasonable period of years of not less than the appraised value of the land and improvements thereon. Contracts for repayment of costs incurred by the United States in clearing, leveling, and preparing lands for the handling of irrigation water may, in the Secretary's discretion, be made with individual water users or any form of water users' organization satisfactory to him.

"Qualifications of applicants for the purchase of land for irrigation farming shall be prescribed as provided in subsection C of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. 702), notwithstanding any other provisions of law.

"SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary may enter into agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof with respect to any real property situated therein after it is acquired pursuant to the authority of this act and before execution by the United States of a contract of sale covering it, out of funds derived from the leasing of such lands. The amount so paid for any year upon any such property shall not exceed the taxes that would be paid to the State or subdivision as the case may be upon such property if it were not exempt from taxation thereby.

"(b) Any public lands within the project and any lands or interests in lands acquired by the United States under this act, beginning at such date or dates and subject to such provisions and limitations as may be fixed or provided by regulations made under section 8, shall be (i) subject to the provisions of the laws of the State of Washington relating to the organization, government, and regulation of irrigation, reclamation, and conservancy districts, and (ii) subject to legal assessment or taxation by any such district, and to liens for such assessments and taxes and to all proceedings for the enforcement thereof, in the same manner and to the same extent as privately owned lands of like character. The United States does not assume any obligation for amounts so assessed or taxed; and any proceedings to enforce them shall be subject to any title then remaining in the United States, to any prior lien reserved to the United States for unpaid installments under land sale contracts made under this act, and to any lien for any other charges, accrued or unaccrued, under and by virtue of such contracts or any contract between the United States and the district in which the land is located. Regulations to carry out this subsection shall be effective when filed for record in the manner provided in subsection 2 (f).

"(c) In addition to taxation or assessment under subsection 5 (b) upon execution by the United States of a contract of sale of any lands within the project, the lands under contract may be taxed by the State or political subdivision thereof in the same manner and to the same extent as privately owned lands of a like character. All taxes legally so assessed may be enforced in the same manner and under the same proceeding whereby said taxes are enforced against privately owned lands subject to the limitations in favor of the United States that govern the enforcement of district assessments or taxes as provided in subsection 5 (b). If lands under any such contract shall at any time revert to the United States before transfer of title under the contract by reason of default thereunder, all liens or tax titles resulting from taxes levied pursuant to the authority of this subsection upon such lands shall be thereupon extinguished; and the levying of any such tax by such State or political subdivision shall be deemed to be an agreement on its part, in the event of such reversion, to execute and record a formal release of such lien or tax title.

"SEC. 6. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such moneys as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, to be reimbursable to the extent required by this act. All revenues received in carrying out the provisions of section 4 hereof shall be covered into the General Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Amounts equal to appropriated funds requisitioned by the Secretary and made available for disbursement on the books of the Treasurer of the United States shall be debited in a special account in the Treasury, to be known as the Columbia Basin Land Development Account. Amounts equal to revenues covered into the General Treasury as miscellaneous receipts shall be credited in said special account. After such credits equal the amount of the debits with interest thereon at the rate of 3 percent per annum from the respective dates of the debits, additional credits in said special account shall be made by the Secretary, in the manner determined by him, the basis of corresponding credits to the construction cost obligations of the district or districts entering into contracts under section 2 hereof.

"SEC. 7. No water shall be delivered for irrigation within the project until the State of Washington, by appropriate legislation, shall have adopted, authorized, ratified, and consented to all the provisions of this act insofar as such provisions or any of them, in whole or in part, may come within the scope of State jurisdiction or authority or be applicable to State lands.

"Legislation otherwise conforming to the standards above stated in this section will meet the requirements of the section even though, by reason of limitations in the State constitution, the contracts required under subsection 2 (c) cannot be executed pursuant to such legislation as to the State's school and other public lands. As to such lands, the provisions and requirements of subsection 2 (c) shall remain effective, but if these constitutional limitations have not been removed at least 6 months prior to the expiration of the time provided for the execution of the contracts, the time is hereby extended for a period ending 6 months after the removal of the limitations.

"SEC. 8. The Secretary is authorized to perform such acts, to make such rules and regulations, and to include in the contracts hereinbefore provided for such provisions as he deems proper for carrying out the provisions of this act; and in connection with sales or exchanges under the act, he is authorized to effect conveyances without regard to the law governing the patenting of public lands. Wherever in this act functions, powers, or duties are conferred upon the Secretary, said functions, powers, or duties may be performed, exercised, or discharged by his duly authorized representatives.

"SEC. 9. The consent of the United States is hereby given to the sale of school lands and any other public lands of the State of Washington comprising a part of the lands within the project at prices not to exceed their appraised values, determined as provided in subsection 2 (a) hereof.

"SEC. 10. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 11. This act may be cited as 'The Columbia Basin Project Act.'"

EASEMENTS FOR RIGHTS-OF-WAY OVER NAVAL RESERVATIONS

The bill (S. 301) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant easements for rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon naval reservations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me inquire whether Calendar No. 22, Senate bill 303, is the bill concerning which I previously interrogated the Senator?

Mr. WALSH. It is the same bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And is the bill now in the same shape as it was when it had the Senate's approval during the last session?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. I think the Senator approved of the committee changes which had been made in the original bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. I wanted to be sure it was the same bill.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate bill 301?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 301) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant easements for rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon naval reservations, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "telephone" and the comma to insert "telegraph" and a comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 301) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, under such terms and conditions as are deemed advisable by him, to grant easements for rights-of-way over, across, in, and upon naval reservations and other lands under his control for gas, water, electric, telephone, telegraph, power, and sewer pipe lines, and roads and highways, to any citizen, association, or corporation of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or any State of the United States or political subdivisions of a State of the United States: Provided, That such rights-of-way shall be granted only upon a finding by the Secretary of the Navy that the same will be in the public interest and will not substantially injure the interest of the United States in the property affected thereby: Provided further, That all or any part of such rights-of-way may be annulled or forfeited by the Secretary of the Navy for failure to comply with the terms or conditions of any grant hereunder or for nonuse or for abandonment of rights granted under the authority hereof: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall include in his annual report to the President a full and complete statement of each and all easements granted, which statement shall also include the name and address of the grantee, the purpose of the grant, and the benefits accruing to the United States or to the public therefrom.

AUSTIN L. TIERNEY

The bill (S. 176) for the relief of Austin L. Tierney was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Private Law No. 99, Seventy-fourth Congress, an act for the relief of Austin L. Tierney, is amended as follows: ": Provided, That compensation, retirement pay, back pay, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued and that this man will be entitled to the benefits, privileges, and rights conferred upon an honorably discharged sailor by reason of the passage of this act."

PRESENTATION OF SILVER MEDAL TO MEMBERS OF THE PEARY POLAR EXPEDITION

The bill (S. 184) to provide for the presentation of silver medals to certain members of the Peary Polar Expedition of 1908–9 was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made, at a United States mint, silver medals of an appropriate design to be presented, in the name of Congress, to Matthew A. Henson, Capt. Robert A. Bartlett, Ross G. Marvin, Dr. John W. Goodsell, George Borup, and Donald B. MacMillan, in recognition of their efforts and services, as members of the Peary polar expedition of 1908–9, in the field of science and for the cause of polar exploration, by aiding in the discovery of the North Pole by Admiral Peary.

SEC. 2. If any of such persons has died, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to make the award posthumously by presenting such a medal to the widow or other member of the family of such deceased person.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for carrying out the provisions of this act.

EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION OF NAVAL COURTS MARTIAL

The bill (S. 303) to extend the jurisdiction of naval courts martial in time of war or national emergency to certain persons outside the continental limits of the United States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the persons now subject to the Articles for the government of the Navy, all persons, other than persons in the military service of the United States, outside the continental limits of the United States accompanying or serving with the United States Navy, the Marine Corps, or the Coast Guard when serving as a part of the Navy, including but not limited to persons employed by the Government directly, or by contractors or subcontractors engaged in naval projects, and all persons, other than persons in the military service of the United States, within an area leased by the United States which is without the territorial jurisdiction thereof and which is under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, shall, in time of war or national emergency, be subject to the Articles for the government of the Navy except insofar as these articles define offenses of such a nature that they can be committed only by naval personnel: Provided, That the jurisdiction herein conferred shall not extend to Alaska, the Hawaiian Islands, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands, except the islands of Palmyra, Midway, Johnston, and that part of the Aleutian Islands west of longitude 172 degrees west.

CAPT. RICHARD ROTHWELL, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS

The bill (S. 304) for the relief of Capt. Richard Rothwell, United States Marine Corps, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $53 to reimburse Capt. Richard Rothwell, United States Marine Corps, for the value of personal property lost or damaged as a result of the flooding of public quarters No. 425, Marine Barracks, Quantico, Va., during the absence of Capt. Richard Rothwell, United States Marine Corps: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MASTER GUNNERY SGT. EUGENE M. MARTIN

The bill (S. 305) for the relief of Master Gunnery Sgt. Eugene M. Martin, United States Marine Corps, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Master Gunnery Sgt. Eugene M. Martin, United States Marine Corps, the sum of $1,796.60, which sum represents the value of personal property lost as a result of a fire which occurred in public quarters No. 143, United States Marine Barracks, Parris Island, S. C., on September 21, 1941: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

REIMBURSEMENT OF NAVAL PERSONNEL FOR PERSONAL PROPERTY LOST AT ANTARCTICA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 306) to provide for the reimbursement of certain Navy personnel for personal property lost as a result of the disaster at the East Base, Antarctica, on March 21, 1941.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The purpose of the bill is to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $1,203.84 to pay claims of certain Navy personnel for personal property lost as a result of the emergency evacuation of the United States Antarctic Service Expeditions' Antarctic base on Neny Fjord, Marguerite Bay, Palmer Peninsula, Antarctica.

The facts and circumstances of this case are substantially as follows: Navy personnel manned the above-mentioned base from March 1940 until an emergency evacuation on March 21, 1941. The two ships attached to the expedition, the U. S. S. Bear and the U. S. motorship North Star, proceeding on their assigned mission of evacuating the expedition's two bases, reached the vicinity of Marguerite Bay, Palmer Land, and encountered impenetrable ice pack which prevented their reaching East Base.

After approximately a month of fruitless effort to negotiate the ice pack, it was decided to evacuate the personnel of the base by airplane, and to abandon all equipment, supplies, and materials at the camp. On March 21, 1941, the personnel of the camp, 26 in number, were evacuated by airplane in 2 flights to Mikkelsen Island, 112 miles to the north, at which point they were picked up by the U. S. S. Bear. The extremely hazardous nature of the evacuation operations and the limited capacity of the single Condor airplane available for the purpose, necessitated the abandonment of practically all the personal belongings of the camp personnel.

The Navy Department Claims Board has considered the claims of loss sustained by the Navy personnel and has found the value of the property lost to be $1,203.84.

There is no other authority of law pursuant to which these claims may be adjusted by the Navy Department and therefore the matter is submitted to Congress for its approval. The additional cost to the Government would be not to exceed $1,203.84. The bill was introduced at the request of the Navy Department and is approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Assuming, for example, that there was a naval base in the Aleutian Islands, and that certain naval personnel stationed at the base were renting homes, not on Government property, and had their own personal furniture in the homes, and that it became necessary to evacuate the base, with resultant loss of the furniture and other personal belongings, what is the background of the policy of the Government relative to such personal losses? Let me say that I desire to ascertain whether the bill under consideration is consistent with our past policy.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as the Senator knows, where naval personnel meet with losses at sea by reason of fire, explosion, or other disaster, the Navy Department has authority to adjust the losses without coming to Congress; but where losses occur on shore, as the loss covered by the pending bill occurred on shore, at the Aleutian Islands, or at Quantico, or at any other naval base, the practice is for the Navy to set up a claims board to determine whether the Navy Department is responsible for the loss or whether the personnel who claim the losses are in any way responsible. The claims board makes its finding, and then the Navy Department prepares for introduction a bill or bills for the payment of the claims.

The pending bill is one of the bills introduced at the request of the claims board of the Navy, who heard the claims in the particular case.

Do I make the matter clear to the Senator?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes. I ask the Senator to follow me one step further. In a case such as the one I cited, what has been the usual practice? Does the Navy Department or the Claims Board pass upon and adjust the claim, and ask for action by Congress?

Mr. WALSH. They find the cause of the disaster or the evacuation, as in the case of the pending bill, and the circumstances attached to it, so as to eliminate the element of negligence on the part of those who filed the claim. When the claims board is convinced that the loss of personal property occurred while the property was in the custody of the Government, the board finds that fact, and the bill is introduced for congressional approval.

Mr. BRIDGES. In such case there must be no question of negligence on the part of the personnel involved; is that correct?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $1,203.84, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, certain Navy personnel for the value of personal property lost incident to the emergency evacuation of the United States Antarctic Service Expeditions' Antarctic base on Neny Fjord, Marguerite Bay, Palmer Peninsula, Antarctica, on March 21, 1941: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

TRANSPORTATION OF PETROLEUM BY PIPE LINE

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. On behalf of myself, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to submit a resolution, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be read at the desk for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received out of order, and, without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 103), as follows:

Whereas the production of ships, the making of high-octane gasoline, and the construction of synthetic-rubber plants have been and are being delayed because of the shortage of necessary materials; and

Whereas it is now proposed to construct a steel pipe line from points in Texas northeast to a point in Indiana for the transportation principally of petroleum products; and

Whereas the construction of such pipe line will consume materials and labor in competition with the above-mentioned projects and will cost a vast sum of money; and

Whereas the diversion and use of vast quantities of critical materials and labor would be justified only if alternative means of transportation for petroleum products, such as barges and railroad tank cars, are not and cannot be made available, and then only if the projected pipe line is so located and of such character as to provide the maximum increase in the required transportation capacity for petroleum and petroleum products; and

Whereas it has been contended that recently announced plans of the War Production Board and the Petroleum Administrator for War for projected additional pipeline construction do not meet these requirements, and that consideration should be given to constructing other pipe lines in other locations and to alternative means of transporting petroleum products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a full and complete study and investigation be made for the purpose of determining (1) the necessity and desirability of constructing any additional pipe line; (2) the extent to which any projected pipe line would unduly compete for scarce materials and labor with other programs necessary to the war effort; (3) the type, location, and use of any projected pipe line and the functions to be performed by it; (4) the availability of any alternative means of transportation for petroleum products, such as barges or railroad tank cars; and (5) the possibility of increasing the efficiency of present facilities for the transportation of petroleum by rerouting or otherwise.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it is my purpose to ask that the resolution which I have just submitted on behalf of myself and other Senators may be referred to the special committee headed by my colleague and which is known as the Truman committee, the official title of which is the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program. I understand that some preliminary investigation has already been made by the committee headed by my colleague.

It seems to me that the resolution involves an extremely important matter. The Office of Petroleum Coordinator is about immediately to proceed with the construction of the pipe line referred to in the resolution. The net effect of the construction of the pipe line, as it seems to Senators from the midcontinent area immediately concerned, would be, at the conclusion of the war, to turn over the control of the whole petroleum industry of the United States to some big companies and put the independents out of business.

It is also our opinion, based on the most expert advice the Senators who have submitted the resolution can obtain, that, so far as relieving the shortage of gasoline and petroleum products on the eastern seaboard is concerned, it would be far more preferable to reverse the contemplated process and build a pipe line from Indiana to the eastern seaboard rather than from Texas into the great petroleum field of Illinois, and to use the tank-car service, which is available and which everybody agrees must be used to the very utmost, on the western end of the oil shipment program rather than on the eastern end, which would enable the Government and the public at the present time to utilize the great midcontinent oil fields as well as the Texas fields and the Illinois oil field. It is with that purpose in view, Mr. President, that the resolution has been submitted. I should like to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I do not wish to interfere with the wishes of the distinguished Senator from Missouri, but he must remember that the Truman committee, than which none is more effective, industrious, and capable, is an investigating and exploratory committee. If the resolution contemplates legislation, it must go to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter. So the question naturally arises, in my mind, What is the main purpose? Is it for the committee to report to the Senate legislation, or is it merely to investigate?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can say very frankly to the distinguished Senator from Oregon that the purpose of offering the resolution is in some manner to develop facts in the quickest possible manner that might prevent Secretary Ickes, the Petroleum Coordinator, from going ahead with this scheme of his. It was discussed among the Senators who offer the resolution as to whether it should go to the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or the Truman committee, and it was believed, in view of the fact that the Truman committee, as we understood, had conducted some preliminary investigations and had an investigatory staff already set up, that it would be better to send it to the Truman committee in order that the facts might be developed before Secretary Ickes had time to build the pipe line.

Mr. McNARY. I am not contentious about the matter, but I wish the rule observed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Oregon said a moment ago, that, ordinarily, it is better to refer resolutions to a standing committee than to a special committee. We are not asking to have any special committee set up; we are not asking for any appropriation. We simply submit the resolution as a means of calling this matter to the attention of the committee which has already set up an investigatory staff which might develop facts, as we believe, at a very early day, and, possibly, prevent the construction of this pipe line which we are apprehensive might be a national disaster.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair correctly understand the Senator from Missouri to ask unanimous consent to refer the resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have not as yet done so. I was proposing to ask my colleague, who has just come into the Chamber from a meeting of his committee, as I understand, what the situation is as to the preliminary investigation which has already been made.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TRUMAN. We have made some preliminary investigation of this whole situation; in fact, we held a hearing at Kansas City on the program and the situation as it now is. There are pipe lines already in existence from the proposed terminus at the southwestern end of the line which are not now being used to full capacity; in fact, they are full of gasoline and they have no outlet for it either at the Chicago end or the East St. Louis end of the pipe line.

It seems to me to be good common sense to make use of the pipe lines already in existence in the southwestern section of the country, and, if it is necessary to build a new pipe line, such pipe line should be built from the terminus of the present fuel-oil line in Illinois or from East St. Louis or Chicago to the east coast.

I am not hunting for any more jobs so far as the work of the committee of which I happen to be chairman is concerned, because we have already a tremendous amount of work to do. We have made some preliminary investigations of this very situation, and had expected, in a very short time, to make a report on it; in fact, I have asked for a hearing with Mr. Ickes and some others on Wednesday of this week on this very subject. If the Senate deems it proper that the resolution should be referred to the special committee, of course, I shall be glad to do whatever the Senate asks me to do in the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wish to make a very brief observation. If this pipe line is to be built, I think no one would object to its construction; but investigation before several committees, to my certain knowledge, discloses that we have a bottleneck in shipping, the reason for which is the shortage of steel for building ships; likewise we have a bottleneck in the production of octane gasoline, the reason for which is the lack of steel with which to construct the refineries; and likewise we have a bottleneck in the construction of plants for the production of synthetic rubber, the reason for which is a lack of steel necessary to build the plants; and so the synthetic rubber program has been limited to 55 percent.

Further investigation shows that we have a new pipe line which has just been constructed from the Southwest to Illinois. Further investigation shows that we have now constructed and in operation a pipe line from Texas to Chicago. That pipe line is not in use; it is full of gasoline, but there is no place to store it in Chicago. However, the pipe line is there, and could be used, but it is not in use. Some of us were not satisfied under the conditions to sit idly by and let this new pipe line be constructed until we were sure that it was necessary.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. My inquiry goes to the possible duplication of investigations. The Senator, of course, will recall that in the closing days of the last session we created a special committee under resolution offered by him and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], as I recall——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And several other Senators.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; and several other Senators—to investigate the oil situation or the gas situation in the section contiguous to Kansas City and that general area.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is the chairman of another special committee investigating the general oil situation. At the time the Senator's resolution was adopted, in the last Congress, question arose as to whether the Truman committee had full jurisdiction to go into a matter of that sort or whether the Maloney committee had the same jurisdiction. Notwithstanding those inquiries, which apparently were not very satisfactorily answered, the other special committee was set up. What is the particular reason why either the Maloney committee or the committee sponsored by the Senator from Missouri in the last Congress would not be qualified to hold this hearing, and will the Senator inform me whether there is duplication, or whether all these oil committees should function?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should be very glad to explain the matter to the Senator from Kentucky. The committee to which he refers, which was appointed under the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and myself and several other Senators, was a committee whose jurisdiction was confined to the fuel situation in a particular area, namely, the area between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains. The jurisdiction of that committee was specifically limited and purposely limited to that great fuel-producing area, in which a great shortage of fuel had been brought about by conflicting Government orders.

The committee headed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], while it is to look into the general fuel situation, is particularly intended to consider the supply of oil and gasoline on the eastern seaboard.

Mr. MALONEY. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is my understanding. If the Senator from Connecticut wishes to correct me, I should be glad to yield to him for that purpose. That at least is the real purpose of the committee.

It has not been felt by the members of the committee of which I am chairman, since we are confined to the area between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, and with primary regard to fuel, that we had a right to go into the question of the pipe line for petroleum products designed for the shipment of oil to the East; but we do feel it concerns our area very strongly, and we feel that it concerns the whole United States very strongly, whether the control of petroleum products in the United States at the conclusion of the war shall be turned over to a few large oil companies which happen to be very heavily represented in the Office of the Petroleum Administrator.

Therefore we have believed that the Truman committee, with their investigatory staff already set up, is better qualified to make the investigation than we are. I say very frankly that I do not believe it is necessary to adopt the resolution to give the Truman committee jurisdiction, because I believe they have jurisdiction under their general authority, already provided; but my colleague informed me that the Truman committee had not proceeded with the matter, although they had made a preliminary investigation, by reason of the fact that they thought that either the committee headed by the Senator from Connecticut, or the other committee, headed by me, had taken that matter into consideration, and they did not wish to duplicate the work.

It seems to me that the Truman committee, having made a preliminary investigation and being ready to proceed, is the proper committee to make the investigation. As I have said, I do not think it is necessary to confer jurisdiction on the Truman committee. I do think it is very desirable to impose specifically that jurisdiction on the committee, or call the attention of the committee to it. It is for that reason that we have submitted this resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. May I ask the Senator whether this pipe line is in process of construction?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have been informed by the Office of the Petroleum Administrator that the construction of the pipe line has not actually been started, but that it is imminent.

Mr. BARKLEY. This has no relationship, then, to the pipe line that was started from somewhere in Texas or Oklahoma up to Salem, Ill.?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The pipe line to which the Senator refers starts at Longview, Tex., and ends, at the present time, I believe, at Norris City, Ill. It is proposed to start this products line from a point somewhere in the vicinity of Beaumont, Tex., join up with the other pipe line some place in Arkansas, and use the same right-of-way. It is our contention, based on all the information we can obtain, that the construction of the pipe line, if it is to be constructed at all, should be started at the other end, should start from Illinois, rather than duplicate the facilities in the Southwest.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator for his courtesy. We are considering the calendar, and many Senators are in their places for that purpose. Unanimous consent was given to read the resolution. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the continuance of the call of the calendar for the consideration of bills to which there is no objection, the resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, under the parliamentary situation am I entitled to 5 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entitled to 5 minutes on any bill which may be under consideration. The clerk will report the next bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 393) for the relief of William Kovatis.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, as chairman of the so-called oil shortage committee of the Senate, I am very much concerned, and I expect that committee will be greatly concerned, with the resolution just submitted by the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. Obviously any one of several Senate committees might very properly, with or without the resolution, proceed to make such investigation of this situation as the members of those committees desire. The Committee on Interstate Commerce might do it, the Commerce Committee might do it, the committee headed by the distinguished Senator from Missouri himself might do it, the Truman committee might do it, the Oil Shortage Committee, of which I am chairman, might do it. I do not think a resolution is necessary. But I believe it would be probably extremely dangerous if we should undertake at this particular moment to do anything which would delay the construction of a pipe line.

Because of the reference made during the brief statement of the Senator from Missouri, I think I should point out that the committee of which I am chairman has Nation-wide jurisdiction, and that it is not, as the Senator supposed, a committee created to deal only with the petroleum situation on the Atlantic seaboard. The committee has authority to deal with the petroleum problem throughout the land.

Mr. President, I am told that the temperature was 35° below zero in some sections of New England this morning. Because of the petroleum shortage there has been great mental anguish all through the Northeast for many months past. I do not know that there has been much actual physical suffering, but I am told that today, and for the past few days, the oil situation in New England—and probably over a broader area—has been seriously acute. I should not be surprised if there was actual suffering, and I think the Senate will make a grave mistake if it now undertakes to consider a resolution that might result in delaying the construction of the proposed pipe line.

I am assuming from what I heard the able Senator from Missouri say that the resolution is submitted, in part, because of a fear of what may happen after the war, in the post-war period, a fear that certain major oil companies may take control of the situation at the expense of the so-called independents.

I have no desire to set aside or delay any proper investigation, and I cannot be absolutely sure that one is not now necessary. But I should like to point out to the Senate that the Army, the Navy, the War Production Board, and various petroleum committees, and every interested agency of the executive branch of the Government, have made a study of this pipe-line situation.

In effect, the pipe line is under way. Much of the preliminary work has been done. I do not think a shovel has been put into the ground as yet, but——

Mr. WALSH. To what pipe line does the Senator refer?

Mr. MALONEY. The so-called products line, the 20-inch line. Engineers are engaged, surveys are under way, and I should like to point out that a large part of the suffering of the last year has been due to the fact that the construction of the original 24-inch pipe line was too long delayed. I am able to say, on my authority as chairman of the Special Petroleum Committee, that the situation is exceedingly dangerous, and there is reason to believe that next winter, in the northern area of the country, the Northwest as well as the Northeast, we may have great trouble. We may not be so fortunate as we have been this winter, when, by living on a hand-to-mouth basis, it appears we may just about get by without breakdown or epidemic. The people of New England have lived for months in the shadow of pneumonia and influenza. There is some indication that such a situation might yet exist in the Northwest, because the situation might get tight there, too.

There has already been great trouble in the northern part of the country, aside from the Northeast—in Michigan, Wisconsin, and other areas—and I hope the Senate will not now do a thing that would delay the construction of this so-called 20-inch line.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator has spoken of various sections which have been affected. I should like to say to the Senator that when I was in Kansas City about 2 weeks ago, holding hearings on this very situation, the temperature was about 15 below zero. As a matter of fact, it was very much below that in Chicago as I came through. That is, in a section which produces between 75 and 80 percent of the fuel oil of the United States under an irrational system of rationing, there has been very great suffering, right at the door of the wells and the refineries.

Mr. MALONEY. The able Senator from Missouri leaves the subject under discussion. I quite agree with him that there have been rationing mistakes, and that as a result thereof there has been some suffering, at least mental suffering, and we may have more of that. But I am concerned with providing fuel oil for the homes of the North, not particularly the northern section whence I come, but it so happens that that section of the country has been most seriously hit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. MALONEY. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Connecticut may proceed.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Connecticut will yield, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether his committee has made a survey of all the proposed pipe lines, or if he knows whether any other committee has done so.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I do not know just what the Senator from Massachusetts means by a survey. We have made a study of the pipe-line situation over the country.

Mr. WALSH. I have in mind to ask the Senator whether he knows what progress has been made and to what extent the proposed pipe line to the East has been undertaken.

Mr. MALONEY. I assume the Senator has reference to the so-called big-inch line, the 24-inch line from Texas to Illinois?

Mr. WALSH. No; from Illinois to the eastern seaboard.

Mr. MALONEY. It is the hope of the Office of Petroleum Administrator for War that that large pipe line can be completed to the East by next December. I should like to point out that even with the so-called 24-inch pipe line completed by that time we are faced with very great danger, taking into account the constant need for the withdrawal of petroleum products to satisfy the needs of our forces in Africa and probably in other places before another winter comes.

Mr. WALSH. I am informed that the money has been appropriated for the building of this pipe line to the eastern coast, that the plans have been prepared, and that the only reason it has not been built is that it has been impossible to obtain priorities for its building. Is that information correct?

Mr. MALONEY. Scarcity of materials has contributed to the delay.

Mr. WALSH. I refer to the pipe line from Illinois to the East. The Navy is very much interested in the pipe line, as is also the civilian population. The Army is also interested, but the Navy is particularly interested in it. My information from the Navy is that the bottleneck situation referred to by reason of inability to obtain priorities has been removed and that the pipe line is going to be built. I am wondering if the Senator's committee has that information.

Mr. MALONEY. Yes; we have.

Mr. WALSH. So that, so far as we know, that is a program which is going forward, and the construction will proceed during the next year, and the pipe line will be ready for operation in the fall?

Mr. MALONEY. Late this year.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to ask the Senator one other question, and I thank him for yielding to me. I hope some Senate committee will give us a detailed and complete account of all proposed pipe lines. I sat in an unofficial committee recently, a committee of Senators from the Northeast, and there was presented to us a plan for a pipe line through to the Carolinas from Texas. Apparently there are a great many plans for pipe lines. I think some committee—and I believe the committee headed by the Senator from Connecticut is in the best position to do so—ought to inform us what pipe lines have been built, what can be built, what is the reason they are not being built, and how soon they will be put in operation.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I should like to point out that some of the matters the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has dealt with are quite delicate. There is a great need, as every Senator knows, for the early and rapid construction of escort vessels. There are great shortages of materials. Some have thought that valves and pumping equipment which would be needed in connection with the construction of this or any other large pipe line might rob materials needed in the construction of escort vessels. But this entire pipe-line matter has been studied by the Army and Navy, and if the Navy were to suggest that we would rob the armed forces of so much as one escort vessel, I should be reluctant to disagree with the Senator from Missouri. I am assuming, however, that they, the Army and Navy, have taken all those things into account. We do not want to jeopardize our ship-construction program, particularly so far as escort vessels are concerned. But let me point out, Senators, that a great bulk of the war production of this country is centered in New England, and we need oil to run the plants there, as well as to keep the homes of the war workers reasonably comfortable. If we should be so unfortunate as to encounter a shortage of oil for a very long period of time next winter, in this distressed section of the country, the entire war program might suffer a very damaging blow.

I shall not trespass longer on the time of the Senate, because I am now almost out of order, having taken up so much of its time, but I do want to admonish the Senate that this is a very serious subject and situation, and I hope it will be dealt with very carefully.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is tremendously interested in the problem which is now being debated before the Senate. I have great respect for the opinions of the chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate Gasoline and Fuel Oil Shortages and the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. I also have equal respect for the opinions and the conclusions of the chairman of the Special Committee To Investigate the National Defense Program, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. My position in this matter at this moment is based solely and wholly upon what the junior Senator from Missouri has said. His committee has found a bottleneck with respect to the transportation facilities to speed the oil to the eastern seaboard after it is received in my section of the country. He states positively, and he is present now, that his committee is able to show that refineries in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Illinois are now filled to overflowing, and that a products pipe line running from Texas into Chicago at this moment cannot be used because there is no transportation facility out of Chicago to the East to deliver the oil.

Mr. President, no one is more interested than the Senator from Illinois in alleviating the suffering in the East or in supplying oil for ships to transport supplies to our soldiers across the sea. Frankly, I do not know who is right and who is wrong. We have to assume in the first instance that those who are dealing with a great project of this kind know what they are doing. No one in the Senate Chamber has been more faithful in supporting the Army and the Navy in their war efforts and endeavors than has the Senator from Illinois, and I will sink or swim with them on nearly all propositions, because if we do not do that then we are all lost.

But, Mr. President, here is a domestic problem, which individuals can at least analyze and to which they can give some thought of their own, just as we are doing here constantly to other domestic problems. After listening to what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] had to say about this matter, I had no hesitancy in joining with this small group of Senators in directing the attention of the Secretary of the Interior, who is the coordinator of the petroleum industry, to the question of the necessity of building an additional products pipe line.

Mr. President, it does not affect the fuel pipe line at all. That is almost completed. The only thing it does is to call attention for the moment at least to the facts that are being developed by the Truman committee relating to what seems to me an important question, and the question solely is as to whether or not the pipe line should be built from Texas to Illinois, or whether the pipe line should be started in Illinois and built on to the East. It is not a question of trying to deny the East anything. It is a question of who is right and who is wrong. I think we all agree that sometimes the officials downtown make mistakes, and I am not so certain that the Secretary of the Interior is completely familiar with all the facts involved in this proposition, although I may be wrong on this point. We all realize his tremendous responsibilities.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to call the Senator's attention further to the fact, as was discussed in the meeting the other day at which the Senators presented this resolution, that the best information we could obtain and the best authority is that the bottleneck in railroad transportation is east of the Mississippi River rather than west of it. In other words, the available tank-car facilities might be better used at the western end of the oil-shipment program rather than at the eastern end. The bottleneck is east of the Mississippi rather than west.

Mr. LUCAS. Where the bottleneck is I am not sure, but the evidence will develop it, and perhaps the evidence with respect to the bottleneck has been developed by the committee headed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] who is now on his feet, and to whom I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that neither do I know the answer to that question. I now have no objection to the matter going to the Truman committee. I have nothing but applause for the Truman committee. My concern is that there be no unnecessary delay on the pipe line. I am told that in connection with these plans the Office of the Petroleum Administrator for War went into careful detail with the railroad people, as they did with all other agencies concerned.

Mr. LUCAS. Be that as it may, I know that the Truman committee has done more than all the other committees put together in discovering many serious mistakes which have been made by the various agencies of the Government. The job is so big that honest mistakes are bound to be made. No one will deny that fact. Even the Truman committee has made mistakes, and I have not always agreed with them. At times I have defended certain individuals who have been condemned by that committee, but no one will deny the fact that the committee has been worth its weight in gold and has saved many million dollars to the taxpayers of the country. It has certainly aided the war effort. As a result of the standing which the Truman committee has with the American people, whenever the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] makes a statement we are bound to give it weight.

I do not wish to delay the construction of any pipe line, Mr. President. I do not desire to cause any delay whatever in connection with the transportation of vital oil to the East. However, there is a problem involved; and when I am told that the pipe lines are filled to overflowing, when I am told that the refineries in my section of the country, in Kansas, and in Oklahoma, are filled to overflowing, and that oil cannot be taken from them because of lack of transportation facilities, I say that it is only a fair proposal that we at least make a preliminary investigation through the proper committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague needs no assistance from me, either by way of argument or factual data, to support and sustain the point which he previously made before the Senate. Even while the discussion was in progress I received over the telephone a telegram from the mayor of Bridgeport, which reads as follows:

> Range oil and petroleum situation desperate in Bridgeport. Terrible suffering among peoples in this war-production city. With subzero temperatures, less than one day's supply of kerosene and range oil on hand. It is being doled out to sick and to families with infants and in ridiculously small amounts. Action is imperative and must be taken at once.
> JASPER MCLEAVY,
> Mayor of Bridgeport.

Mr. President, last week in the city of Hartford distributor tank trucks came to central distributing points where authorities had sought to collect such range oil and kerosene supplies as were available so that the trucks might pick it up and deliver it in small quantities to people who were on the preferred list—preferred by virtue of the dire circumstances in which they found themselves. Day after day went by and no oil came in. Women came with gallon containers, from homes where there had been no heat for 2 or the 3 days. They wept bitterly. That is the situation in Connecticut.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. How would the proposed pipeline affect the situation to which the able Senator from Connecticut has made reference?

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say to the able Senator from Illinois that I know nothing about any quarrel which may exist on the part of independent producers in the Missouri and Kansas oil fields or whether they do or do not receive access through a pipe line to tie into one running from the Texas Panhandle to Norris City, Ill. That is not the point at all. The point my colleague was making was that he wanted to see no action of any kind taken which might interfere with expediting consideration of the problem as it affects the Northeast. That is all I understood my colleague to say.

Mr. MALONEY. The answer to the inquiry of the able Senator from Illinois is something like a difference of 200,000 barrels of petroleum a day.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, is it not also true that in offering the resolution today the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] stated that he hoped prompt action would be taken on it so as to postpone construction of the pipe line?

Several Senators rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield and if so, to whom?

Mr. DANAHER. I prefer not to yield at this time. I make the point that for many months—as long ago as last March or April—those of us in the affected areas, where the plight is so serious, urgently sought to call attention of this body to the precarious situation. Later, in May, the Senate joined with us in an amendment to a bill then before this body which would provide not less than $20,000,000 to supply oil barges to carry oil and build up reserve stocks in the summer.

We had testimony then—and the Senate acted upon it—to the effect that those barge lines could have assisted, by their conversion to fuel oil carrying potentialities, within 150 days at the very most. However, it was not until December 20 that the affected agencies agreed on how they would get together.

I am not quarreling, by way of recrimination, over what has happened. That gets us no more oil or gasoline. My point is that the situation which many of us thought would become acute this winter has materialized into a very dire and desperate plight. Mr. President, I submit that we can brook no action which would involve further delay.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word in support of the position of the Senator from Connecticut.

The oil situation has been badly mismanaged. It has been bungled in such a way that havoc has been raised in my section of the country. Last summer I stood upon the floor of the Senate and predicted the situation that might occur in New England and in the Northeast. The conditions I predicted might occur have occurred. Today it is 32 degrees below zero in my State of New Hampshire. People are suffering; sickness is prevalent; conditions are desperate and some people are still talking of investigating. We want action, not investigation. I cannot understand statements to the effect that people have suffered only mental anguish. When I went home before Christmas, for the Christmas holidays, the morning I arrived in Boston I picked up a copy of the Boston Post and read in scareline headlines that 10 people had died because they could not obtain sufficient oil to keep them warm. People have died and we still want to investigate.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I desire to correct the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire. I said it was no less than mental anguish.

Mr. BRIDGES. I was not referring to what the Senator said. I know he realizes the situation and is doing all he can. However, it has been stated that there was some mental anguish. It is much more than mental anguish that is taking place in New England today. The situation is serious. People are suffering and will continue to suffer. There is no reason for further delay in taking action. Any action which will obtain the relief which is needed should be taken at once.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. GUFFEY. How many persons in the Senator's State listened to the Fuel Administrator when he requested more than a year ago that users of fuel oil convert to coal?

Mr. BRIDGES. I believe that as many as could obtain the material with which to convert, converted to the use of coal.

Mr. GUFFEY. During the last World War I was in Washington as a member of the Petroleum War Service Committee. I have been in the oil business all my life. We had some problems then, but they were child's play as compared with the transportation problems which confront us today. As I recall, not a single tanker was sunk by a submarine during that war. We were bringing oil up from the Gulf of Mexico with tankers in ample quantities. At the end of the war we had more production than we had when the war started. There is ample production at the present time. The problem is purely one of transportation. The Oil Coordinator has been trying to tell people in the East, in the North, and in Pennsylvania that there is a shortage in transportation and not in the production of oil.

During the present month, a 28-day month, the East Texas oil field, with which I am familiar, was shut down 10 days. If it were operating all the time it could produce an additional 3,800,000 barrels of oil a day; but there are no transportation facilities.

A great many Senators criticised the Oil Administrator when he advised people to change their heating methods from oil to coal, and they did not do so. They would receive one report from the Senate and another from the House. One report would be to the effect that there was no shortage, and another report would announce a shortage. The shortage was not in the oil, but in transportation. Any person who studied the problem could find that out.

Two weeks ago the railroad men of the country, at the suggestion of the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, got together and arranged to transport 150,000 barrels more oil in tank cars and in containers. We have not advised our people at home, and did not do so last year, to convert from fuel oil to coal. If that had been done, most of the present trouble would have been averted, but we did not ask our constituents to convert at the right time.

There will be another shortage in transportation in from 6 months to a year. Every time we send more troops overseas we must send more fuel oil and gasoline so that they may be properly supplied. I predict that before another 3 months shall have elapsed we shall have to send overseas 200,000 barrels more oil a day than we are sending at the present time. Therefore, Senators may as well educate their constituents to the conversion of oil-heating equipment to the use of coal. I believe that situation will prevail in Pittsburgh, in the West, and wherever transportation is inadequate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is the Senator from Pennsylvania in favor of building a pipe line?

Mr. GUFFEY. Yes; I am in favor of it. I did not criticize Secretary Ickes when the recommendation was made for the so-called Big Inch pipe line, but I think that the pipe line should be extended to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. BRIDGES. So do I.

Mr. GUFFEY. If Senators would consult Secretary Ickes and his oil committee—and he has the brains of the oil industry on that committee—they would receive the proper answers to all these questions in 1 hour's conference. I hope those in doubt about the situation will do so.

WILLIAM KOVATIS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired.

Is there objection to the present consideration of Senate bill 393?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 393) for the relief of William Kovatis was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That William Kovatis, formerly of the United States Marine Corps, shall be entitled to medical care at Government expense at a facility of the Veterans' Administration, until a finding by competent authority that no further improvement can be made by continued treatment, for the injury sustained at the naval prison, Portsmouth, N. H., on November 3, 1941: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or benefits other than benefits provided for herein shall be held to have accrued prior to or subsequent to the enactment of this act: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to change the nature of the discharge given to William Kovatis on May 18, 1942.

PERMANENT LOAN TO THE UNITED STATES BY THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 319) to authorize the acceptance of a permanent loan to the United States by the Board of Trustees of the National Gallery of Art, and for other purposes.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky tell us whether or not the Government now is making an appropriation to the National Gallery of Art and, if so, in what annual amount?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is an appropriation, the amount of which I do not now recall, for the maintenance of the National Gallery of Art. The bill relates to a $5,000,000 bequest, which it is desired on the part of the donor to give to the National Gallery of Art.

We already have such bequests which are loaned to the Government through the Treasury, and they bear a rate of interest which is fixed in the statute. Heretofore, from time to time bequests of this kind have been made in cash or in its equivalent. The policy has been to loan the money to the Government through the Treasury, and it bears a uniform rate of interest of 4 percent.

The bill is simply for the purpose of carrying out the policy heretofore adopted of accepting the bequest and authorizing that the money be loaned to the Government at a rate of interest fixed in the act itself, and it is in harmony with the policy which the Library of Congress and the National Gallery of Art have followed with respect to such bequests.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that, of course, the point which struck my notice with reference to the bill was that we could borrow $200,000 a year at a rate of interest a very great deal less than 4 percent, and could annually appropriate $200,000 in perpetuity to the National Gallery of Art. That is what we are really doing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it is true that we could borrow money at a lower rate of interest than 4 percent; but that is the percentage which has been fixed by law in regard to all such bequests; it is a uniform rate and, of course, offers itself as an inducement for such bequests which rich people wish to make to the Library of Congress or to the National Gallery of Art. It is in order that that may be done that passage of the bill is necessary.

Mr. DANAHER. I can understand that it could not be done unless we had such a bill on the statute books; but it is going to cost the Government $200,000 a year in perpetuity, or at least the difference between that amount and the cost of borrowing that same amount if we were to appropriate the money directly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, that is true in a sense, but we would not have the benefit of the bequests if we simply endeavored to finance directly.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 319) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive into the Treasury from time to time as a permanent loan by the Board of Trustees of the National Gallery of Art to the United States sums in cash of not to exceed $5,000,000 in the aggregate, and to pay interest on the principal amount of such loan at the rate of 4 percent per annum, payable semiannually. Such interest is hereby permanently appropriated for payment to the Board of Trustees of the National Gallery of Art.

CHARLES F. KEGEL

The bill (S. 167) for the relief of Charles F. Kegel was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $450 to Charles F. Kegel, of Turner, Mont., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for the loss of his truck, such truck having been destroyed on December 5, 1936, by a fire which burned a garage at Turner, Mont., in which it was stored for the purpose of safeguarding its load, consisting of property used in connection with Resettlement Administration projects: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ARTHUR A. SCHIPKE

The bill (S. 171) for the relief of Arthur A. Schipke was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur A. Schipke, of Meriden, Conn., the sum of $148.15, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for property damage resulting from a collision between his automobile and a Department of Agriculture truck in Union, Conn., on March 10, 1939: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

DR. PAUL ROGER ZAHLMANN

The bill (S. 173) for the relief of Dr. Paul Roger Zahlmann was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $51, to Dr. Paul Roger Zahlmann, of New Haven, Conn., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for payment for professional services rendered to Charles Huelsman, an employee of the Work Projects Administration, who sustained injuries while engaged in the performance of his duties as such an employee: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 355) for the relief of R. S. Howard Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the bill is a most unusual one. I wonder if we may have an explanation of it from the Senator from Louisiana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Neither the author of the bill nor the Senator who reported it is present at the moment.

Mr. DANAHER. Then I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection of the Senator from Connecticut, the bill will be passed over.

CLAIMS GROWING OUT OF MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY ERADICATION CAMPAIGN

The bill (S. 403) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered losses and sustained damages as a result of the campaign carried out by the Federal Government for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly in the State of Florida was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. VANDENBERG subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with calendar No. 32, Senate bill 403, which was passed over, it being a bill to run back into the ancient history of Florida's fruitfly, and to reach forward into the Treasury for about $10,000,000, I should like to have pending a motion to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion will be pending.

RICHARD BARKER

The bill (S. 404) for the relief of Richard Barker was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Richard Barker, of Lockport, La., the sum of $1,500, in full settlement of all his claims against the United States for reimbursement of expenses incurred in moving his residence adjoining the Government right-of-way due to caving of the bank of the Intracoastal Waterway Canal, at Lockport, La., during the year 1942: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provision of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MRS. ERNESTINE FUSELIER SIGLER

The bill (S. 405) for the relief of Mrs. Ernestine Fuselier Sigler was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Ernestine Fuselier Sigler, of Oberlin, La., the sum of $1,200, in full settlement of all her claims against the United States for personal injuries sustained by her and for expenses incurred as the result of an accident, involving an Army truck engaged in Third Army maneuvers on September 25, 1941: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

HOWARD M. SANDUS

The bill (S. 418) for the relief of Howard M. Sandus was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,700 to Howard M. Sandus, of Waukegan, Ill., in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for reimbursement for hospital and medical expenses incurred, and for compensation for personal injuries sustained by him as a result of the motor vehicle in which he was riding as a passenger being struck by a United States Army truck, at the intersection of United States Highway No. 41 and Illinois State Highway No. 22, on April 16, 1941: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 439) for the relief of Perkin's Gins, formerly Perkin's Oil Co. of Memphis, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, is the Senator who sponsored the bill present in order that he may explain to us something about the proposal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not observe either the author of the bill or the Senator who reported it on the floor at the moment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, the bill is apparently the predecessor of 220 contract claims of similar nature, dating back to 1918. We had better have an explanation of it. Therefore, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

HAZEL M. LEWIS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 52) for the relief of Hazel M. Lewis, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$5,738.85," and insert "$1,798.85"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, to Hazel M. Lewis, of Powers, Oreg., the sum of $1,798.85, in full settlement of her claim against the United States for damages as a result of personal injuries sustained by Hazel M. Lewis when assaulted by Richard T. Foster, an enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps assigned to Camp China Flats F-105, Fifty-four Hundred and Forty-third Company, on September 5, 1938, at Powers, Oreg.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VODIE JACKSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 517) for the relief of Vodie Jackson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$3,686", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Vodie Jackson, of Obion County, Tenn. (post-office address, Fulton, Ky.), the sum of $3,686, in full satisfaction of his claims against the United States for compensation for personal injuries and property damage sustained by him when his wagon, in which he was riding, was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck near Fulton, Ky., on October 18, 1940: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT T. GROOM, DAISY GROOM, AND MARGARET GROOM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 518) for the relief of Robert T. Groom, Daisy Groom, and Margaret Groom, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "Margaret Groom", to insert "Turpin"; on page 2, line 3, after the words "Robert T. Groom", to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$952"; in line 5, after the words "Daisy Groom", to strike out "$5,500" and insert "$4,000"; at the end of line 5, to strike out the words "personal injuries sustained" and insert "all damages, including hospitalization, suffered"; at the end of line 7, to strike out the comma and "$7,500" and insert "Turpin, $3,500"; and at the end of line 8, to strike out "personal injuries sustained", and insert "all damages, including hospitalization, suffered", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert T. Groom, Daisy Groom, his wife, and Margaret Groom Turpin, his daughter, all of Murfreesboro, Tenn., the respective sums hereinafter specified in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States arising out of a collision which occurred near Murfreesboro, Tenn., on October 21, 1941, when an automobile driven by Robert H. Pate, a United States mail carrier, ran into the automobile of the said Robert T. Groom: To the said Robert T. Groom, $952 as compensation for property damage and other damages sustained by him; to the said Daisy Groom, $4,000 as compensation for all damages, including hospitalization, suffered by her; and to the said Margaret Groom Turpin, $3,500 as compensation for all damages, including hospitalization, suffered by her: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Robert T. Groom, Daisy Groom, and Margaret Groom Turpin."

EMILIANO LOPEZ AND ELIZA R. LOPEZ

The bill (S. 493) for the relief of Emiliano Lopez and Eliza R. Lopez was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emiliano Lopez and Eliza R. Lopez, Santa Fe, N. Mex., the sum of $615.30. Payment of such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States by the said Emiliano and Eliza R. Lopez for damages arising out of an accident in which Patricio Lopez, minor son of the said Emiliano and Eliza R. Lopez, suffered personal injuries when the truck which he was driving collided with a truck owned by the United States and used in connection with Indian Service operations in the Pueblo Nambe, Santa Fe County, N. Mex., on August 12, 1939: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

WOMEN'S ARMY AUXILIARY CORPS

The bill (S. 495) to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the bill or its general objectives. I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain it, if he is available. If not, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under objection of the Senator from Oregon, the bill will be passed over.

(This bill was subsequently considered and passed.)

ADDITIONAL PAY FOR PERSONNEL OF ARMY ASSIGNED TO DIVING DUTY

The bill (S. 427) to provide additional pay for personnel of the Army of the United States assigned to diving duty was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That enlisted men of the Army of the United States assigned to the duty of diving shall receive additional pay, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, at the rate of not less than $5 per month and not exceeding $30 per month: Provided, That officers and enlisted men employed as divers in actual salvage or repair operations in depths of over 90 feet, or in depths of less than 90 feet when the officer in charge of the salvage or repair operation shall find in accordance with instructions prescribed by the Secretary of War that extraordinary hazardous conditions exist, shall receive, in addition to the foregoing, the sum of $5 per hour for each hour or fraction thereof so employed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 617) for the relief of Homer C. Chapman was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in connection with Calendar No. 43, Senate bill 617, let me say that the report in the file would indicate that the claimant sought to enlist in the United States Army on June 9, 1899; that 4 days later he entered a hospital; that a month and a half later was discharged from whatever service he had rendered; and that at this late date, having all the time been found to be mentally defective, he would be restored, under the bill, to all the benefits enjoyed by honorably discharged soldiers. I assume the restoration would date back to 1899. I note that the Secretary of War filed an adverse report recommending that the bill be not passed. If there be any reason why the facts, as I understand them, should justify the adoption of the measure, I shall be glad to have an explanation made accordingly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to comply with the request of the Senator from Connecticut.

The bill was passed by the Senate at the last session, having been unanimously recommended by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. It was also recommended by the House Committee on Military Affairs. It has been rerecommended at this session because the facts of the case, while they are as the Senator has described and as they are set forth in the bill, are clearly that this man became ill of the "flu" or some similar disease, and while he was suffering from a high fever was inconsiderately diagnosed as insane. As soon as the fever passed, the man recovered his normal mental condition and has been an outstanding and effective citizen of Wyoming ever since. The purpose of the bill is to correct what was an obvious error and rather an unfair decision against the soldier.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. DANAHER. How much will it cost the Government to reinstate this beneficiary on the rolls back to 1899?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is no statement to that effect in the report of the Secretary of War, and I assume, therefore, that it was not considered that such would be the result. My understanding is that the bill authorizes the beneficiary to obtain whatever pension benefits there may be from now on.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, it may well be that the explanation which has been offered by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming will completely dissipate whatever doubts I may have with reference to this measure, but I should like to ascertain what the facts may be with respect to the monetary benefits which will accrue. I, therefore, respectfully ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUITFLY

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was temporarily out of the Chamber, having been called to the telephone. I wish to ask what disposition was made of calendar No. 32, Senate bill 403, for the relief of certain claimants in Florida who suffered losses and damages by reason of the campaign conducted for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can assure the Senator that the bill went over.

GRANT TO SAN DIEGO OF CERTAIN LAND

The bill (S. 621) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to grant to the city of San Diego for street purposes a parcel of land situated in the city of San Diego and State of California was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to grant and convey, under such conditions as may be approved by the Secretary of the Navy, to the city of San Diego, State of California, for use as a public street, all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to a strip of land containing 5,950 square feet contiguous to Lytton Street between Barnett Avenue and Rosecrans Street at the United States Naval Training Station, San Diego, Calif.

SEC. 2. That if any part of the above-described lands hereby granted to the city of San Diego shall be used for any other purpose or purposes, or shall cease to be maintained by the city of San Diego for the purpose for which granted, such part shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 660) to prevent certain deductions in determining parity or comparable prices of agricultural commodities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over under objection.

ADDITIONAL SHIP-REPAIR FACILITIES

The bill (H. R. 1446) authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship-repair facilities, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a few days ago the very able and courteous Senator from Massachusetts spoke to me about the bill when it was placed on the calendar. I suggested that consideration of the bill should wait until the call of the calendar. I should like to have an explanation of the bill from the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a bill of considerable importance to the Navy. It authorizes the appropriation of $210,000,000 for ship-repair facilities, principally floating drydocks. The losses the Navy has sustained at sea and the damages which have occurred otherwise to its vessels have necessitated a great expansion in the building of floating drydocks. Such drydocks are of various sizes, some designed to take care of cruisers which are damaged, others to service destroyers, and others submarines. In many instances such floating docks accompany the fleet. The Navy has estimated that it needs $133,000,000 to acquire mobile drydocks for the present year and $77,000,000 is the estimated cost of collateral facilities and work incidental thereto. Heretofore $385,000,000 have been authorized for ship-repair facilities, all of which has been allocated except $20,000,000.

It has become very important to the naval program to increase in every possible way the floating-dock facilities. Drydocks, as we all know, are all in constant use in the building of new vessels. The floating drydocks are built rapidly and in such a way that they are able to go out to sea, so that when a vessel with the fleet is damaged it may be returned to use immediately the repairs are made, and often they can be made at sea without the necessity of taking the vessel to a drydock on land.

I think that covers the explanation. The report is rather long, but it will be noted from the report that the Navy is of the opinion that the deficiency in such floating-dock facilities will increase as the Navy itself expands. The deficiency in drydocks for cruisers and vessels of similar size for 1943 is estimated at 4 and in 1945 as 7. This bill provides for the building of 5 cruiser floating docks. In the case of destroyers and vessels of similar size, the estimated deficiency in drydocks for 1943 is 9, and for 1945 it is 45. The number of floating drydocks recommended is 18.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to attract the attention of the distinguished Senator to this language in the report:

There is a pressing need for vastly increased drydocking facilities all over the world to aid in the prosecution of the war.

Are we building for our own use or for the use of our partners in the war?

Mr. WALSH. These are entirely for our own use. They are not embraced or included in any lend-lease program.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I was next going to ask. These drydocks are floatable, of course?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And can be maneuvered from one place to another and eventually can be returned to our own country or its possessions?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; that is true.

Mr. McNARY. I wanted to have that made plain.

Mr. WALSH. The report is rather interesting and rather complete. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the report (No. 51) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1446) authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship-repair facilities, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize an appropriation of $210,000,000 for additional ship-repair facilities, to consist of floating drydocks and collateral equipment and facilities. The bill also provides authority for the acquisition of land, but it is not now definitely known that it will be necessary to exercise this authority. The bill is similar to previous authorization acts of this nature, and is, accordingly, phrased so as to permit flexibility in this, as in other particulars, in order to provide for the changing developments of the war.

The Navy Department has estimated that, in order to provide essential mobile drydocking facilities, there will be required a total of $210,000,000. Of this sum, $133,000,000 is the estimated cost of the required mobile drydocks, and $77,000,000 is the estimated cost of collateral facilities and work incidental thereto.

There is a pressing need for vastly increased drydocking facilities all over the world to aid in the prosecution of the war. The increase in the United Nations' navies and merchant marines, and the extension of the operations of our fleets, will accentuate and aggravate this need. In addition, the British Admiralty has made urgent requests for this country to provide it with docking facilities in the active theaters of war.

Mobile floating docks are recommended as the most efficient and satisfactory for the purpose. The advantages of mobile docks include the following: They will be able to follow or accompany the fleets, thus facilitating prompt repairs. By affording quick service wherever it is most needed, they will serve to maintain units in active service in all spheres of operation and will thereby increase the striking power of the navies. The construction of graving docks and other types of drydocks require long periods for construction in locations where the difficulties of transportation of men, equipment, and materials from the United States will be considerable and will involve the employment of vessels. The construction of mobile docks will require less time and will not require the use of vessels needed for other war services.

The committee understands that the Navy Department has made a comprehensive global study of the drydocks available to the United Nations for accommodating the various types and sizes of vessels which will be involved in the prosecution of the war. This study is summarized briefly in the table below. The table shows that there is a great deficiency in available drydocks, and that the mobile docks proposed to be authorized will satisfy the need only in part. The table also summarizes the estimated costs.

|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1943 | 1945 | | Per unit | Total |
| Cruisers and vessels of similar size | 4 | 7 | 5 | $11,200,000 | $56,000,000 |
| Destroyers and vessels of similar size | 9 | 45 | 18 | 3,000,000 | 54,000,000 |
| Patrol craft and vessels of similar size | 75 | 93 | 25 | 900,000 | 22,500,000 |
| Total | | | | | 133,000,000 |

All deficiencies cannot be met because of the requirements for other war purposes. The drydocks recommended are reported to be within the quantities of materials available to the Navy Department under present allocation programs.

Although the Navy Department has definite plans for the use of the drydocks to be provided by this bill, the committee was not informed as to where they will be located. This will be determined by the needs existing when such docks become available.

The committee is advised that the Navy Department has given careful consideration to the steel requirements for the proposed mobile drydocks and has designed a program for their construction under which the average steel requirement will be 5,811 tons a month and the maximum in any one month will be 11,000 tons. This has been correlated with other naval construction so as to keep the total consumption of steel plate in any one month below the present allocations of steel to the Navy Department. The whole program is designed to be completed in 20 months. The maximum consumption would occur in August 1943. When the landing-craft program is completed, the Navy's steel requirement will be lessened.

The Navy Department reports that it will be possible to construct the docks without impairing the essential shipbuilding program. If, in any one month, there is insufficient steel to carry on all of the shipbuilding programs together with the drydock program, the construction of the docks will be temporarily suspended.

The recommended docks will be self-contained as far as possible, but they will require certain collateral facilities and incidental work in order to make them fully effective. Such facilities and work may include berthing piers, temporary shop buildings, tools, temporary power supplies, and other services, as well as dredging and the moorings of the drydocks. The estimated cost of these facilities and work is $77,000,000. The total appropriation is therefore $210,000,000.

This authorization is in addition to existing naval authorizations for ship-repair facilities totaling $385,000,000, substantially all of which has been committed, or tentatively committed, except for a necessary small reserve for contingencies.

The need for the recommended mobile docks is very urgent and commencement of construction at the earliest possible date is necessary. In order to expedite such commencement, the Navy Department requested the approval of the President to contract for the entire program, within the estimates herein submitted. This approval was given subject to the condition that the Navy Department could complete the drydock program out of its present assignment of steel without impinging on its essential programs. Arrangements have been made to conform to this condition.

Pursuant to the above Presidential approval, contracts were made for 48 drydocks with the following contractors:

For cruisers and vessels of similar size

[Each drydock consisting of 7 sections]

| Number of sections | Contractor | Location |
|---|---|---|
| 12 | Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. | Morgan City, La. |
| 5 | do | Eureka, Calif. |
| 8 | Pollock-Stockton Shipbuilding Corporation. | Stockton, Calif. |
| 6 | Everett-Pacific Co. | Everett, Wash. |
| 4 | Pittsburgh-Des Moines Co. | Pittsburgh, Pa. |

For destroyers and vessels of similar size

| Number of drydocks | Contractor | Location |
|---|---|---|
| 18 | Pacific Bridge Co. | Alameda, Calif. |

For patrol craft and vessels of similar size

| Number of drydocks | Contractor | Location |
|---|---|---|
| 3 | Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. | Newburgh, N.Y. |
| 6 | Quincy Barge Builders. | Decatur, Ill. |
| 6 | George D. Auchter Co. | Jacksonville, Fla. |
| 6 | Doullut & Ewin | Mobile, Ala. |
| 4 | The Foundation Co. | Kearney, N. J. |

Section 3 requires the Secretary of the Navy to report to the Congress every 60 days, or more frequently, all acquisitions of land effected under the authority of this bill.

Section 4 provides that any ship, boat, barge, or floating drydock of the Navy may be leased in accordance with the Lend-Lease Act but that they cannot be otherwise disposed of and that title thereto shall remain in the United States. The committee is of the opinion that, while it may be in the national interest to lease the above items to other members of the United Nations, still, where it is practicable to do so, title thereto should remain in the United States.

There are confidential details of the contemplated program with which members of the committee have been acquainted but which for obvious reasons are not included in this report.

The following letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives sets forth the views and recommendations of the Navy Department on this bill. This letter is hereby made a part of this report:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 22, 1943.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship repair facilities, and for other purposes.

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to authorize additional ship-repair facilities.

There is a pressing need for vastly increased ship drydocking facilities all over the world. As the United Nations' navies and merchant marine increase in number and as the operations of our fleets are extended into new areas, this need will be accentuated and aggravated. This prospective condition indicates the necessity for the construction of highly mobile floating docks which can follow the fleets or accompany them. In addition, the British Admiralty has made urgent requests for this country to provide it with docking facilities in the active theaters of war.

Mobile floating docks are considered the most desirable to meet our current and prospective needs, not only because of their mobility but also because graving docks and other types of drydocks require long periods for construction in locations where the difficulties of transportation of men, equipment, and materials from the United States will be considerable. Furthermore, by constructing mobile docks, it is possible to have such facilities ready for use wherever they are most required.

A comprehensive global study has been made of the drydocks that will be available to the United States for accommodating the various types and sizes of vessels which will be involved in the prosecution of the war. The results are summarized briefly in the table below, which also indicates the number of floating drydocks recommended to partially eliminate the deficiencies, as well as the estimated costs of the drydocks themselves.

| Type of vessel served by drydocks | Deficiency in drydocks, December— | | Number of floating drydocks recommended | Estimated cost | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1943 | 1945 | | Per unit | Total |
| Cruisers and vessels of similar size | 4 | 7 | 5 | $11,300,000 | $56,500,000 |
| Destroyers and vessels of similar size | 9 | 45 | 18 | 3,000,000 | 54,000,000 |
| Patrol craft and vessels of similar size | 75 | 93 | 25 | 900,000 | 22,500,000 |
| Total | | | | | 133,000,000 |

All deficiencies could not be met because of the requirements for other war purposes. The numbers recommended are considered to be within the quantities of materials available to the Navy Department under present allocations.

In order to expedite the drydock construction, approval of the President was requested and granted to contract for the entire program within the estimates herein submitted. This approval was given subject to the condition that the Navy Department could complete it out of its present assignment of steel without impinging on its essential programs. Arrangements have been made to meet this proviso.

Although the drydocks will be self-contained as far as possible, they will still require certain collateral facilities and incidental work in order to make them fully effective. These facilities and work may include berthing piers, temporary shop buildings, tools, temporary power supplies, and other services, as well as dredging and the moorings for the drydocks. The estimated cost of these items is $77,000,000. The total request for authorization, therefore, is $210,000,000. Such authorization is required at this time because existing authorizations for ship-repair facilities totaling $385,000,000 are already committed or tentatively committed, except for a necessary small reserve for contingencies.

The Navy Department recommends enactment of the proposed legislation.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL, Acting.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to explain section 4 of the bill. What is the purpose of that section?

Mr. WALSH. Section 4 reads as follows:

Hereafter any ship, boat, barge, or floating drydock of the Navy may be leased in accordance with the act approved March 11, 1941 (55 Stat. 31), but not otherwise disposed of, for periods not beyond the termination of the present wars, but title thereto shall remain in the United States.

That amendment was placed in the bill in the House of Representatives. This, by the way, is a House bill, and, probably, if passed by the Senate today, and enacted into law, will become Public Law No. 1. The provision referred to was put in for the purpose of retaining the control and title to these floating docks, so that, at the end of the war, they will return to the possession of the United States.

Mr. AIKEN. Then, it has the effect of putting a limitation on that part of the Lend-Lease Act?

Mr. WALSH. It certainly has.

Mr. AIKEN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RENTAL ALLOWANCES TO CERTAIN OFFICERS

The bill (S. 641) to amend section 6 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 relating to the payment of rental allowances to certain officers was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I assume this is to be supplemental to the Joint Service Pay Act of 1922?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Which I think was later modified in 1942?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. What change does it effect?

Mr. WALSH. The committee took occasion to write a rather extended report, as the Senator will observe, and went into the whole question of pay of naval officers, and allowances of various kinds, so that all the information would be in a document available to all Senators.

The bill now before the Senate deals only with the rental allowances of officers of the Navy, the Army, and the Marine Corps who are without dependents. Officers who have dependents would not be affected by the proposed legislation.

In the act increasing the pay of enlisted men and officers enacted in 1942 provision was made that rental quarters should not be given to officers who were without dependents and who were longer than 3 months in the field service. The Comptroller General's Office ruled that every Army officer and every Marine Corps officer is in the field service, now that we are in war. Previous to the war, entering the field service meant participating in maneuvers, being away from one's habitation or home, and where the Government itself would furnish quarters.

When an officer is at sea, if he is without dependents, he is not given rental allowances, but if he is at sea for less than 3 months, or is in the field service, he is given the rental allowances, on the theory that he will be away only a short time, and when he returns he will have a home to which to go.

The proposed legislation is necessary, for if it is not enacted and the rental allowances permitted, the Navy and the Army will have to spend millions of dollars in providing facilities for all their officers. As we know, facilities for living quarters are now provided at a post of duty, and rental allowances are made when they are not. Therefore the Comptroller General realizes that his ruling is probably not in compliance with the intention of Congress, or with the spirit of existing law, and he has suspended putting into operation his ruling until March 1, in order that the proposed legislation may be enacted, which, briefly, will give officers who are without dependents rental allowances when the Government does not furnish them with a place to sleep. When they are with troops, they are not given allowances, when they are with ships they are not given allowances, but when they are in Washington and have dependents, they are given rental allowances. Under the ruling, if they have no dependents, they are not given rental allowances. This bill would permit them to get rental allowances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from a hasty examination of the report and the bill, I am unable to find any estimate of the cost to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct. The Navy Department is unable to give an estimate, but I call the attention of the Senator to page 6 of the report, wherein it is stated:

> The Navy Department is unable to make any worth-while estimate of the cost to the Government if the proposed legislation is enacted into law. Without such legislation, however, it may be necessary to construct quarters for officers throughout the country at a tremendous cost and use of critical materials; enactment, therefore, could result in an over-all saving.

Mr. McNARY. In the days gone by, what have these men done?

Mr. WALSH. They lived in bachelor quarters or were paid rental allowances.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator says this applies only to bachelors.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; practically; to those without dependents. If a man has a dependent mother, he is given a rental allowance.

Mr. McNARY. During all the years covering the history of the country, these men have gotten along without quarters being furnished them. Why now are we supplying them quarters, and what is the immediate urgency?

Mr. WALSH. Such an officer is furnished Government quarters. In the absence of quarters he is paid a rental allowance. Heretofore he has either been furnished quarters or been paid the rental allowance. Now there are no quarters for him, and the Comptroller General under a recent ruling will not authorize the payment of rental allowances. At the Naval Academy at Annapolis, for instance, there are not nearly enough quarters for married officers or for those with dependents.

Mr. McNARY. I understand.

Mr. WALSH. When they go outside, there is a rental allowance. When there is no room for them and they have to go to a hotel, they are given rental allowances.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, but what I want to know is why we now find ourselves without the required quarters. Is it because we have enlarged the armed forces?

Mr. WALSH. Absolutely. There has been a tremendous expansion, as the Senator knows. Heretofore we have not had this problem.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I desired to have brought out. Heretofore we have gotten along without the expenditure. Now the necessity is due, if at all, to the expansion of the armed forces.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has correctly stated the situation.

Mr. McNARY. I have no idea of objecting, because I can see some reason for the proposed legislation, but I am sorry that the naval authorities, and my very able friend the Senator from Massachusetts, are unable to give any estimate of the liability that would fall upon the Treasury of the United States to implement the proposed legislation. Perhaps the information can be obtained by the other House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 641) to amend section 6 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 relating to the payment of rental allowances to certain officers, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, approved June 16, 1942, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"No rental allowance shall accrue to an officer having no dependents while he is on field duty unless his commanding officer certifies that he was necessarily required to procure quarters at his own expense, or while on sea duty, except for temporary periods of sea duty not exceeding 3 months, nor shall any rental allowance accrue to an officer with or without dependents who is assigned quarters at his permanent station unless a competent superior authority of the service concerned certifies that such quarters are not occupied because of being inadequate for the occupancy of the officer and his dependents, if any, and such certifications shall be conclusive: Provided, That an officer although furnished with quarters shall be entitled to rental allowance as authorized in this section if by reason of orders of competent authority his dependents are prevented from occupying such quarters."

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, in view of the discussion on the floor, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the report from the Committee on Naval Affairs on Senate bill 641.

There being no objection, the report (No. 52) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 641) to amend section 6 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 relating to the payment of rental allowances to certain officers, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

The purpose of the bill is to amend the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 so as to permit the payment of rental allowance to an officer without dependents while on field duty, when his commanding officer certifies that he was necessarily required to procure quarters at his own expense, or while on sea duty for temporary periods not exceeding 3 months. The bill also provides that whenever competent superior authority certifies that quarters are not occupied because of being inadequate, such certification shall be conclusive.

BRIEF EXPLANATION OF SERVICE PAY

The Joint Service Pay Act of June 10, 1922, fixed the pay and allowances of personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service. For officers of these services, the law prescribed pay and allowances according to rank, consisting of pay, subsistence allowance, and rental allowance. In addition thereto, officers and enlisted men were entitled to 50 percent additional pay for duty involving flying.

The subsistence allowance was fixed at $18 per month for all officers without dependents, and an allowance for officers with dependents ranging from $18 to $54 per month according to the rank of the officer.

Rental allowance was provided for officers with dependents in amounts ranging from $40 per month to $120 per month, according to rank; the rental allowance being allowed to officers with dependents; except when Government quarters were assigned for the officers and dependents. Officers without dependents were not entitled to rental allowance while on field or sea duty, nor when assigned Government quarters.

The Joint Service Pay Act of June 10, 1922, also provided pay for enlisted men of all the military services at rates ranging from $30 per month to $157.50 per month, according to rating and length of service. This act also provided for a money allowance for quarters and subsistence for enlisted men not quartered or subsisted in kind, at rates prescribed by the President, not to exceed a total of $4 per day.

EXPLANATION OF THE PAY READJUSTMENT ACT OF 1942

The Pay Readjustment Act of 1942, Public Law 607, Seventy-seventh Congress, approved June 16, 1942, reenacted in substance most of the provisions of the Joint Service Pay Act of June 10, 1922, but increased the pay in the case of ensigns of the Navy, and officers of corresponding rank in the other military services; and generally increased the rates of rental and subsistence allowance in the case of officers.

This act also increased the pay of enlisted men and increased the maximum allowance for quarters and subsistence allowance to $5 per day. In addition, it provided for payment of a quarters allowance to enlisted men of certain grades (chief petty officers, and petty officers, first and second class) with dependents, for periods during which public quarters are not provided and available for his dependents.

The following tables show pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men:

[1] Allowances in this column are on the basis of a month of 30 days. For a month of greater or less number of days the amounts should be correspondingly increased or decreased.

[2] The maximum allowances which will accrue to a commissioned warrant officer will be such that the total of base pay, pay for length of service, and allowances for subsistence and rental of quarters will not exceed $458.33 per month. Deduction of the necessary amount should be made from the rental allowance.

NOTES

All commissioned officers are entitled to a 10-percent and warrant officers to a 20-percent increase in base pay for any period of service while on sea duty or duty in any place beyond the continental limits of the United States or in Alaska.

Admirals are entitled to a personal money allowance of $2,200 per year. Vice admirals are entitled to a personal money allowance of $500 per year.

No person, active or retired, shall suffer, by reason of this act, any reduction in pay, allowances, or compensation to which he was entitled upon the effective date of this act (sec. 19, act of June 16, 1942).

Officers and warrant officers shall receive an increase of 50-percent of their pay when detailed to duty involving flying (sec. 18, act of June 16, 1942).

Retired officers and warrant officers shall, when on active duty, receive full pay and allowances of the grade or rank in which they serve on active duty (sec. 15, act of June 16, 1942).

FAMILY ALLOWANCE

The dependents of enlisted men of the fourth to seventh pay grades (apprentice seamen to petty officer third class) are entitled to a family allowance consisting of a contribution from the Government and an amount deducted from the pay of the man. The amount paid to dependents varies according to the number and class of dependents. The family allowance is payable to wife and children without requiring a showing of dependency. For other classes of dependents—i. e., mother, father, brother, or sister—the allowance is payable only where the person is dependent on the enlisted man for substantial support. For the purpose of payment of allowances in the case of dependents of enlisted men, determination of the question of dependency is made by the department concerned. The law providing for family allowance is operative only during war and for 6 months thereafter.

EFFECT OF THE AMENDMENT IN S. 641

The Comptroller General has decided that under the provisions of section 6 of the act of June 16, 1942, which prohibits the payment of rental allowance to officers without dependents "while on field duty," all officers serving on shore, with troops, either within or without the United States, are on field duty. This construction of the law prohibits payment of rental allowance to officers without dependents, serving ashore, with troops, even though they are not assigned public quarters. The Comptroller General also decided that officers without dependents serving on seat duty for temporary duty not exceeding 4 months, are entitled to rental allowance only where the department concerned certifies that the shore duty is paramount to the duty he is required to render at sea.

The amended language in S. 641 will have the following effect:

(a) It will permit payment of rental allowance to an officer serving on field duty if his commanding officer certifies that he was necessarily required to procure quarters at his own expense.

(b) An officer without dependents will be entitled by law to rental allowance while on temporary sea duty for not to exceed 3 months.

(c) Payments of rental allowance will be authorized in the case of an officer who is assigned quarters, provided a competent superior authority certifies that such quarters are not occupied because of being inadequate for the occupancy of the officer and his dependents.

The Navy Department is unable to make any worth-while estimate of the cost to the Government if the proposed legislation is enacted into law. Without such legislation, however, it may be necessary to construct quarters for officers throughout the country at a tremendous cost and use of critical materials; enactment, therefore, could result in an over-all saving.

The bill was introduced at the request of the Navy Department. It meets with the approval of the War Department and has been cleared by the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

WOMEN'S ARMY AUXILIARY CORPS

Mr. O'DANIEL obtained the floor.

Mr. REYNOLDS and several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. O'DANIEL. For what purpose does the Senator from North Carolina desire to interrupt?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to ask unanimous consent that we return to Calendar No. 41, Senate bill 495, to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States. Unfortunately, a moment ago I was called out of the Chamber to answer a telephone call when the bill was reached on the calendar.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I gladly yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate recur to the consideration of Calendar No. 41, Senate bill 495?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I objected when the bill was reached on the calendar, in the absence of an explanation. The able Senator from North Carolina is now present, and I shall be glad to give him an opportunity to explain the nature of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the bill provides the same benefits for members of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps that are granted members of the armed forces. For instance, it provides for increased pay for overseas service, and transportation in many instances, to which they are not entitled now. It also provides for uniform allowances. In other words, up to the present the members of this corps have not been in the Army, and the enactment of this bill would make them a part of the Army. Every woman who becomes a member of that force relieves some man for combat duty.

In further explanation of the bill, it will authorize the appointment and the enlistment of women in the Army for the duration of the present war, plus a period of 6 months.

Mr. McNARY. If the proposed legislation shall be enacted, would it place the WAACS on a legal parity with the WAVES?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is my understanding.

Mr. McNARY. At the present time the boat is unbalanced, as it were?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is unbalanced at the present time. I see in the Chamber the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and I believe he will agree to that.

Mr. McNARY. I am willing to accept the Senator's word without any verification or supporting testimony.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. So the purpose of the bill is to place women serving in the Army and those in the Navy on an absolute equality?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Exactly.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. For what purpose?

Mr. DANAHER. For further inquiry with reference to Senate bill 495.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Certainly I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Texas. I notice that in lines 1 to 5, inclusive, on page 3, of Senate bill 495, we depart from the form hitherto utilized in legislation as to the period within which the bill would operate if it should become a law. The Senator will notice, beginning with line 25, on page 2, the words "That there is hereby established in the Army of the United States, for the period of the present war," and so forth. The Senator will certainly see that it does not say "until the cessation of hostilities in the present war." In other words, the very terminology employed differs from the provision we have hitherto relied upon in legislation, to end the legislation at about a given time, at the time of the cessation of hostilities in the present war, or at a fixed date.

My point is that in order to make this language uniform with that which we have hitherto adopted in legislation temporary in character, we should strike out the word "of" after the word "period" in line 1, page 3, and insert "until the cessation of hostilities in"; and on page 3, line 4, after the word "prescribe", insert "or until January 1, 1945, whichever is earlier."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 495) to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there is hereby established in the Army of the United States, for the period of the present war and for 6 months thereafter or for such shorter period as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation shall prescribe, a component to be known as the "Women's Army Auxiliary Corps."

SEC. 2. The enlisted personnel of such corps shall consist of women enlisted in the Army of the United States under the provisions of the concluding paragraph of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (54 Stat. 213). All laws and regulations now or hereafter applicable to enlisted men or former enlisted men of the Army of the United States and their dependents and beneficiaries shall, in like cases and except where otherwise expressly provided, be applicable respectively to enlisted personnel and former enlisted personnel of such corps and their dependents and beneficiaries.

SEC. 3. The commissioned officers of such corps shall consist of women appointed as officers in the Army of the United States under the provisions of the joint resolution of September 22, 1941 (55 Stat. 728), and ordered into the active military service of the United States. They and their dependents and beneficiaries shall have all of the rights, privileges, and benefits accorded in like cases to other persons under that act.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is authorized to prescribe such additional regulations applicable to such corps and to the members thereof as he may deem necessary. The Women's Army Auxiliary Corps and the Army Nurse Corps shall be the only women's organizations in the Army of the United States.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no woman appointed as an officer in the Army of the United States under the provisions hereof who has previously held an appointment as an officer of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps established pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 14, 1942 (Public Law 554, 77th Cong.), shall be entitled to any uniform allowance payable to officers of the Army of the United States.

Such officers who have not received a complete issue of uniforms, insignia, accessories, and equipment prescribed under the provisions of section 8 of such act of May 14, 1942, may be issued the remainder of such prescribed articles, and all such officers who have heretofore received, or may hereafter receive such complete issue, or any part thereof, may retain such articles as their personal property.

SEC. 6. Effective on the last day of the second calendar month following the date of the approval of this act, the act of May 14, 1942, as amended, except section 11 thereof, is hereby repealed. Section 11 of such act of May 14, 1942, shall not be applicable to enlisted personnel or commissioned officers of the corps established by this act except in cases in which its applicability is based upon the status of such enlisted personnel or commissioned officers as former members of the corps established by such act of May 14, 1942. Enlistment or acceptance of appointment under the provisions of this act shall terminate service under the act of May 14, 1942, and personnel who were enrolled or appointed under the act last mentioned who do not so enlist or accept appointment hereunder will be discharged. The Secretary of War is authorized to provide transportation and sleeping accommodations, or an allowance in lieu thereof at the rate of 5 cents per mile, for the travel from her last duty post to the place of her acceptance for appointment or enrollment to any member of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps established pursuant to the provisions of such act of May 14, 1942, who is not appointed or enlisted in the Army of the United States pursuant to the provisions of this act.

Mr. DANAHER. I move to amend the amendment of the committee in the particulars I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 1, after the word "period", it is proposed to strike out the word "of" and to insert "until the cessation of hostilities in," and on page 3, line 4, after the word "prescribe," to insert "or until January 1, 1945, whichever is earlier."

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have no objection to the amendments.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WILLIS].

THE WORK OF THE OFFICE OF CENSORSHIP

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, one of the most difficult problems of a free government during time of war is to enforce restrictive supervision over communications. This responsibility touches the people of America in their most sensitive privilege—freedom of expression. It requires supervision of matter which may be safely printed in the newspapers, broadcast over the radio, or transmitted through the mails without damage to our war program.

The Director of Censorship, Mr. Byron Price, is administering this duty with a minimum amount of friction or shock to the American people. Recently he submitted to the Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a report of the objectives and methods of the Office of Censorship. I have had the privilege of examining that report, and I believe that a summary of it will be informative to the Members of the Senate. With the consent of the Vice President, and of the Director of Censorship, I ask unanimous consent to have the summary printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 21, 1943.

The Honorable HENRY A. WALLACE,
President, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the hope that Members of the Seventy-eighth Congress will familiarize themselves with the work of the Office of Censorship, and will give constructive thought to improvements, I take the liberty of outlining below the objectives and present operations of this war agency.

Censorship has always been an integral part of armed combat. In most of our previous wars, communications to and from, and within, zones of combat have been censored directly by the military under the general constitutional powers of the Commander in Chief. In the limited cases where civilian censorship agencies have been set up, a direct link with military requirements has been preserved. Censorship can have no possible justification in a free country except as an aid to the armed forces in their contact with the enmy.

The present Office of Censorship is under civilian direction, but the basis of its operations in the field of communications was formulated by the War and Navy Departments. Long before Pearl Harbor, Army and Navy officers were detailed to plan for censorship. A comprehensive study of American experience in this field, and of the methods employed by other democracies, was made by a joint Army and Navy Board. Schools were set up in the departments and certain officer personnel was trained for war service in censorship.

On the night of December 7, 1941, this personnel was put to work on the mails and cables at the direction of the President. Subsequently, in Section 303 of the First War Powers Act, Congress underlined the operation through statutory enactment. On December 19, 1941, the President issued Executive Order No. 8985 which established the Office of Censorship and gave it discretionary authority to censor communications of all types entering or leaving the country.

The Army and Navy personnel already employed in this work was detached from the departments and detailed to the Office of Censorship. Since then some of these officers have been withdrawn, but cable and radio censorship remains today under the direct supervision of Capt. H. K. Fenn, a regular naval officer, while examination of the international mail is supervised by Col. W. Preston Corderman, of the Regular Army. Both Captain Fenn and Colonel Corderman serve as Assistant Directors in the Office of Censorship.

At the very beginning, we adopted two rules of procedure as basic to this operation. These rules have been reiterated time after time in instructions to our personnel.

First, no information is to be allocated to anyone, or even copied from private communications, unless it relates to the war. The regulations which are constantly before all of our censors begin with the cardinal statement: "That which does not concern the war does not concern censorship." We have assumed that Congress in no wise intended that censorship should be used to enforce peacetime statutes or discover personal or political foibles.

Second, the greatest care must be taken to restrict the distribution of such information within the Government, and to make certain that none of it is circulated outside the Government. To that end our examination of the mail and cables is conducted in guarded rooms by employees who have been acquainted with those sections of the Espionage Act which relate to unauthorized disclosure, and who have signed the most binding pledge of secrecy; allocation to other Government agencies is according to a closely restricted plan based entirely on war interest; delivery to the agencies is by locked and guarded pouch, receivable only by designated officials who have been required repeatedly to give the most positive assurances that the material will be used only for war purposes; and each page of the material itself carries a special warning that no copies are to be made, and that the information is to be communicated only "to those officials whose knowledge of it is necessary to the prosecution of the war."

As a result of experience and consultation, we have been constantly narrowing the scope of this distribution. The responsibility resting with censorship, we have declined numerous applications from other Government agencies for classes of information which cannot be convincingly connected with the war effort.

It has been a cardinal principle also that censorship must not unduly delay the mails and cables. Our stations are required to operate with dispatch. In the case of cables, the delays are a matter of minutes, except for the small percentage of cases where inquiry appears to be necessary. In most instances letters now are cleared and returned to the mails the same day they are received by censorship. Many delays due to shortage of shipping space and other war dislocations have sometimes been attributed without warrant to censorship.

The rank and file of our personnel, recruited through civil service, has been selected with a view to general and specialized ability and has undergone continuing training. Many have come into the service at a personal sacrifice.

Aside from the military, which in the main occupies executive posts, our staff has been recruited under the civil-service regulations. Recruiting continues, since we have not yet been able to assemble qualified personnel to achieve the degree of control contemplated by the original Army-Navy plan and apparently also by Congress. It has been found necessary to do the bulk of our work outside of Washington, and censorship stations have been set up at various points of easiest access to the mail routes, cable heads, and radiotelegraph stations. Altogether, our censors have available to them daily more than 1,000,000 pieces of mail, and some 70,000 messages sent by electrical means of communication.

In section 303 of the First War Powers Act, the Seventy-seventh Congress saw fit to express its intent only in general terms. Both objectives and methods were left to administrative discretion. We have, therefore, laid out policies and formulated procedures based on the lessons of the past and the requirements of common sense.

Our operation is directed toward these two purposes:

To keep information from the enemy.

To gather information which can be used against the enemy.

These objectives closely parallel the recognized purposes of censorship of communications in the First World War. In fact, the same two principles have activated censorship in all free countries in all wars.

The methods which must be followed to carry out the first objective—suppression of information of value to the enemy—are fairly obvious. In practice we have applied the remedy to all persons without discrimination, deleting military information from mails and cables whether it appeared in communications from suspected spies or in innocently intended but indiscreet letters or messages sent by loyal American citizens. The usefulness of such information in the hands of the enemy would be the same in either case.

As to the collection and treatment of information which will aid affirmatively in defeating the enemy, many complications arise. Manifestly, such information often will be of border-line utility. Manifestly, if it is to be of any use at all, it must be communicated to other governmental agencies, and the problem of proper allocation involves important and sometimes difficult decisions.

Schools have been set up for all examiners of correspondence, and special instruction is given those who operate in such specialized fields as trade and finance. Our stations now are able to censor communications in 133 languages and dialects. We have established specialized units to handle such subjects as exported and imported motion-picture films, and philatelic enclosures, which in past wars have been a medium for transmission of code messages as well as a means of effecting transfer of funds. We have established small but competently staffed laboratories to examine letters for secret writing.

Through daily liaison we cooperate closely with a score of agencies concerned with the prosecution of the war. These agencies do not, however, exercise censorship functions, except in a few special instances. The Army and Navy censor the communications of their own personnel, at a great saving of expense and without any overlapping or other complication with the work of the Office of Censorship. The armed services likewise censor press dispatches sent from north Africa and other zones of combat. The Bureau of Customs examines mail and other written material sent by freight or express or carried by travelers, and the Board of Economic Warfare has certain censorship authority, under the statutes, in the field of technical data when transmitted in international communications.

The benefits which have resulted from censorship cannot be calculated. An infinite amount of military information, which otherwise would inevitably have reached the enemy, has been removed from circulation. Intercepted information turned over by censorship to the intelligence agencies, such as Military Intelligence, Naval Intelligence, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, has assisted in the apprehension and conviction of enemy agents and the breaking up of conspiracies of various kinds to actively aid the enemy. The actual monetary saving to the Government, through arresting violations of wartime funds-freezing regulations, etc., has more than paid the expenses of the Office of Censorship for the current fiscal year. Public disclosure of details would be unwise because many cases still are under investigation, but full information will gladly be given in confidence to any committee of Congress which desires to have it.

Section 303 of the First War Powers Act, which deals with censorship refers only to communications between the United States and foreign countries. It does not mention communications between continental United States and the Territories and possessions, or between those Territories and possessions. Such communications have been censored since December 7, 1941, under the general constitutional power of the Commander in Chief, since in every instance they pass to and from, or through, zones of combat. Some criticism of this operation arose during the last session of Congress and a bill relating to the subject, known as H. R. 7151, was considered but failed of passage. The legal aspects of the situation were discussed by the Attorney General at the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing of December 14, 1942, the record of which is available in printed form.

In addition to the responsibilities in the field of communications, placed on the Office of Censorship by Executive Order No. 8985, the President designated this Office as the agency to supervise the voluntary efforts of press and radio in withholding certain information from the enemy. The personnel employed in this branch or our activity is small, but the results are large and significant. One of the most effective factors in preventing the enemy from learning our military secrets is to keep the information from general circulation domestically.

On January 15, 1942, we issued a Code of Wartime Practices for the American press, drawn up after extensive consultation with other Government agencies and with the industry. The code was in the form of a request to newspapers and all other publications to refrain from publishing information on a given list of subjects, such as the movements of troops and ships, exact war production statistics, and the development of new military models, unless such information was given out officially. The code has been revised from time to time in the light of experience, and many border-line questions arising under it are settled daily by a highly experienced staff in our Washington headquarters.

A similar code was issued for domestic broadcasters. In addition to the request that news items be carefully screened for unauthorized military information, radio stations were asked to discontinue certain types of "quiz" and "open microphone" programs to preclude the possibility that enemy agents might gain possession of the microphone on their own motion and send messages over the air in code. The staff of trained radio personnel which administers this code also supervises the censorship of the short-wave stations which are beamed to foreign countries.

In dealing with press and radio, the Office of Censorship has confined its request strictly to the field of information. In no case has it sought to control editorial or other opinion, or criticism. Publishers of all classes—covering the field of newspapers, magazines, books, trade publications, etc.—and the entire group of large and small broadcasters have cooperated magnificently in this voluntary endeavor. As a result, an incalculable amount of dangerous military information is being kept out of general circulation every hour of every day.

Indeed, the cooperation of the country as a whole has been highly gratifying. Censorship in all its forms is so repugnant to a free people, so un-American in its concepts and its operations, that public uneasiness and widespread criticism would normally be expected. Instead, with very few exceptions, the public has been patient and understanding, quick to realize that censorship is a necessary evil and annoyance in wartime, and conscious that the staff is doing the best that human endeavor can do to administer censorship fairly and evenly and with no motive but to serve the national good. Mistakes have been made, and we have sought always to profit by the experience.

The Office of Censorship now has 14,377 employees of whom 968 are in Washington. Of the total 12,726 are civilian, and 1,651 military. Our expectation is that the grand total will be increased by the end of the current fiscal year to 18,180, which was the number contemplated by the House Appropriations Committee in the last Congress. Our current annual appropriation is $26,500,000, and we hope to keep our expenditures within that figure.

I have written similarly to the Speaker of the House.

Respectfully submitted.

BYRON PRICE,
Director of Censorship.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am compelled to leave the Senate for a few minutes for a conference. I move that the Senate now proceed to consider the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky for that purpose?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted.

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor:

John J. Keegan, of Florida, to be a member of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission for the term of 6 years from March 15, 1943 (reappointment).

By Mr. McFARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

J. Frank McLaughlin, of Hawaii, to be United States district judge for the district of Hawaii, vice Ingram M. Stainback.

By Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Charles D. Lawrence, of New York, to be judge of the United States Customs Court, vice Frederick W. Dallinger, resigned.

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Capt. George L. Weyler to be a rear admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from the 19th day of August 1942.

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

WAR MANPOWER COMMISSION

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the War Manpower Commission.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the first name on the Executive Calendar, under the heading of War Manpower Commission is that of Louis Bloch, of California, to be program control technician. I move that that nomination be recommitted to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs for further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to recommit the nomination first appearing on the Executive Calendar to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, this is the first group of new positions created by the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission under his blanket authority. I am wondering whether the Military Affairs Committee has any information regarding the nature and extent of the organization which is thus being created? Can the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] tell me how large this organization in total personnel is to be?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not recall at the moment the exact number of employees who will be under the direction of Mr. McNutt.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator from Michigan will turn to page 53 of the hearings I think the answer to the Senator's inquiry will be found. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] asked this question of Governor McNutt:

Mr. Chairman, I would like to get some clear answers as to the 64,000.

It having been said that including the selective service there would be 64,000 persons over-all under the jurisdiction of the War Manpower Commission.

I started to get it and was interrupted. I think it would definitely clarify my mind on it.

We have a total number of people that you are going to get of 64,000. What part of that 64,000 is selective service?

Mr. BARNETT—

He was with Mr. McNutt—

Twenty-eight thousand.

Senator GURNEY. Twenty-eight thousand?

Mr. BARNETT. That is right.

Senator GURNEY. That leaves 36,000?

Mr. BARNETT. That leaves 36,000.

Mr. MCNUTT. Of which 21,000 are United States Employment Service.

Senator GURNEY. That leaves 15,000 or more.

Mr. BARNETT. Then 12,000 of them are in National Youth Administration.

Senator GURNEY. That leaves 3,000.

Mr. MCNUTT. That leaves 3,000.

Senator GURNEY. What is the 3,000 made up of? Three hundred and fifty men above $4,500?

Mr. BARNETT. You have got the existing training within industry staff, which we now have of 298, I think, and then the apprentice training, which is 333 people. The national roster already established has 350.

Then there is a table which was presented afterward, and which is published in the hearings on page 54, giving the complete break-down departmentally and in the field, as follows:

Number of authorized positions in the War Manpower Commission

| | Departmental |
|---|---|
| Office of the Chairman | 18 |
| President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice | 33 |
| Office of the Executive Director | 491 |
| Bureau of Placement | 878 |
| United States Employment Service | |
| Bureau of Program Planning and Review | 379 |
| Bureau of Training | 44 |
| National Youth Administration | 231 |
| Training Within Industry | 76 |
| Apprentice Training Service | 55 |
| Bureau of Manpower Utilization | 17 |
| Bureau of Selective Service | 1,430 |
| Regional offices | |
| Total | 3,652 |

In the field service, similarly broken down, the total is 60,184—an over-all total of 63,836.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator now tell me what is the relationship between the United States Civil Service Commission and these Manpower Commission appointees?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I pointed out the other day when the Senator first raised this question—and I am speaking now because I looked into the matter personally and asked for the hearings at which Governor McNutt appeared—the law which appropriated $100,000,000 for the President for the purpose of setting up necessary agencies to carry on the war, authorized him to appoint personnel without regard to the Civil Service laws; but in spite of that blanket clearance, the practice has been installed and followed of having each of these positions and appointees cleared through the Civil Service Commission. As a matter of fact a representative of the Civil Service Commission—his name appears in the hearings—sits on the War Manpower Commission, and in response to questions asked by me and others it was brought out that in every instance these places are cleared through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has the floor. Does he yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Last week Mr. Mitchell, the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission, was present before the Committee on the Judiciary and testified in connection with another bill. He said that the Civil Service Commission made examinations of these new set-ups, so far as the personnel here in Washington was concerned; that in the field they did not have the force and they did not have the time to make such examination; but that upon the recommendations of new agencies, they certified the appointees pro forma, without making the examination, as I recall his testimony, and I think I recall it accurately. That testimony has not as yet been printed, but I have seen a copy of it today. The kind of certificate made is purely perfunctory, according to the testimony of Mr. Mitchell, the Chairman of the Commission.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, we are now discussing the specific nominations which are before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, but the question was asked as to whether the Civil Service Commission aided in the selection of these appointees. The Civil Service Commission does aid in the way which I have described, which is substantially no aid.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the afternoon, while we were discussing Executive nominations, I made the statement that Mr. Mitchell had testified that the Civil Service Commission did not have jurisdiction over certain matters in the field. I did not have his testimony available at the time when I discussed the matter, but I have it now, and I desire to cite it.

On page 17 of the record made in the Committee on the Judiciary, the following occurred:

Senator MCFARLAND. Don't you approve the qualifications of these men in the Office of Price Administration?

Mr. MITCHELL. We approve some of the regional directors.

Senator MCKELLAR. Don't you approve all the regional directors?

Mr. MITCHELL. Very recently, since you passed the resolution.

I do not know to what resolution he referred.

I resume the quotation:

When the Office of Price Administration was first set up it operated with funds from the President, but they were left in part outside of the civil-service system. Then, later on, when Congress authorized the establishment of the Office of Price Administration as a statutory agency, these positions were placed under the civil-service system and Mr. Henderson was made head of it. The order at that time was that the work be started and to watch it. We had no eligible register and they nominated these people to us for these different types of jobs. We passed on their qualifications in general.

Again, on page 36, I find the following:

Mr. MITCHELL. No. I don't personally; I don't know who they are, but may I interject here that again the salaries, outside of Washington, are not fixed by the Civil Service Commission, by the Classification Division. The salaries in the field are not fixed.

Senator MCKELLAR. That is very—well, gentlemen, the thought here that Mr. Mitchell has made, is a very enlightening statement. He says the salaries of all these people out in the field are not fixed by the Civil Service Commission. Well, most of these salaries are out in the field. If the Civil Service fixes the salaries in the city of Washington, how is it that the Civil Service Commission does not fix the salaries outside of the city of Washington?

Again, on page 37:

Mr. MITCHELL. The Civil Service Commission had nothing to do with salaries until 1923. At that time Congress enacted a law which provided that the classification system be established giving them jurisdiction over salaries in the departments in Washington. Later a bill was passed, the Ramspeck bill, which provided that the classification system be extended to the field, upon the request of the Civil Service Commission, by the President.

Again, on page 38:

Senator McFARLAND. Mr. Mitchell, wouldn't it be almost impossible for you to extend that service to the field with your present personnel? Aren't you worked to death now with all these new jobs coming in?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; you are absolutely right in that, Senator. Of course, if it is a desirable thing to do, I think in the long run, it would be extended to the field.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the excerpts from Mr. Mitchell's testimony given a day or two ago before the Committee on the Judiciary be printed in the RECORD at the place where the nominations were discussed and where I made a statement concerning Mr. Mitchell's testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask who fixes the salaries?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The salaries are fixed under the Classification Act, and it is because of the apparent desire to comply with the Classification Act that the rather long and involved titles to which the Senator drew attention the other day have been adopted. I asked precisely the same questions of Governor McNutt and his associates.

May I now call attention——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator from Wyoming leaves that point, I notice on page 2 of this list of nominations, for instance, that there is the position known as area director. At one point such a position pays $5,600 a year, at another point $6,500 a year, and at another point it pays $4,600 a year. In each instance an area director is involved. Is that difference in pay the result of discretion in the appointive power?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I cannot lay my finger on the exact testimony, but my understanding of that is that it results from the difference in the sizes of areas, in the amount of work that has to be done in the areas, the geographical extent of the areas, and the population.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not think Chicago would voluntarily confess that it is smaller than Cleveland, although the pay seems to be smaller for the area director in Chicago whose name appears on this list.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The chances are that there is some difference in the responsibility.

I was about to answer the Senator's first question. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] propounded this question, which appears on page 46 of the hearings:

Senator JOHNSON. The point I am trying to get at, suppose the Senate confirms one of these nominations, then does it have to be approved, before or afterward, by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BARNETT. The Civil Service has approved them before their submission.

Senator JOHNSON. That is necessary?

Mr. BARNETT. Not legally required, but we want their approval of the qualifications of every man we appoint.

Then, omitting a few lines, the Senator from Colorado again said:

Senator JOHNSON. What I am trying to find out is to what extent civil-service rules apply in these appointments. I think it is a very important point for this committee to understand.

Mr. MCNUTT. Well, as a matter of policy we clear these nominations with Civil Service before they are sent to the Senate.

Senator JOHNSON. And to what extent does their investigation go?

Mr. BARNETT. I could clear that up.

Mr. MCNUTT. Go ahead.

Mr. BARNETT. The Civil Service, upon request, investigates all these war-service appointments primarily on the question of loyalty and character.

The previous employment record will be checked, if we have any question about it, and ask them to check it. Ordinarily, the previous record of appointment has been checked by our regional director before he recommends the case to us.

We ask Civil Service to make the study of the man's qualifications, to see if it meets the standards that we have agreed upon with them for these jobs, and to check his character and loyalty.

After having spent about 2 hours questioning Governor McNutt and his associates, I was satisfied that they were doing the best they could to comply with the standards of the civil service and the Classification Act, which is being followed by the civil-service agency of the Government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have a great deal of respect for the opinions of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I appreciate the Senator's kind word.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to advise the Senator from Michigan that I have consulted the Civil Service authorities and find that they certify appointees on 24 hours' notice without having an opportunity to consult them or know anything about them. If they do not certify them in 24 hours they are accused of impeding the war effort. So far as these appointees are concerned, from what I have learned, the Civil Service Commission does not count.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. AIKEN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have the same impression as has the Senator from Vermont. I will say to the able Senator from Vermont that if the War Manpower Commission desires to employ someone it sends his name to the Civil Service Commission. If he is approved, his name is submitted, and if he is disapproved another name is submitted.

Mr. AIKEN. And the Civil Service Commission is expected to give its approval within 24 hours.

Mr. WALSH. When approval is not given, it is embarrassing to the Senator whose endorsement accompanies the submission of the name. It is merely a matter of form. No thorough investigation is made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then the practical effect would be that the Manpower Administrator can name whom he pleases to whatever position he wishes to create, at approximately whatever salary he desires the employee to receive, within the rather loose general framework of the civil service law and the Classification Act.

Mr. WALSH. I believe that to be true. However, I also believe that if it were apparent that the applicant had had a criminal record, or was completely lacking in educational qualifications, the Civil Service Commission would not approve his appointment.

I repeat that the embarrassing thing is that instead of a Senator being asked to recommend someone from his locality or State, he is submitted a list of names of those whom the Civil Service Commission will approve. Therefore a Senator is first denied any initiative in the matter, and secondly, he is placed in the position of apparently rejecting a civil-service nomination instead of a nomination which has only the appearance of civil-service approval.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If that is the practice followed in the case of the Senator from Massachusetts, I think he has been given a rather unusual degree of supervisory authority, because no such submission has ever been made to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WALSH. Did the Senator from Wyoming ascertain that the nominees from his State were approved by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Apparently those in authority over the region in which the State of Wyoming is located have been cleared in this manner.

I believe, Mr. President, that there may be some misunderstanding of the situation. In order that my position may be understood, it should probably be called to the attention of the Senate that, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, while sitting as a member of the deficiency subcommittee, of which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is chairman, during the past year I have repeatedly questioned the heads of war agencies about the manner in which selections were made. There can be no doubt that a great deal of authority, power, and discretion has been extended to the agencies in the selection of their personnel, but it was done upon the authority of Congress. When Congress made the appropriations, under which the emergency agencies were created, and waived certain laws, it did so in the belief that speedy action was required, and that in the interest of the successful mobilization of our forces, as well as in carrying on the war, a great deal of discretion should be vested in the President and in the heads of the various agencies whom he selected.

Mr. WALSH. I think we all agree on that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will be through in just a moment. I am trying to lay the ground work——

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator is only laying the ground work now, he has embarked upon quite a long address.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not desire to make a long address, but I do wish to answer the Senator. I wish to satisfy him that the compliment which he paid the Senator from Wyoming a little while ago is perhaps not altogether misplaced. In the Appropriations Committee and in the Military Affairs Committee a sincere effort was made by the members of both committees to make certain that competent employees and officers were selected.

In the instant case I see on the desk of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] a file which was built up as a result of several questions asked by myself, the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and other members of the committee. It contains a dossier on each of these nominations. A great many of the nominees are already in the Government service.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is a dossier so lacking in certain phases of information that the distinguished chairman had to change his mind with respect to one of the nominees when he obtained a little more light on the subject.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That may have been the result of a suggestion from one of the Senators from the State involved.

My feeling is that we should not impede the action of the War Manpower Commission with respect to these nominations unless there is definite evidence that there has been an abuse of discretion. I believe that all the members of the committee sought in good faith to determine whether or not there had been any abuse of the discretion which had been vested in Governor McNutt, and I think there was not.

I do say, however, that in the past the various agencies, as well as the Civil Service Commission, have not given as much attention as they should give to the selection of personnel. Over a long period of years—long before the war began, and, indeed, long before this administration began—it has frequently been the practice of administrative bureaus to arrange for positions and salary groups by creating imposing names of the character mentioned here.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have no desire to interfere in any way with the personnel of the War Manpower Commission. I do not want to have anything to do with the selection of any nominee or employee which the Manpower Commission may have. I agree that, under the circumstances, broad discretionary powers must be allowed. I also agree that in the first instance lump-sum appropriations must be made for personnel.

However, Mr. President, I return finally to the conviction that, since that is the war system under which we must operate, there should be at least one point where these positions, when created, pass in review before the Senate. I know of no possible way in which that may be done except by enactment of the McKellar bill, and that is why I am in favor of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Michigan, as well as other Members of the Senate, to page 53 of the hearings, from which I read as follows:

> Senator HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an observation. If we are organizing an administrative force here of some 64,000 people, and we are going out into civil life to get those people to staff this organization, we are augmenting the very thing that we are expected to cure, are we not?

Then skipping a few lines:

> Senator HOLMAN. I understand that; but by taking out the needed employees from the domestic economy of our country, who should be devoting all their time to the war effort, we are just augmenting a situation which we should be attempting to cure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining nominations in the War Manpower Commission will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ernest James Jaqua, of California, to be head employment specialist in the Bureau of Training, Washington office.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if there is to be no further discussion of these nominations, I ask that they be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations in the War Manpower Commission are confirmed en bloc.

FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Foreign Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations in the Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Foreign Service are confirmed en bloc.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of James O. Blythe, Jr., to be passed assistant dental surgeon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> I hereby withdraw the nomination of the following-named officer to be Brigadier General: Paul Edmund Burrows.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, pursuant to the message from the President, the nomination of Paul Edmund Burrows to be brigadier general should be withdrawn from the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination is withdrawn from the calendar.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I move that the remaining nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations this day confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified of all nominations confirmed during today's session.

LABOR CONDITIONS AND PRACTICES—NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Without objection, the Senate will recur to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I believe most Senators are familiar with my views regarding racketeering in labor by unscrupulous labor leaders during this great war crisis. Such activity has seriously retarded our war effort, and still is retarding our war effort, while millions of our brave sons are fighting on foreign battlefields, and many of them are dying because of insufficient weapons of war with which to protect themselves against the ruthless enemies. The shortage of war equipment is caused by strikes, slow-downs, absenteeism, and other rackets of the big labor barons engaged in such business for their own selfish, personal profit and prestige.

This is a new Congress; and for the benefit of the new members of this body, I want to take a little time today again to explain my views on this important subject. From the first day when I became a United States Senator I have stated my views and have introduced bills and offered amendments intended to stop the racketeering and to speed up war production. The Seventy-seventh Congress failed to act on my bills. I introduced them again early in this session of the Seventy-eighth Congress, and it is my sincere hope that this Seventy-eighth Congress will enact all of them. They include the following: Senate bill 189, introduced on January 7, 1943, to outlaw the use of force and violence in preventing any person from engaging in any lawful vocation; Senate bill 190, introduced on January 7, 1943, abolishing restrictions which encourage the 40-hour week; Senate bill 191, introduced on January 7, 1943, abolishing the closed shop; and Senate Joint Resolution 4, introduced on January 7, 1943, giving to all of our citizens freedom to work.

Because I have so long and so consistently advocated lengthening the workweek beyond the limit of 40 hours, I am glad that our President finally has proved by his actions in issuing an Executive order on the subject that he, too, recognizes the urgent necessity of lengthening the workweek. However, I cannot bring myself to the belief that the matter should have been handled by Executive order instead of by legislative enactment, because I believe in constitutional government, and our Constitution plainly states that "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." The order, as issued, is very confusing and impractical, and has all the earmarks of class legislation by Executive order. It jumps minimum workweek hours the distance of 8 hours in one long jump without providing for sliding it up gradually to best suit the conditions of employers and employees of individual institutions of various character, except insofar as it gives to the Manpower Commission some latitude in its administration. It completely ignores the interests of the overburdened taxpayers of the present generation and of future unborn generations who must pay the enormous additional cost of labor based on time and one-half for so-called overtime. It widens the present disgraceful disparity of income between our farm population and our nonfarm population by, over night, increasing by 30 percent the income of all affected nonfarm labor now working 40 hours per week, and decreasing the income for our farm population by preventing further increases in prices of farm products which are being produced at increased cost. It will tend to increase inflation by increasing buying power and decreasing production of consumer goods. It will further lower the morale of our already grossly mistreated and greatly discouraged dwindling farm population by attempting to force many of our highly qualified farm mechanics who have gone into factories, to return to the farm at almost starvation farm wages or farm income, or have their deferments canceled and be placed in the armed forces at an earlier date.

During the past several months I have stated at various times on the floor of this Chamber that, to my way of thinking, our policies with reference to agriculture were unfair and unjust and, because of that, were sure to bring on a serious food shortage in this country. That very thing has now happened, and at this time the food shortage in this Nation is so acute that strict rationing has been imposed on many articles. Unless we immediately reverse the trend of our unfair treatment of farmers, and give them treatment as fair and just as that which we give to our nonfarm population, I am convinced that the present serious food shortage will fast become more acute, and may reach famine proportions. Such a condition, of course, would seriously affect our war effort unless the war is won very soon. I say that with the full knowledge that our farm population is composed of sturdy, uncomplaining, and patriotic people, and regardless of their personal welfare, they will continue to work and sacrifice and do everything else within their power to produce enough food and fiber to feed and clothe our armed forces, our civilian population, and our allies. But the handicaps and Government restrictions which have been imposed upon the farmers are so great that maximum food and fiber production simply is impossible.

While I deplore the miserable and unjust treatment which has been cooked up and dished out to our farmers and ranchers by our impractical and inexperienced, bungling bureaucrats in Washington, it is not entirely for their personal welfare that I am fighting. It is chiefly for the welfare and safety of our Nation as a whole that I am fighting; because without sufficient food and fiber we cannot win this war, and now is no time to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

The farmers of the Nation have always constituted the backbone of our Nation; and for our Government to freeze the prices of their products to a point where their average per capita income amounts to only approximately 26 percent of the average per capita income of our nonfarm population, and then overnight by Executive order to raise the income of all affected nonfarm 40-hour-week workers 30 percent is, in my opinion, very unfair and unjust, and I believe it is wholly unnecessary. Those and many other features of the Executive order add to its impracticability and the confusion which its operation will create.

Being a sincere advocate of lengthening the workweek as a means of helping us win the war at an earlier date, and now having the definite assurance that our Commander in Chief also favors lengthening the workweek, I hope the Congress will recognize its legislative responsibilities and duties and will do the job the right way, by legislation. I hope the Senate will consider promptly the bills which I have already introduced and those which I shall introduce today which, I believe, if enacted will end much of the confusion, help abolish many injustices, foster some Government economy, and hasten victory for us and our allies.

Mr. President, ever since the United States started on its national defense program it has become increasingly evident day by day that our national defense effort has been seriously retarded because of labor conditions, strikes, and production restrictions throughout the industries of the country; and since we have entered the war period I have been impressed that there has been a continuation of all of those conditions which retard the war effort, except that actual strikes have been reduced in number.

I should like to invite the attention of Senators today to some of the more fundamental aspects of this question. Why was it that when this country first started on its general program of national defense, we had a wave of strikes throughout the entire Nation? We are told about how good the labor unions have been during recent months. I think it is well in this connection to look at the whole picture.

Back in 1940, Congress, at the request of the President, passed the National Guard Act and other laws which authorized the calling of the boys of the Nation to the armed services as a means of training them to defend the Nation against attacks which even then appeared to be imminent. Now let us see what the record shows. The statistics published by the United States Department of Labor show that from September 1940 to the end of 1941, we lost in this Nation, in round figures, 26,000,000 man-days on account of strikes. Did the strikes stop after Pearl Harbor? No.

The figures of the United States Department of Labor show that from the date of Pearl Harbor, through October 1942, strikes in the United States caused a loss of approximately four and one-half million man-days. When the Nation is facing the emergency which it now faces and which it has faced since 1940, why is it that the Nation has been swept by mass strikes?

Why was it that when we started out to build Army camps in which to house our soldier boys, it became the regular, established practice at nearly all of the buildings projects that a representative of the labor unions was present and that no man could work on many of the jobs until he had first paid his part of the tribute to those organizations?

Why is it today that throughout the country working rules which result in the unnecessary use of labor are being enforced in industries, at a time when the Nation faces a great manpower shortage? Why is it that we have maintained in this country the limitations of the 40-hour workweek when the farms of the country have been practically depopulated of labor in order to furnish workmen to carry on our war industries? Why is it that we have to endure the spectacle of seeing the War Labor Board render rulings which require employers to discharge their employees who for any reason decide they do not want to pay the union dues?

There can be no honest, sincere disagreement that all those things are interfering with the war effort. On the floor of the Senate and on the floor of the House, we hear speeches in criticism of organized labor and in criticism of the various boards and bureaus of the Government. I think that the American people are entitled to fix the responsibility for those conditions. So far as I am concerned, I want to state as my very definite opinion that responsibility for the conditions which are slowing down the war effort does not lie entirely at the hands of the labor union racketeers throughout the Nation, but rests upon the Congress of the United States, which has by legislation enthroned in power in the Nation all elements of organized labor, both the good and the bad. Responsibility comes because the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation which has resulted in producing these conditions of which we now complain. But it is not enough for us to say here that the Congress of the United States in earlier sessions was responsible for creating the conditions of which we are now complaining.

The power to make laws is vested in Congress. It is not vested in the executive department of government or in the judicial department of government. If we have in this country today a rule of the bureaucrat, who is not selected by the people, who is not responsible to the people, then we cannot escape the fact that this condition has come about because Congress has become the willing tool of other departments of government to write the laws they were told to write, and these laws have resulted in the conditions which I have already described.

We stand today as representatives of the people of this great Nation and we have the responsibility to correct conditions which threaten not only the present war effort, but which threaten the very fundamental principles of democratic government itself. Shall we content ourselves by simply standing on the floor of the House of Representatives or on the floor of the Senate and complaining about the activities and the abuses of the power of these agencies which the Congress of the United States has created?

I hope not. I hope that there lies in the hearts of the Members of the United States Senate, and of the Members of the House of Representatives, a determination to do something more than merely talk about the evils which exist. I hope that there lies in the minds of my colleagues here in the Senate a determination to do something about them. And with that thought in mind, I want to suggest some very definite and concrete things which I think we can do about it, and which I think it is the responsibility of this Congress to do. The subjects which I shall now discuss are in addition to those I have already suggested.

The first matter I wish to discuss is the National Labor Relations Act. Respect for the time of the Members of the United States Senate precludes the possibility of my reviewing in full the history of the workings of this piece of legislation. It is not necessary for any of us to rely upon outside sources entirely in order that we may appraise fully the extreme abuses of the principles of democratic government inherent in the actions which have been taken by the National Labor Relations Board. For a detailed study of this, I most respectfully invite the attention of the Senate to the report of the House committee headed by the Representative from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

I do not believe any Member of the Senate could read this report without reaching the opinion that the actions of the National Labor Relations Board, under authority of the National Labor Relations Act, when viewed collectively, constitute the blackest chapter in the history of governmental agencies in the United States. Here we find reports which show that the Board deliberately selected as trial examiners men who any reasonable man would have known were very partisan; men who the Board, apparently, knew would give no consideration to the rights of the employer, and but little, if any, even to the rights of organized labor if it did not happen to be the particular branch of organized labor with which these partisans were in sympathy.

We have here the record to show that the power of the Government was used to blackmail and to force employers to take action which they were not required to take under the law. We have in this report facts to prove that representatives of the Board conspired to have charges filed against employers, and then later to sit as judges as to what should be done about them. There are in the record of this investigation facts to show that the administration of the Board was absolutely soaked with communism.

I do not believe any impartial man can read this report without arriving at the conclusion that the action of the Board during the period covered by the report was such as to serve to absolutely intimidate every employer in this country, and to create in the mind of every employer a feeling that he had no option except to go ahead and do whatever the wild-eyed labor racketeers demanded that he do, that his case would be prejudged before it ever reached the National Labor Relations Board, and therefore he would have no chance to secure fair and reasonable consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I gladly yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to ask the Senator whether he thinks the abuses he has enumerated as disclosed in the Smith report were the result primarily of the law, or of the functions of the National Labor Relations Board, or of both.

Mr. O'DANIEL. My answer would be, of both.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, Congress has no power to appoint the members of the National Labor Relations Board, and assuming that the Board violated the spirit and the letter of the act, as the Senator has alleged, then, of course, the Congress has no remedy.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Except insofar as the legislation is concerned.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. So I think that when the Senator fixes the responsibility for the abuses, there should be a distinction between those which may properly be laid at the door of the Congress, and those which may properly be laid at the door of the executive department. Otherwise we will be assuming a larger share of the responsibility than our constitutional functions require.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator from Maryland for his observation, with which I heartily agree.

It was the attitude of the National Labor Relations Board disclosed in the report which was used so effectively as the club by organized labor to destroy or dominate American industry, and it was this situation which laid the foundation for the power of the various phases of organized labor to reach such a point that they believe they can stand today, if necessary, and defy Government itself.

What I should like to impress upon Members of the Senate is the fact that responsibility for all this does not rest on the National Labor Relations Board; it does not rest on the executive department of Government, which recommended this legislation; the responsibility rests upon the Congress of the United States, which alone, in our form of government, had the power either to pass or decline to pass the National Labor Relations Act. I say, furthermore, that so long as we sit in the United States Senate as representatives of the people, and so long as we are content to allow this National Labor Relations Act to remain on the statute books of this Nation, just that long the responsibility for the things which happen in its administration becomes our own responsibility, and we cannot shove it aside and say that somebody else is responsible.

We in the Seventy-eighth Congress have the power to repeal the National Labor Relations Act if we so desire; we in the Seventy-eighth Congress have the authority to modify and amend the National Labor Relations Act if we wish to do so; and I say that we have more responsibility than the Congress which enacted the law because it may be said that those in the Congress who enacted the law did not realize at the time the dangers which this type of legislation carried with it. But we today can act in the light of experience; we do realize the danger; we have seen the law in operation; we have seen the National Labor Relations Board use the power of this act to blackmail American employers; we have seen the law used as a means of advancing the interests of the C. I. O. over the interests of the A. F. of L.; we have seen the law used at other times to advance the interests of the A. F. of L. over the interests of the C. I. O. We have seen its partisan use against both the employer and against particular labor unions which did not suit the representatives of the Government who at that time might be dealing with a particular situation under the law.

Therefore, we are charged not only with the same responsibility that faced the Congress of the United States which passed the law, but we are also charged with the additional responsibility of permitting the law to remain on the statute books even when we know of its abuses, even when we know of its dangers.

I realize the argument will be presented that all the facts to which I have referred, which were brought out in the report of the Smith committee, represented conditions that existed during the administration of persons who are no longer members of the National Labor Relations Board, and that we now have on this Board men who have adopted a more reasonable attitude in the administration of the law. I am willing to admit that the present members of the National Labor Relations Board are a great improvement over those who preceded them, but I am not willing to admit that the present administration of the National Labor Relations Board is such as to demonstrate that it is possible to so administer this law that it will be fair among all those whom it affects, nor am I willing to admit that we now have an unbiased and unprejudiced administration of the act.

In this connection, I wish to call the attention of Senators to the decision rendered by the United States Supreme Court a few days ago—January 18—in the case of the National Labor Relations Board against the Indiana & Michigan Electric Co. This is a most interesting case and, I think, reveals very clearly the workings of the minds of those who compose the National Labor Relations Board. I shall not take time to quote all this decision, but I do want to refer to some items in it.

In this case Local No. B–9, of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, had gone to the company and claimed they represented a majority of the employees of the company. There was a controversy about this; the company questioned the fact that this local did represent a majority of its employees. The case went to the National Labor Relations Board. The Board rendered a decision against the company, but after the opinion of the Board was delivered, the company appealed to the Board to permit it to submit additional evidence, as it claimed it would be able to show to the Board a course of depredations, including dynamiting of property for which the company alleged this union was responsible. The Board declined to reopen and review the case. The case was taken to the court of appeals, and the court of appeals ordered the Board to reopen this case and hear the evidence which the company proposed to submit.

Right here, in order to get the facts of this case before Senators and correct in the RECORD, I want to quote from the decision of the United States Supreme Court; the opinion of the Court having been delivered by Mr. Justice Jackson. Here are the apparent facts in this case as summarized by the Supreme Court:

For present purposes we take to be true the facts stated in the petition or offer of proof on the basis of which the court below directed a remand. These facts were stated on oath, and have not been denied. Petitioner says that we must hold that even if true they are immaterial. On this assumption of truth the case is as follows:

On November 12, 1938, Samuel Guy, the business manager of Local B–9 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, filed in amended form with the Board charges that the company had been guilty of several unfair labor practices. On the same day the Board through its regional director issued a complaint against the company, setting November 28, 1938, as a hearing date, and events of violence ensued in the following sequence as related to the company's steps in defense of the case:

The company filed its answer on November 23, 1938. On the following day, 4 days before the hearing, cables at one of the company's South Bend substations were dynamited. The hearings proceeded, and the trial examiner's intermediate report recommended generally against the company.

On September 1, 1939, the company filed its exceptions to the intermediate report. On September 5, three of its transmission line poles were sawed off, and on September 8, a transmission line tower was dynamited. On October 17, 1939, the oral hearing on the exceptions was set before the Board at Washington for November 9, 1939. Two days later another transmission line tower was dynamited. On October 28, two transmission poles at different locations were dynamited. Another transmission tower was so destroyed on October 30, 10 days before the oral hearing, and two more at different parts of the system on November 23, 1939. All carried high-voltage lines, and some were located along public highways or railroad tracks.

On February 19, 1940, the company filed with the Board a petition to reopen the case and receive further evidence. This petition alleged the commission of the depredations upon its property as set forth above and further that: John R. Marks, assistant business manager of Local B–9, and Earl Freeman, one of its members, both of whom had been witnesses against the company and three others, were arrested after February 1, 1940, and charged with the commission of some or all of the depredations, and with having conspired to commit them all. Except Marks, each had made confessions stating that Marks paid them sums of money aggregating $2,325 for committing such acts.

One of them states that Marks had caused the first dynamiting to intimidate the company in connection with the hearing, and three stated that he had caused later ones to intimidate it in connection with the oral argument. The company proposed by the evidence of dynamiting to discredit Marks and Freeman, on whose testimony the trial examiner appeared to rely. It also sought to discredit Guy, who also had been a witness, on the claim that he knew, or must have known, of the use of the $2,325 of the union's money for the purpose of destroying respondent's property. But it claimed more. It asserted evidence of a conspiracy to destroy property to influence the pending case, which it contended was not a good faith labor controversy, but an unlawful effort of Local B–9 to coerce respondent to require its employees to join the union.

On February 28, 1940, the Board denied the company's petition. It held that "the matters recited therein have no relation to the issues in this proceeding." The Board went on to make findings on the issues, expressly reciting that it did so "upon the entire record in the case." While the Board did not designate all of the testimony for printing, it has certified it all to us, it has stricken no testimony of any witness in question from the record, and has made no finding that any specific parts of it were not relied upon.

Now, Mr. President, let me impress here the statement made by the Board as quoted in the opinion of the Supreme Court. I want to call the Senate's attention to the fact that it was the expressed opinion of the Board that even if all the charges which the company alleged to be true, were true, that the matters recited therein have no relation to the issues in the case. I say that that is a remarkable statement. Here we have a case where the company alleged its property was dynamited, that transmission poles were destroyed, that the lives of its employees and the lives of citizens generally were jeopardized, and the company alleged further that this was accomplished by the same agents of this labor union whom the Board was ordering the company to bargain with, but still the Board says that even if all this were true, the Board's original opinion directing the company to bargain with this union still stands.

I appeal to my fellow Senators as fair-minded men, charged with the responsibility of protecting the rights of the American workmen and the rights of the citizens of this Nation, to answer in their own minds, what labor conditions may we expect to develop in this country in the future if we permit a law to remain on our statute books under which an agency of this Government may say deliberately and officially to an employer that, "All you say about these people, with whom we have ordered you to engage in collective bargaining, being dynamiters, may be true," under which the Board says to the employer, "It may be that this labor union dynamited your transmission lines in order to force you to bargain with them; it may be that they are criminals; but, nevertheless, they represent the union and you must bargain with them."

Mr. President, I say that if this is what the law means, if the National Labor Relations Board is right when it says that under the law a thug or a dynamiter may serve as the representative of employees in collective bargaining, and that the employer must, irrespective of this fact, meet with such thugs and dynamiters around the conference table to negotiate a contract to cover his employees, then it is high time that such a law be taken off the statute books of this Nation.

Later the National Labor Relations Board ordered the reinstatement of some of the employees, and payment of back wages, and the Board petitioned the circuit court to enforce this order. Later the company answered this petition and at the same time petitioned the circuit court to remand this case to the Board for further hearing. In this petition the company referred to its earlier petition in which it stated under oath that the employee, Freeman, whom the Board had ordered the company to reinstate along with two other members of the brotherhood, had been convicted in the courts of the dynamiting described in the first petition which had been filed, and had been sentenced to a term of from 2 to 14 years in the State penitentiary, and that two others had pleaded guilty to similar acts. One of those sentenced said he had obtained the money to purchase the dynamite and to pay the dynamiters from the treasury of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local No. B–9.

The company pointed out in its petition that during the hearings the trial examiner had urged the company's attorney to settle the case, and that the attorney for the company had brought to the attention of the trial examiner the dynamitings which had occurred, and had also referred the Board representative to practices and methods of the officers of this union and to the record in the case of Michael J. Boyd, the international vice president of the union, who had previously been convicted in a similar case. The company stated in its petition that the examiner of the Board replied:

Well, your company will be required sometime to recognize Local B–9 and you might as well do it now.

Mr. President, I most respectfully invite all Senators to read this entire opinion of the Supreme Court, because even thus far I have not brought out all the facts in this case: I think it is to the credit of the Supreme Court of the United States that by a majority opinion the National Labor Relations Board was ordered to review this case and to consider all the evidence. But it is significant to consider in this connection the fact that the National Labor Relations Board, in its construction and interpretation of the law, felt that it had a right to contend that a dynamiter already convicted in the courts and already sentenced to the penitentiary, as well as others guilty of destroying company property, still had a right to claim to be the legal representatives of the employees of this company.

I introduced at the last session of Congress a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, designed to protect the right of every man in this country to join a labor union or to stay out of a labor union as he might see fit. I have reintroduced this joint resolution at this session of the Congress, and I shall aggressively urge its adoption.

I am not unmindful, however, of the fact that the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a slow process, and, therefore, I feel that it probably would not be wise at this time absolutely to repeal the National Labor Relations Act, because it does have some sections which, if properly administered, would serve the interests of the great rank and file of the working people. I say frankly that if the constitutional amendment which I have proposed were adopted, there would be no need for the National Labor Relations Act, because the Constitution itself would be the guaranty to employees throughout this Nation that their rights to act individually or collectively to improve their labor situation would be protected in that Constitution.

But until this is done, it might be better to amend the National Labor Relations Act and take out of the act some of the most glaring objections and some of the things which have been the basis for much of the undemocratic action taken by the National Labor Relations Board. I have, therefore, prepared and will introduce today bills to amend the National Labor Relations Act. In the proposals which I am offering to amend this law, I have not sought to remove all the objectionable features of this law, but rather to deal only with those cases in which the abuse of power has been most glaring.

At this time I invite the attention of the Senators to three bills which I am proposing to amend the National Labor Relations Act. I am not trying to rewrite the act. Certainly I am not trying in any way to take away from labor any of the protection which it is guaranteed by the act. The three bills which I am proposing will, I believe, meet with the approval of this body. I believe they will be approved by those who believe the general purpose of the National Labor Relations Act to be good; and I believe they will be approved by those who doubt the value of this law.

The first bill which I offer to amend the law is the following:

Amend subsection (3) of section 2, by adding at the end of this subsection the following:

"Provided, however, That the Board shall have no power to order the reinstatement of an employee or order payment of back wages to an employee where the employee has willfully engaged in violence or unlawful destruction or seizure of property in connection with any labor dispute or in connection with any effort to organize the employees of said employer; nor shall any employer be required to accept as a collective-bargaining agency to represent his employees any person or organization that has willfully engaged in violence or unlawful destruction or seizure of property in connection with any labor dispute or in connection with any effort to organize the employees of said employer."

It is obvious that this bill is designed to accomplish two purposes, and two purposes only: First, it is designed to guarantee that employees who become thugs and who dynamite and unlawfully seek to destroy the property of their employer will thereby sacrifice any protection which, as employees, they would be entitled to under this act. In other words, it says to the employer that the National Labor Relations Board shall not have authority to order him to reinstate and pay back wages to employees who have unlawfully engaged in violence and the destruction of his property.

The bill has another purpose, and that is to say to the employer:

You will not be required under this law to accept as collective-bargaining agents to represent your employees persons or organizations who have willfully engaged in violence or the unlawful destruction or seizure of your property.

We know that under the present law employers are being ordered to reinstate and pay back wages to employees who have engaged in these practices, and we know that under the present law employers are being ordered to accept as collective-bargaining agents individuals and organizations who have been guilty of violence and the unlawful destruction of property. I believe that it is the responsibility of the United States Senate to see that these practices are stopped, and that is all that the bill would do.

The second bill which I am proposing is to amend section 8. This bill would amend that section by adding at the end of the first line of the section, following the word "employer", the words:

A labor organization, or an officer, member, or employee of a labor organization, or any other person or persons.

In other words, if this bill amending the act should be passed the law would then provide that it would be an unfair labor practice for any employer or labor organization or anyone else to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed to them under the law. As the law now stands, it is a violation of the law for the employer to coerce and intimidate his employees, but a labor organization can use all the coercion and intimidation it may desire to use without in any sense violating the law.

It is my conception that this law was designed in the beginning to protect the rights of employees, and that it was never the intention of the law that powerful labor organizations should be allowed to use all the power and coercion they desired to use, but that the employer, and the employer alone, should be restrained from such action. If this bill should be enacted, every restraint which the law now carries against the employer attempting to coerce his employees would still remain in the law; the only thing this bill would do would be to put labor organizations under the same restraint which the employer is now under. They, too, would be prevented from using coercion and intimidation.

The third bill which I propose to amend the law would read as follows:

Amend section 8 by adding a new subsection to be numbered subsection (4) to read as follows:

"(4) Nothing in this act shall be construed as preventing the employer from expressing his opinion concerning any matter affecting the relationship between employer and employee. The employer shall be free to state to his employees his opinion and preferences concerning any labor organization, or organizations, seeking to secure the right to represent his employees and such right shall include the right of the employer to free, open discussion of all the issues involved: Provided, That the employer in such discussion shall not threaten to deprive his employees of any rights which they have under the law."

This bill is submitted on the theory that employers throughout this country are not all crooks. It is submitted on the theory that the employer should have the right, so long as he does not attempt to coerce his employees, to express to them his opinion concerning any proposed effort to unionize his plant. It may be said, and I think it can truly be said, that the Supreme Court of the United States has already upheld this right under the present law; but the fact is that the National Labor Relations Board still seeks to use the law as a means of intimidating employers, and it will continue so to use it unless the law is amended. I believe that we, as representatives of the American people, should realize that there are thousands upon thousands of small employers throughout the Nation who are not able financially to spend the amount of money which they must spend to take a case to the Supreme Court of the United States. Therefore, these small employers are intimidated by the rulings of the National Labor Relations Board, and they are deprived of the right to discuss these matters with their employees.

I therefore believe that the law should be so amended as to take out of the present act the power which the National Labor Relations Board has so successfully used to intimidate and coerce the small employers throughout the Nation and to deprive them of the right of free speech and the right to discuss these matters frankly with their employees.

Let me summarize the results which would be achieved if the three bills which I am offering to amend the National Labor Relations Act should be enacted. First, we would serve notice on the people throughout the Nation that the Senate of the United States is opposed to the use of force and violence and the destruction of property by employees of a company, and that employees who engage in such action and the labor organizations which willfully aid them in such action will not be allowed in the future to operate under the cover of the law.

Second, we would extend the protection which the law now gives to employees against the coercion of their employers, and we would provide that in the future all employees of every company in the United States shall be free to exercise their rights under the law and that they shall be protected not only from the coercion of employers, but also from coercion of labor organizations and all other persons.

Third, we would announce to the world the policy that the Senate of the United States believes in protecting the right of free speech and believes in allowing such vital matters as the relationship between employer and employee to be the subject of free and open discussion based on the merits of the controversy.

I believe that the adoption of three bills to amend the law in those ways would tremendously improve its operation. Therefore, I introduce three bills having those purposes, and ask that they be referred to the proper committee for prompt consideration.

The bills (S. 726) to amend the National Labor Relations Act, (S. 727) to amend the National Labor Relations Act, and (S. 728) to amend the National Labor Relations Act were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, February 18, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate Monday, February 15, 1943:

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following-named passed assistant dental surgeons to be dental surgeons in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from the date set opposite their names:

James S. Miller, February 1, 1943.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the eternal source of life and light, in all our ways we would acknowledge Thee, praying that our lives may be kept clean, upright, and secure. When all time and creation were in the cradle of immensity, Thou wert and art and evermore shalt be. Wilt Thou bless abundantly the United Nations with directive wisdom that all groanings and travail in pain and all requiems which have filled the years may be no more and a stricken humanity shall emerge and look up at the open sky and fear no cloud.

Dear Lord, we given tribute today to Christian womanhood, strong and courageous; we rejoice that it is the heart of the Church and the conscience of the State. With consuming zeal and sacrifice it is toiling in distant lands, teaching, healing—the publisher of peace and the bearer of glad tidings in a world of flame and dread. We are grateful that it blesses our homes with ideals and standards which bulwark the children of tomorrow. With heart and soul it is fighting the most valiant battles ever fought, smiting ancient forms of wrong and rebuking each wrathful alien land. In Thee, enable us all to be nobler and more unselfish and find more incentive in our blessed Redeemer and Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, February 11, 1943, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address by Croil Hunter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a short article by William Philip Simms.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PROSECUTION OF TRUSTS

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, many of us regret the removal of Mr. Thurman Arnold as head of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. Thurman Arnold was a diligent, courageous, aggressive, nonpartisan prosecutor of all kinds of illegal trust combinations. It is hoped that other men of his stature and caliber will carry on the good work that he has begun. It is hoped that his promotion to the bench is not simply the removal of an effective trust buster, and is not the abandonment of antitrust prosecution by the Department of Justice, and is not evidence of a change in the Arnold policies on the part of the Government.

The grim business of war has, of course, suspended much domestic activity. Although some may be dormant, gigantic and illegal combinations in restraint of trade and competition still exist in this country. If we are not careful, these big trusts will completely dominate and control the post-war markets in their respective fields. Thurman Arnolds in the Department of Justice will then be greatly needed.

Many examples of needed trust busting could be enumerated. The Farm Machinery Trust is one such combination that certainly ought to be destroyed. The American Federation of Musicians, headed by Racketeer Petrillo, is another example. Other trusts threaten in the petroleum industry, the transportation industry, and the automobile industry. It is certainly hoped that Mr. Arnold's successor in the Department of Justice will be, as was he, aggressive and courageous in this business of antitrust prosecutions.

Mr. Arnold, we hate to see you go.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. And I say to the gentleman that I do not believe Congress had any right to create a telegraphic monopoly a few days ago.

Mr. GOSSETT. I voted against that merger.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a radio address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SMALL VEGETABLE CANNING FACTORIES

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HARNESS of Indiana addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

PRODUCTION OF FOOD

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SPRINGER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

INCENTIVE PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GILLIE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include certain correspondence I have had with a publisher on the west coast. Also, Mr. Speaker, to include excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of more than 20 years ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JOHN J. WILLIAMS AND FAMILY

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the House will be glad to hear the story of the family of John J. Williams and the late Mrs. Carrie Williams, of Marianna, in Jackson County, Fla., for in this family there are six sons; six fine, stalwart boys of which any American family could well be proud. Each of those six sons is now serving in some branch of the Nation's armed forces.

I am sure that the Congress, appreciative as it always is of efforts toward winning the war, will join me in sincere praise and cordial congratulations for Mr. Williams and his six fine sons. This American family deserves the recognition of the entire Nation.

The boys are Warrant Officer John J. Williams, United States Army Air Forces (overseas); Corp. Max E. Williams, Camp McCoy, Wis.; Edward A. Williams, Fort Benning, Ga.; Frank I. Williams, United States Marines, Parris Island, S. C.; Willard D. Williams, United States Marines, Pearl Harbor, T. H.; Sgt. Tommy Williams, Camp Polk, La.

The youngest member of the family, Miss Betty Jean Williams, is not yet old enough to be a WAAC or a WAVE.

All together they are doing a great job for the cause of freedom.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include therein a statement with reference to King College, one of the reservoirs of Americanism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SILVER PURCHASE ACT

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SULLIVAN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a copy of H. R. 1728, which has for its purpose the relief of the shortage of farm labor, and a copy of a letter addressed to the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. LEA asked and was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix.)

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEETINGS OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House Committee on Military Affairs may sit during the sessions of the House for the remainder of this week.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a suggestion to make, if nobody else does it. The Chair thinks it is very bad procedure for committees to sit during the sessions of the House when bills of large proportions are being read under the 5-minute rule, but the Chair will put the gentleman's request.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would hope very much that the Military Affairs Committee would not be in session when the independent offices appropriation bill is being read for amendment, which I think will be on Wednesday. I have no objection to that committee sitting today and tomorrow, but on Wednesday I think the membership should be present when the bill is considered under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, let me make an explanation as to why the request was made. There are all kinds of legislation pending before the House Military Affairs Committee, not only in the form of amendments to the Selective Training and Service Act, but relating to the question of farm labor and deferments for industrial workers in this country. They are all vital to the welfare of the country. The only reason I wanted to sit during the sessions of the House was that we might discuss these matters and arrange some way to bring in legislation on some of the subjects. I do not want your committee placed in the attitude of being derelict in the performance of any duty, especially when it is one of such importance as these questions involve.

I will modify my request for the time being and ask unanimous consent that the House Military Affairs Committee may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include a speech by Maury Maverick delivered to the Holland Society of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include A Tribute to the Flag.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. J. PARNELL THOMAS, may be excused for 1 week due to the death of his beloved mother on Friday last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

BY-PASSING LOCAL BANKING INSTITUTIONS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a resolution and two letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HILL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include an editorial from one of the papers in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PLIGHT OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks and include therein a letter addressed to Mr. Brown, Price Administrator.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. GROSS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by my colleague the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein a resolution passed by the House of Representatives of Georgia referring to H. R. 1408.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call to the attention of Members of the House what appears to me to be an interesting statement, which will be found in full in the Appendix of the RECORD. This statement was taken from page 6 of the supplement to Fortune, December 1942, and is attributed to the editors of Fortune.

The editors of Fortune boldly assert, in substance, that there is no need to worry or be concerned about the size of the Federal debt because holders of Government securities are prevented by law from collecting, and that the Government does not have to pay. It should be noted the editors of Fortune seem to approve this arrangement.

It is clear from a reading of the views of the editors of Fortune, as expressed in the above-mentioned supplement, that they are in full agreement with the National Resources Planning Board's program to do away with the Constitution and free enterprise and set up in its place a totalitarian regime.

The views of the editors of Fortune are substantially the same as those of the National Resources Planning Board as expressed in their annual reports to the President and Congress and their other printed matter. In fact, they appear to be mere repetition of the stated schemes of that agency.

Coming as it has, in December 1942, this supplement of Fortune has the earmarks of being propaganda to influence Congress to appropriate funds for continuing the National Resources Planning Board.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein my testimony before the Ways and Means Committee on Saturday last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WENDELL WILLKIE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

IS WILLKIE DEAD POLITICALLY?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to extend my sympathy to the Republican Party.

While a majority of them contend that Wendell Willkie is dead—some of them that he is now merely the osculating "somnambulist of a vanishing dream," others that he is the galloping ghost of a Republican nightmare—yet this morning news comes out of Indiana to the effect that the same group that forced his nomination before is going to attempt to nominate him for them again. I believe it was Dryden who said:

Oh, 'tis a fearful thing to be no more,
Or if to be, to wander after death
And when the darkness comes
To glide in paths that lead to graves;
And in the silent vault where lies your own pale shroud
To hover o'er it, striving to enter your forbidden corpse.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TRANSMITTING ANNUAL REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (H. DOC. NO. 111)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 7 (4) of the act of Congress approved March 24, 1934, entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the sixth annual report of the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands covering the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1941, and ending June 30, 1942.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The WHITE HOUSE, February 15, 1943.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now going to recognize Members to make short memorial addresses.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, we celebrate today the birthday of a great pioneer, Susan B. Anthony. Being from Kansas I speak with direct knowledge of her and her distinguished family. All the Anthonys were pioneers, and her two brothers, George T. Anthony and Col. Daniel R. Anthony took part in the struggle that made Kansas a free State. George T. Anthony became Governor and Col. D. R. Anthony made and unmade governors by reason of the influence of his powerful newspaper, the Leavenworth Times, which still carries on under the editorship of his grandson, Daniel R. Anthony 3d. Probably no single family in Kansas has more strongly influenced the life of Kansas. Miss Anthony, in her frequent visits to Kansas and her powerful appeals on the rostrum made Kansas one of the leading States in the cause of equal suffrage.

Today I only briefly express my appreciation of this truly heroic woman and the gratitude of Kansas to this great benefactress, not only to the members of her sex, but to the whole Nation. The mighty revolution which she above all others led can be visualized when I tell you that in my brief lifetime Susan B. Anthony was arrested, tried, and convicted of conspiring against the peace and dignity of the United States for merely attempting to vote under the authority of the fourteenth amendment. History has made a huge joke of that trial and its verdict. Nowadays we do not even arrest women for running for Congress, however much some of their rivals might wish to.

The influence of Susan B. Anthony still lives in Kansas though her life work culminated when on August 26, 1920, the nineteenth amendment to the United States Constitution was proclaimed in effect which granted the right of suffrage without regard to sex.

Susan B. Anthony was one of the great dynamic leaders of America. She possessed all the great attributes of a crusader. In her character was woven those traits that triumph over all difficulties and discouragements. A powerful will that was stubborn as twisted steel. A determination that scorned denial. A soul sensitive to every injustice and tyranny over the mind or soul. A self-confidence that acknowledged no defeat. A courage that counted no cost, no odds. A creed that acknowledged responsibility only to her conscience and her God. In all American history she has few equals as a moral leader, and no superior.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the keynotes to the character of Susan B. Anthony were courage and a desire for justice. What is often lost sight of is the fact that she wanted justice for men as well as for women.

Born on a farm near Adams, Mass., Miss Anthony later moved to Battenville, N. Y., where her father ran a mill. It was his ambition to build up an industrial community which should be a model. He paid good wages and had good working conditions for those days. He established schools for both his men and women employees, thus founding a feeling of comradeship between employer and employees. Miss Anthony early resolved to work against injustice toward both men and women in labor, and it is due to her pioneer work and those who helped and followed her that working conditions for both men and women have been steadily improved.

Miss Anthony was preceded in my own district of Lowell, Mass., when the women in the textile mills in the early part of the nineteenth century were the first to organize to improve their working conditions, just as she is still followed by women working for equal rights for all.

She was a pioneer in more than the suffrage movement. She was for justice alike for both sexes and all colors and races. It is the courage of women following in the footsteps of Susan B. Anthony that has brought about the conditions in the United States today where women may do anything they are physically able to do.

This is in direct contrast with the countries under Hitler's domination, where the status of women has been set back generations. If Susan B. Anthony were alive today she would be leading the fight to release the women of Europe from this decadence. With women in every phase of war work from the WAAC's and WAVES to welders it is only justice that they should have equal rights with men.

Courage and determination are New England traits, and it took tremendous courage for Miss Anthony to persist when even the women for whom she was fighting drew their skirts aside and turned their backs on her. Miss Anthony died in 1906. A month before, in her last speech, she said:

When will men see that what we ask is not praise but justice?

Ending with the dauntless words:

Failure is impossible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BYRNE].

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, Susan Brownell Anthony was born in South Adams, Mass., on the 15th of February 1820, and died at Rochester, N. Y., March 13, 1906. She taught school in New York during the years 1835 to 1850. In 1852 she assisted in organizing the Women's New York State Temperance Society, and in 1854 and 1855 she conducted conventions in many counties in New York State in behalf of female suffrage. In 1858 she advocated the coeducation of the sexes. In 1860, through her influence, she secured the passage by the New York Legislature of the act giving married women the guardianship of their children and the possession of their earnings. In the year 1868, with Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Parker Pillsbury, she started the publication of The Revolutionist, a paper devoted to the emancipation of women.

It was in 1872 that she cast her ballots at the State and congressional elections in Rochester, N. Y., to test the application of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States. For this she was indicted for illegal voting and was fined but the fine was never exacted.

Her last notable appearance was as a delegate to the International Council of Women in London, England, in the year 1899. In 1900 there was a great popular demonstration in our National Capital in celebration of her birthday, and in that year she retired from the presidency of the National American Women's Suffrage Association, which office she had held for a great number of years.

The day is past when Susan B. Anthony can be classed with propagandists and special pleaders—she belongs with the history makers of the Republic.

It is interesting to note that February is the birth month of the three great emancipators of American history—George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and Susan B. Anthony, whose natal day, February 15, we are today commemorating.

Susan B. Anthony changed the mind of our Nation. More than anyone of her time she changed the fabric of our civilization by improving the status of women—politically, socially, economically. While she neither began nor ended woman's struggle for equality, she has left upon the movement the stamp of an imperishable personality. She is the spiritual mother of all enfranchised women in the world today, and of all future generations.

An obscure school teacher, at the age of 33 she swore to change the mind of the ruling class of men as to the degraded position of women. Until the day of her death, at the age of 86, she never faltered in her determination to win equality for women.

My own State of New York has a prominent place in the history of the struggle of women to secure their emancipation. The first woman's rights convention in the world was called at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848. New York was also pioneer in a reforming of the English common law, so barbarous in its treatment of women.

The State of New York was the home of Susan B. Anthony during most of her life. Largely through her leadership it came to be known as the battleground for the rights of women. I want at this time to salute and pay tribute to Miss Anthony and to all of those splendid New York women who stood shoulder to shoulder with her in the fight for the ballot until it was attained.

Women who took up the struggle where Susan B. Anthony left off are now asking Congress to enact the equal rights amendment. America has always led in the emancipation of women. Surely we do not wish to lose this leadership. It is my considered opinion that no time should be lost in passing the equal rights amendment. This is the most fitting tribute that we, Members of Congress, can pay to Miss Anthony.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my word of appreciation of that great Christian character, Susan B. Anthony, and especially to her ideals. I am glad that at least a part of her ideals have been realized, and I would to God that her moral ideals could be further realized at this time.

If the moral security espoused by Susan B. Anthony could be realized at this time, it would certainly give relief to the millions of mothers of America whose sons are fighting the battles for decency, security, and democracy.

All honor to the memory of this great woman, and may America yet fully realize the fullness of her moral ideals.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, every session of Congress from 1869 to the year of her death in 1906 found Susan B. Anthony in Washington pleading the cause of suffrage and full equality for women before the Congress of the United States. Fourteen years after her death the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution became part of the law of the land. Women are still laboring for complete equality.

To that end they have drafted and had introduced in Congress a measure to give equal rights before the law, regardless of sex. When this amendment is passed and ratified, the work begun by Miss Anthony in 1850 will be completed, so far as this can be done by law.

California is one of the early suffrage States in the country, and women of California have taken a particularly big part in the move for the emancipation of women. Among the outstanding women in California who have given their utmost to this great cause was my friend Mrs. Amy Ransome and her coworker, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst.

I am one of those who are working for this amendment, and am proud and happy to carry on the work begun by Miss Anthony so many years ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ELLISON].

Mr. ELLISON of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, it is eminently fitting that Maryland pay tribute to Susan B. Anthony, leader in the extension of the rights of women, on this one hundred and twenty-third anniversary of her birth.

If but one State in the Union allowed woman to speak for herself it should be Maryland, which was named for a woman, whose capital was named for a woman, and whose Mistress Margaret Brent was one of the earliest crusaders for equality.

It was in Maryland in 1648 that Mistress Brent demanded place and voice in the assembly as the executrix and representative of her kinsman, Lord Baltimore. Her petition was denied but she must have had some gallant supporters, as the archives record that the question of her admission was hotly debated.

It was not until some 200 years later that the demand for full equality for women was made again in Maryland—this time by that peerless leader, Miss Anthony herself, who lectured in Baltimore in the early 1870's. Immediately, associations were set up throughout the State to carry on the fight and these groups proved strong factors in the final ratification of the Nineteenth Amendment.

Time will not permit me to name the complete roster of those citizens of my State who have been prominent in this fight, from Mistress Margaret Brent to Edith Houghton Hooker today, for many years president of the Maryland branch of the National Woman's Party.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be associated with these honored citizens of my State. In fitting tradition, Maryland takes her rightful place in urging the adoption of the equal rights amendment so that henceforth women shall have at last a place and voice as Mistress Brent demanded back in the seventeenth century; so that henceforth the law of this land shall be in the immortal words of Susan B. Anthony, "man's rights and nothing more, woman's rights and nothing less."

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, the history of every great nation is marked into epochs by the work of its pioneers, those extremists and cranks—for so they were regarded in their day—who have cleared a space for others to come after them.

The discovery of this great continent was such an epoch—from the first known voyages of the Norsemen to the discoveries of Columbus to the arrival of the covered wagon on our Pacific coast.

In the history of humanity Mary Wollstonecraft, who in 1792 in London published a fiery appeal entitled "The Rights of Women," was the Leif Ericson who sighted a new world for women. Susan B. Anthony, before whom we pay homage today, was the indomitable Columbus who, in spite of opposition and ridicule, sailed on and on till the eyes of faint-hearted friends were gladdened by the sight of the good green isles adjacent to a grand continent which surpassed all their expectations.

Florida is proud of our pioneers who, in writing pages in its own history, have thereby added pages to our Nation's history.

Miss Anthony lived through a long period of ridicule. She gained the respect of the whole country. Let us, in this Seventy-eighth Congress, write that respect into the Constitution so that American women can stand as equal citizens before the bar of justice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, we Americans are noted for our respect and deference for our women folk. We have uniformly conceded to women an individuality, an independence, and a freedom of conduct that are recognized as characteristic of the social, economic, and political life of our Nation.

The American home is the unit of that solid foundation on which has been built that structure of loyalty to the elemental virtues, the reverential religious conceptions of life, pride in character, sympathy for the unfortunate, self-sacrifice for the good of others, integrity, loyalty to duty, and that quality which finds happiness in doing good. Presiding over that home as the living embodiment of those qualities has been the wife and mother. The influence of that home on our early years has been such that it has been commonly true that erring youth, though he may temporarily depart from its precepts, in later years finds it drawing him away from his mistakes and back to the homely virtues of his boyhood home.

Out of these homes have come the stabilized and sturdy character of the people of our country, which today is manifested by the youth of our land on the battlefields and the seven seas of the world.

I have had the happiness of going through life with the thought that for me there was no better woman in the world than my mother. Countless thousands have that same inspiring memory.

Notwithstanding the superior place we have given to women in our civilization, it is true there have been relatively few women who, through a long course of years, have had a Nation-wide fame. One of these has been Susan B. Anthony. She had a great conception of a new and enlarged sphere for women in the social, economic, and political life of our country. To that cause she unselfishly, effectively, and with rare persistence and ability devoted her life. In her case it was the dedication of a life to the service of others. The years rewarded her efforts. Her memory and fame have remained through the decades as an inspiration to millions who revere her as a symbol of those high qualities great souls give and which become the common assets of a nation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HARLESS].

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, in paying tribute to Susan B. Anthony I also pay tribute to the pioneer women of Arizona, my State, who likewise possessed courage, foresight, and understanding and the desire to promote those principles of womankind which have given them equality with men. The women have earned the right to be free. Through their courage and foresight the women of Arizona now have the right to hold property and to enjoy an equal share in the community with their men. They are no longer chattels. They have equal rights in the political institutions and exercise the privilege of expressing their views and exerting their influence in governmental affairs, in religion, and all matters pertaining to our economic life.

I therefore pay tribute to this great woman today because her anniversary commemorates the beginning of the freedom for women and their right to be on an equal footing with men.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, the first expression of the woman's rights movement in Maine was in 1868. It turned on the question of women being eligible for service on school committees. Here, as in Vermont, the men inaugurated the movement. The editor of the Portland Press endorsed the movement saying:

> There is nothing in the way of the general adoption of such ideas but a lot of antiquated and obsolete notions, sustained by the laughter of fools.

The same year we have the report of the first suffrage society in Maine, which seems to place Maine in the van of her New England sisters. This report read:

> A society has just been organized here called the Equal Rights Association of Rockland. It bids fair to live, although it requires all the courage of heroic souls to contend against the darkness that envelops the people. But the foundation is laid, and many noble women are catching the inspiration of the hour.

The Honorable John Neal, foremost in all good work in Maine, in a letter to the newspaper The Revolution, describes the first meeting called in Portland, in May 1870, to consider the subject of suffrage for women. He says:

> The weather was unfavorable; nevertheless the small room, holding from 60 to 75, was crowded * * * with educated and intelligent women, and brave, thoughtful men, so far as one might judge by appearances, and about in equal proportion.

On August 12, 1871, the announcement that Colby University would be open for girls gave general satisfaction to the women of Maine. A press comment of the day says:

> Four New England colleges are now open to women: Bates, at Lewiston; Colby, at Waterville; Vermont University, at Burlington, Vt.; and Wesleyan, at Middletown, Conn. Let's have no more women's colleges established, for the next decade will make them unnecessary, as by that time, all the colleges of the country will be opened to them.

October 26, 1872, another advance step was heralded abroad—Mrs. Clara Hapgood Nash, of Columbia Falls, was formally admitted to the bar as an attorney-at-law, having passed a more than creditable examination.

In a summary of progress in Maine for 1873, the Portland Press said:

> Mrs. Mary D. Roberts has been licensed to preach by the Methodists; Mrs. Fannie U. Roberts, of Kittery, has been commissioned by the Governor to solemnize marriages; Clara H. Nash has argued a case before a jury in the Supreme Court; Miss Mary C. Lowe, of Colby University, has taken a college prize for declamation. They are the first Maine women who have ever enjoyed honors of the kind.

The right of women to hold office was asserted in the message of Governor Dingley, in January 1875, and the legislature passed the bill for this purpose recommended by the Governor.

Maine ratified the Nineteenth Amendment as the nineteenth State on November 5, 1919.

It is fitting to mention some of the faithful friends in Maine of the equal-rights movement.

First, Mary and Lavinia Snow, of Rockland, were active in the organization of the first society in 1868.

Second, Gail Laughlin, lawyer, member of the State legislature and leader of the Woman's Party in Maine and in the Nation.

Third. Mrs. Robert Treat Whitehouse, leader of the National Woman's Party in Maine at the time of the suffrage victory.

Fourth. John Neal, who sent out notice of the first suffrage meeting in Portland; Neal Dow, that untiring reformer; and Hannibal Hamlin, Lincoln's first Vice President, who presided at the first hearing of the National Woman's Suffrage Association before the Committee on the District of Columbia in 1870.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL.]

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I deem it a pleasure and a privilege to join my colleagues in paying tribute to the memory of this truly great American. The gaining of the ballot by women unquestionably constitutes one of the most significant reforms of history. To this cause Susan B. Anthony devoted her life, giving unreservedly of time and energy. Miss Anthony forged this great reform movement for the rights of women out of the steel of her times. She was skillful and courageous. No mob crying "shame on the women" intimidated her in her heroic stand for the rights of women. She was the most persecuted woman of her day, but she was one of the most honored in the closing years of her life.

In honoring Miss Anthony I wish also to honor those women who pioneered for suffrage in my own State of Oregon. Oregon was one of the first States in the Union to grant suffrage to its women. Especially do I want to honor the memory of the late Abigail Scott Duniway, of Oregon. Mrs. Duniway, an outstanding leader in this movement, attended the Equal Rights Convention in Albany, N. Y., in 1884. She returned fired with enthusiasm and determined to win the vote for women. To the day of her death she never ceased to champion women and their rights. Her memory is honored in my State as a great leader in this worthy cause.

The visit of Susan B. Anthony to Oregon in 1896 was a red-letter day for the State. She came to address a Congress of Women held in Portland, in my district. She exerted a tremendous influence in the crusade for the ballot for women in our State.

The achievement of woman suffrage was, however, only a part of the program for women envisioned by Susan B. Anthony. She foresaw complete equal rights for women. The crusade in which she took such an important part still goes on. The passage of the equal-rights amendment, which has already been introduced in this session of Congress, would not only insure to the women of this and future generations equal rights with men, but would constitute the greatest possible tribute to the woman we honor today, Susan B. Anthony.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Wyoming, whom I have the high honor to represent, I wish to pay tribute to those sturdy pioneers who by their indomitable courage builded an empire on the prairies of Wyoming. There in old Cheyenne, in the Territory of Wyoming, nearly three-quarters of a century ago, women were first granted the right of suffrage.

It is significant also, Mr. Speaker, that Wyoming was the first State in the Union to install a woman Governor. Many women in the history of the world have presided over states, but never before did the free people of any state choose a woman to rule over them. Queens have ruled by the laws of inheritance, but in Wyoming the free people conferred upon Nellie Tayloe Ross a high distinction that will always remain in recorded history.

Wyoming is justly proud of that distinguished lady who served her State so well as its chief executive, and who now serves the Nation as Director of the Mint. By her outstanding service she ably promoted the cause of women in their battle for equal rights.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, during the appropriate expressions in memory of Susan B. Anthony I take occasion to pay tribute to the splendid services being performed by American women on the home front during the prosecution of this war.

A year and a half ago in a conversation with an aircraft manufacturer I queried him about the problem of manpower and he expressed the fear that the men taken into the armed services would leave the production of that great plant in a bad condition. I asked him, "What about women?" He said, "I do not believe they can do the job." It so happens that approximately 3 weeks ago I talked with him again on the same subject and he told me that 13,000 women had taken the places of the men, and were doing an excellent job in his aircraft factory.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, of the approximately 630,000 workers in this industry today, it is noteworthy to record the fact that of this number 175,000 are women. Of the new employees in 1943 we find more than 35 percent are women.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in paying tribute to this great American woman, I also pay tribute to the entire womanhood of America.

It has been said that if it had not been for the women of the South the Confederacy would have collapsed before it did; if it had not been for the women of the North the Confederacy would have won in the early stages of the war.

If it were not for the influences of women of the world today our civilization would collapse, Christianity would become a thing of the past, government would lose its power, society would lose its charm, and man would sink to the level of beasts.

Giving the women the right to vote has at least placed in their hands the use of a weapon by which they can manifest their consciousness of their responsibility. This woman, Susan B. Anthony, stands at the head of the list of those American women who brought that condition about. I would say of her, in the words of Shakespeare:

> Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
> Her infinite variety.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to pay my tribute to one of the foremost pioneers of woman's suffrage, Susan B. Anthony. In connection with this great lady's work, it is interesting to note that the battle for equal rights for women still goes on. This battle is now being waged by the National Woman's Party, among whose leaders are numbered several distinguished women in my congressional district.

I was interested in the remarks of one of the other speakers about women's contribution to defense and war industry. I had the privilege of talking not long ago with an entrepreneur who told me that women are capable of doing better work in war production than men, because they are more conscientious; they are more careful, and they are more interested in their work. Therefore, they are making a vital contribution and can take the place of the men in defense plants who are called to war.

Fortunate it is for the Allied side that our women are assuming a more and more prominent part in the war effort. They are taking over men's responsibilities on the home front, thus assuring America of adequate fighting forces.

On this day of commemoration of the life of Susan B. Anthony, I salute the women of our country and pledge to them my unqualified support of their cause in attaining equal rights in a society in which they have always shouldered an equal share of burden and hardship.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. WILLEY].

Mr. WILLEY. Mr. Speaker, they who blaze the way for the races of mankind are not always among the throng when the end of the trail is reached.

Fourteen years after the death of Susan B. Anthony, the suffrage amendment which she wrote was ratified by the States. For more than 50 years she had labored for that triumph. Through all that time, with pen and by means of logical and eloquent speech, she pleaded for justice for women.

In addition, Miss Anthony's ideas, freighted with hope and carried afar by the power of sincere conviction, helped to form the purposes of many others who, in widely scattered communities, have carried on her tradition.

Outstanding among Delaware women who have pioneered in the cause of political equality is Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles, twice chairman of the National Woman's Party. A White House picket, facing and serving a sentence of 60 days in the workhouse, within a short distance from the Capitol, working in France with Anne Morgan and with the American committee to reconstruct that devastated country, she has demonstrated an unflinching purpose and courage. She has led the equal-rights campaigns in the Delaware Legislature during a number of sessions.

The background of Mrs. Hilles explains in part her aptitude for leadership. Her father was United States Senator, Secretary of State under President Cleveland, and our first Minister to the Court of St. James's to have the title of Ambassador. She descends from other Senators of the United States, and her brother, the late Honorable Thomas F. Bayard, also served in our highest legislative body. Within recent months she participated in exercises held in Wilmington, Del., commemorating the adoption of the Federal Constitution, upon invitation of our Governor, the Honorable Walter W. Bacon. In this capacity she acted as a direct descendant of one of Delaware's signers of that immortal document.

Truly, it can be said that the Susan B. Anthony tradition is ably carried on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in these very difficult and disturbing days it is refreshing and inspiring to turn our attention to a woman who did so much to give us the right to call ourselves a democracy. I refer to the great Susan B. Anthony, whose name and memory we venerate today.

The Quaker inheritance of this great leader of the suffrage cause and her early training aroused in her a realization of the injustices to her sex. From out of the past we hear again the words of this great American woman, who has long since taken her place among the women of history:

Principle, not policy; justice, not favor. Men, their rights and nothing more. Women, their rights and nothing less.

Now, with consecration to the great cause to which Susan B. Anthony and her noble band of supporters gave their lives, women of today go forward. The National Woman's Party has taken up the torch lighted by these intrepid pioneers, and is waging a battle for the passage of the equal rights amendment which would outlaw all injustices and discriminations. This amendment provides that:

Men and women shall have equal rights throughout the United States and every place subject to its jurisdiction.

Today in the offices, in the factories, in the fields of our all-out war effort—even in the armed forces themselves—do we find that the women are assuming their full part of the responsibility. Surely it would seem that they are now entitled to have those equal rights for which we are fighting all over the world. Many National and State organizations of women, notable among which is the Michigan Federation of Women's Clubs, have endorsed this amendment. This Congress should give it every consideration.

Liberty, justice, equality are fine words. Let us make them come true for the women of this country by giving careful consideration to this amendment at this session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in the month of February we commemorate the birthdays of three of the greatest emancipators of the race. George Washington, Abraham Lincoln, and a most distinguished woman, Susan B. Anthony.

In each generation there are men and women who stand out among the mass of our people—men and women who not only have more than ordinary talents, but who are eager and willing to sacrifice their lives, if necessary, in order to extend certain outstanding contributions for the good of the generations who live after them.

We honor, today, the memory of a great woman. She was an illustrious character. She had unusual talents. Most of all, because of the basic concepts and beliefs to which she adhered and ever remained steadfast.

Susan B. Anthony was born of Quaker parentage February 15, 1820. She was nurtured and reared in the atmosphere of those surroundings and was impressed with those homilies of right thinking, right living, fair play, thrift, and industry.

During the adult years of her life she worked unceasingly for the cause of woman's suffrage. It was appropriate that Miss Anthony should come into her sphere of leadership after the foundation had been laid for the building of a greater humanitarian structure.

It is well that we pause to pay homage to the memory of a woman whose life work has become so important a part in the history of our country. It was for Susan B. Anthony to kindle the spark of public opinion in the great cause of the right of women to cast their vote.

We are honored today in paying tribute to a truly great woman, one of the great history makers of this republic.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, a great many testimonials have been paid to Susan B. Anthony. Among others was a beautiful testimonial from Theodore Tilton, who had been for many years a resident of Paris, in which he said:

At the present day, every woman who seeks the legal custody of her children, or the legal control of her property; every woman who finds the doors of a college or a university opening to her; every woman who administers a post office or a public library; every woman who enters upon a career of medicine, law, or theology; every woman who teaches a school, or tills a farm, or keeps a shop; every woman who comes to Congress, every one who drives a horse, rides a bicycle, skates at a rink, swims at a summer resort, plays golf or tennis in a public park, or even snaps a kodak; every such woman, I say, owes her liberty largely to Susan B. Anthony and to her earliest and bravest co-workers in the cause of woman's emancipation.

So I pay my tribute not to Susan B. Anthony alone but to the bevy of noble women who assisted her.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, on a bright Sunday morning, shortly after the first gun was fired at Lexington, the old minister at Cheshire, Mass., closed his sermon; then, his voice trembling with patriotic fervor, he asked every man who was ready to enlist in the Continental Army to stand forth. Young Daniel Read, with a bride of 2 months, was the first to step out into the aisle of the little meeting house.

Daniel Read was the maternal grandfather of Susan B. Anthony, whose memory we honor today. She, too, was chosen and commissioned to do high service for her country.

Miss Anthony's convictions as to equality stemmed from her deeply religious heritage. Her maternal grandparents were Baptists and the Anthonys were Quakers as far back as the sect was in existence. She herself attended the Unitarian Church but retained her membership in the Society of Quakers.

In spite of the fact that many churchmen saw that the principle of equality was founded in Christian doctrine, certain clergy of Miss Anthony's day had to have the scales removed from their eyes, some by devious devices. Miss Anthony told of one Baptist minister who refused the loan of his church for a meeting and yielded only after several of the richest pew holders declared they never would pay another dollar toward his salary if he did not. He then made his appearance at the meeting, opened it with his blessing and closed it with his benediction.

Once when Miss Anthony was asked if she had not grown discouraged in those olden times, she replied, "Never—I knew my cause was just, and I was always in good company." Tennessee, I am proud to say, has had a share in that "good company." In January 1895 Miss Anthony was welcomed in Memphis. During the next month after her visit over some 500 women in Tennessee signed a petition urging political equality for women. And in our day, Mrs. Crozier French, Miss Sue White, and others have carried on the work begun by Miss Anthony.

In harmony with the deeply spiritual nature of the State of Tennessee, which does not wander far from "the ancient landmarks which the forefathers have set," Miss Anthony has said of her work:

I go in the strength of right, to make the right triumphant on the earth; I go in the name of the undone right to make it real; I go in the name of the forgotten justice to make it remembered in high places and in low; I go in the name of the silent and the silenced ones to give them voices.

Let us take her bequest to us to do this unfinished work, that her dreams may be realized—to establish the new justice and equality of right.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

[Mr. CHURCH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two letters, one from a judge in my district and another from the State board of agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Mr. W. Arthur Simpson, of Vermont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein concurrent resolutions of the General Assembly of Iowa, memorializing Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the other day I called attention to a magazine called Victory issued by the Office of War Information. This is absolutely useless—just propaganda. It is being sent across the waters.

I hold in my hands, and I shall call attention to it at greater length later, a letter from the State War Ballot Commission of New York indicating that shipping space was so scarce that they could not send any ballots to the boys overseas so they could vote. That is about the way they are running this thing. They do not want the boys to vote but they want to send out a lot of cheap propaganda. I think it is about time that these fellows were hauled up short.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in three instances, in one to include a letter from Judge R. V. Fletcher, vice president of the Association of American Railroads; in another to include a letter from Mr. Joseph B. Eastman in regard to transportation, and in the third to include an article from the National Grange upon the subject of transportation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE] at Winston-Salem, N. C., a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar (H. R. 702) to permit the prepayment of the purchase price of certain housing sold to individuals by the Farm Security Administration, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the purpose of the bill it is to permit a debtor of the Farm Security Administration to pay his debt in advance of its maturity. This is certainly a worthwhile measure. The surprising part of it is that legislation is necessary to permit it to be done. I realize that a similar bill passed the House late in the session last year, and, of course, this measure should be passed. My purpose in reserving the right to object at this time is to inquire if any other farm-credit agencies prohibit a debtor from paying his debt before it is due. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN], the author of the bill, is in possession of that information, I would appreciate learning it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In answer to the gentleman I may say that in all sales made under the Farm Security Administration for the past 10 years it has been sought to tie the purchaser up for a period of from 20 to 30 years before final payment could be made and title delivered to the purchaser.

Mr. COLE of New York. Does the gentleman mean by that that by passing this act and permitting a farmer to pay his debts, the personnel of the Farm Security Administration will be drastically curtailed?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Their authority will be curtailed in that this compels them to give a warranty deed to the property when payment is tendered of principal and interest.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not know what change has been made by the Farm Security Administration, but I see on the front page of the paper this morning, I think in an Associated Press dispatch, that a Negro farmer in my State has paid his loan entirely off, getting a clear deed to his farm. The contract was supposed to run for 40 years. Can the gentleman give us any information as to whether or not a change has been made so as to permit these farmers to do that.

Mr. COLE of New York. Of course, I cannot give the gentleman the information, because I have not got it, but I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, it is optional and discretionary with the officials in the Farm Security Administration as to who is to be permitted to pay and who is to get a warranty deed to the land?

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman's bill propose to amend that so as to give every man that right?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Every man who wants to pay up the purchase price, plus the interest, is entitled to get a deed under my bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Does that also apply to the Housing Administration, these houses that are being purchased from the Housing Administration?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That applies to every agency or corporation in the Department of Agriculture only, where long-term contracts have been made by purchasers.

Mr. RANKIN. How about the rural houses? I am interested in them because a large number of my farmers have purchased those houses, and many of them would like to pay for them and get a deed and be through with it. Would the gentleman's bill reach them?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If they come under the Farm Security Administration or any other agency in the Department of Agriculture. Let me give the gentleman an illustration. Out in my district we have a place called Austin Acres. Approximately 50 families bought a home, each home having 1 or 2 acres in connection with it.

Mr. RANKIN. Farm homes?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; they were started under Mr. Tugwell. The gentleman will remember the rehabilitation program that went on for some time. Most of these people work in Austin, Minn., in the factories and business institutions of that place. They were tied up under long contracts, for a period of from 20 to 30 years. Most of them are making pretty good money at the present time, and many of them have reached the age of 50-odd years, and they feel that they would like to pay up their indebtedness and get title to their property. But the Farm Security Administration, which agency has jurisdiction over these homes, has refused to take payment, and give the deed to the property.

Mr. RANKIN. I can express my philosophy in respect to this matter in a few words. I am in favor of permitting every man to pay his home out and take title to it "from the center of the earth to the dome of the sky," if he can get the money. I am opposed to tying them up with these governmental agencies, to be supervised by some person in some bureau who does not know anything about farming, and who has no particular interest in these matters.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. This bill will accomplish the result the gentleman mentions.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. In reference to the practice in the Farm Security Administration, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that last year in the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, our attention was called to charges of this character as having been made against the Farm Security Administration. Those charges were vigorously denied by officials of that Administration, who contended they had never in any instance refused to allow a borrower to make payments when he desired to do so except as to a reasonable period after purchase by borrowers in the farm-tenant land-purchase program. I am wondering from what source the gentleman obtained information upon which he bases the statements that he has made to the House.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. There is one of the officials down there named Baldwin.

Mr. TARVER. He is the Administrator.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes; I talked with him and I have talked with various subordinate officials on particular cases, where people have wanted to pay out, and they have refused to accept the payment in full and give a deed.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Baldwin is the gentleman who gave the subcommittee the testimony to which I referred a moment ago. In view of the evident confusion with regard to what the facts are in the case of the Farm Security Administration, I shall be compelled to object to the present consideration of this bill, because I want to make some further investigation before we proceed further.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. Yes.

Mr. BARDEN. I think a part of this confusion comes from the fact that there is written into the contract usually secured from the farm tenant or those purchasing the land a provision that they cannot pay out under 5 years. I think there is a 5-year provision in the contract, but, as I understand it, this would enable a man to pay off his land when he became able to pay for it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is right. You will find the provisions of the contracts written for 20 years, and they will tell you that a man cannot pay up his last payment until the end of the 20 years, because they want to keep control over his conduct in the handling of that property.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman may have in mind cases which were called to our attention, where a farmer has a farm which is desired by somebody else, perhaps a farm-tenant borrower who has paid nothing on his farm, and where a third person comes in and offers him a profit and seeks to pay up his debt for him, for the purpose of taking over his farm. That, of course, is a different matter from the case in which the farmer himself has the means and desires to finish paying for his farm and discharge his debt to the Farm Security Administration acting in his own behalf. When some real estate speculator wants to pay it for him for the purpose of taking over the farm himself, I think the gentleman will agree with me that that is a different matter.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is a different matter and is not involved here.

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. FULMER rose.

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina, chairman of the committee.

Mr. FULMER. I hope the gentleman will not object to the passage of the bill. If the gentleman wants to go into this matter fully, there will be plenty of time between now and the time when the bill is considered in the Senate. You have read about certain tenants having paid up for the land and having obtained title to the fee, but I believe they are simply for publicity purposes. The tendency on the part of the Farm Security Administration is to do everything possible to continue with employees spending money, regardless of what the Congress intended them to do. It is the purpose of my committee sooner or later to go into a thorough investigation of this matter and to weed out some of the things they are doing and have them do the things that Congress intended them to do. Now, certainly, if they can do it now, this bill would not do any harm, but they want to continue that fellow, making additional loans and sometimes grants on his farm, to have people on the farm to tell him when he shall get up and when he shall go to bed and what to do on the farm. Certainly this bill will not hurt anything.

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman will yield, may I say to the gentleman that the investigation which he proposes is something that is very desirable, but action should be deferred until after the investigation and not taken before.

Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will call the next bill.

TRAINING OF NONFARM YOUTH FOR FARM LABOR

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 75, to provide for the training of nonfarm youth for farm labor, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in order to reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], who spoke with reference to the other bill. This joint resolution seems to be somewhat on "all fours" with the previous bill.

The gentleman from Georgia said that they can stop these men from selling their farms to people who want to speculate. Whenever you say to a man, "You cannot sell your farm to anybody," if that is not personal government gone to seed I do not know what it is. As a matter of fact, there are not many speculators who want these small farms. But if a man is in debt or if he has a son who has gone to the Army and he has nobody to work the farm for him and he wants to sell it, by the eternal gods, under the Constitution of the United States he ought to be permitted to sell it. I am not willing to give some agent down here in the Bureau the right to say when a man shall sell his farm or to brand some other man as a culprit because he wants to buy it.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TARVER. Has the gentleman any information, aside from something he may have read in the newspaper, that in cases such as he has referred to the Farm Security Administration has refused the borrower the privilege of paying his debt?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not as much disturbed over the attitude of the Bureau as I am the attitude of the gentleman from Georgia. If his philosophy is written into the law of the land, it will mean personal supervision over every farm and every farmer by some agent down here who wants to say that this man, although he claims to be a farmer, although he has calluses on his hands, although he owns some mules and has a little money in the bank, he is a speculator and they do not propose to have this man sell his farm to him. I say that we do not want personal government in this country. We want constitutional government, and constitutional government would provide that a man may sell his land to anybody who wants to buy it if he has the money and is willing to buy it, provided the owner is willing to sell it.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. May I point out that I announced no philosophy? I simply made inquiry in order to determine the facts upon which gentlemen were making speeches, and I find, regretfully, that they know nothing about the facts except what they may have read in the press.

Mr. RANKIN. I am not talking about that. I am talking about the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I would like to state that this is bringing to the attention of Congress one of the dangers I have foreseen in this method of getting our farmers back on the farm. If you will read these contracts you will see that they carry in them a provision that the farmer must follow every direction from the Department of Agriculture in the operation of his farm or else he can be moved off of that farm by the Department of Agriculture. I have been contending all along that we should have legislation whereby the propositions of the operation of a farm and the ownership of a farm were separate and distinct. As long as we keep this under the Department of Agriculture and under an agency that is primarily dealing with the operation of farms, we are going to run into this problem.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] that in my opinion this is the most dangerous tendency toward the regimentation of the farmers of this country that I have ever known.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that a bill was brought in here at a previous session of Congress which dealt with the question of farm ownership entirely separate from that of farm operation. I regret that the House did not give that bill consideration, and I hope we can get a similar measure up for action by this Congress.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me call attention now to another very dangerous tendency; it is this: For the Housing Administration to go out and buy an acre or two of land, build a house on it for a farm tenant and sell it to him but holding a string on him that he cannot pay for it for perhaps 40 years. If he can pay for his home he ought to be permitted to pay for it. I am not for the taking of all the land by the Government and turning it over to a lot of bureaucrats. I may say to the gentleman that I feel he is striking at one of the most dangerous invasions of the fundamental rights of the American people that I have witnessed in all the years of my experience.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I have information from a source I consider unimpeachable, namely, the members of the War bond selling committees in my district, that some of the Federal security organizations are going to the people who have F. S. A. loans and telling them not to pay the principal on their debts, but to buy bonds instead.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I am not going to object, but will let them proceed with this bill, but I do most vigorously protest against any further steps toward the regimentation of the farmers, the putting of farmers in strait jackets. The way to gain more production is to take the ceiling off farm prices, let farm prices rise to their normal levels, and then you will not need even the Manpower Commission to regiment men for the farms. The people will respond themselves, and on top of that we shall not depart from real Americanism.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the regular order is demanded then I must object.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. Speaker, my reason for objecting to House Joint Resolution 75, the Fulmer bill, is because it provides for a host of Federal agencies to take a hand in the educational program to train youth for farm labor. I want to keep the youth of our country out of the hands of the Federal bureaucrats. Their interest is primarily the promotion of their own interest, and if they were given the authority this bill would confer they would use it to train the youth in the virtues of a politically planned economy and how not to farm.

Let the farmer receive adequate prices for his produce and leave it to him to train any help he may need for he knows how to do it.

God spare our youth from the baneful influences of the Federal bureaucracy.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1294, to authorize the sale or transfer of property belonging to the Government for other purposes.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the purpose of this bill is to approve the transfer or sale of any equipment owned by the Government. It is not to be used in military establishments.

I call attention to the final sentence of the bill which directs that the funds derived from the sale of this property shall be placed in a special fund in the Treasury. Is it intended that after this property has been sold and the funds placed in this special account that Congress will appropriate out of that account for replacement, or is it automatic?

Mr. LANHAM. I think it would be automatic with reference to the replacement of the mechanical equipment that is taken out.

May I say to the gentleman that the bill as amended by the committee is exactly the same as the bill that passed the House last December. It was so late when that bill passed that the Senate did not have a chance to consider it.

Mr. COLE of New York. The funds are to be placed in a special account, yet is to be subject to appropriation by Congress, why would it not be simpler to cover this money into the general funds of the Treasury and thus save the employment of more accountants and bookkeepers?

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, it was testified before our committee that no additional personnel would be required.

It is the intention, under this bill, that this machinery, which is needed not for the comfort of someone in these various plants but for the actual production of war necessities, shall be sold, with the head of the department concerned agreeing, at whatever the replacement value may be of the mechanical equipment that is taken out. It was suggested to the committee that quite possibly after the war it might not be necessary to replace some of this equipment because it might not be needed where it was used before. Under such circumstances there would likely be additional legislation needed to free such funds; but there was an apprehension upon the part of the committee that, if these funds were not kept in a special fund to replace this equipment, it might be difficult when the war is over to get an appropriation for its replacement.

Mr. COLE of New York. Is it not the intention of the provision of the bill to which I called attention to require additional appropriations to be added to the special fund in order to replace any machinery that is taken under this bill?

Mr. LANHAM. In my judgment it would not require additional appropriations because the bill contemplates sales for cash at replacement figures.

Mr. COLE of New York. What agency then has authority to determine whether a replacement shall be made or not?

Mr. LANHAM. Well, it would come largely under the Public Buildings Administration. For instance, this is the situation in which replacements may not be necessary: There are many Government buildings around the United States in which are boilers that have never been used and which are very much needed now in the war effort. The reason they have not been used is that they were put in, not for immediate use but as an assurance that commercial concerns would not charge too great a rate for the services which those boilers could perform. If those rates did get to be exorbitant, then the boilers could be put into use. There are a great many of them that are idle around the country that may be devoted to the war effort. It may not be necessary after the war to replace some of those. The only necessity I should think for additional legislation, in view of the fact that this mechanical equipment is to be sold at full replacement for cash and the funds to be used for the replacement of this mechanical equipment, would be with reference to those cases where there was no necessity after the war to replace the equipment.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas, it seems to me that a point of order should be made against the sentence providing for the setting up of a special fund to receive the proceeds of these sales. The usual rule is that incidental funds received from the sale of Government property shall go into the Treasury, and, of course, it would require an appropriation to take it therefrom. Apparently it is attempted here to set up a special fund which could be expended without action by Congress, and there would be in that fund money from the sale of pieces of equipment not necessary to replace. Under the explanation given by the gentleman from Texas it would require special legislation to get the money from that fund into the general funds of the Treasury; consequently I shall be constrained to offer a point of order against that particular provision.

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, the committee was very much of the impression that we should have a definite special fund to replace this mechanical equipment where it is needed after the war, otherwise the money might be used for some other purpose, then they would come back to the Congress for appropriations to replace this equipment.

Mr. CASE. That is what they should do. The money could not be taken from the general funds of the Treasury and used for any other purpose except by direct appropriation by the Congress. Under the gentleman's statement there would be received a fund from the sale of unnecessary property that need not be replaced. It should not be in a special fund, because then it could be used by the agency without an act of Congress whether it was needed or not, as the gentleman from New York has shown.

Mr. LANHAM. In that instance I do not think it could be used where it was not going to be used for replacement, and, as I stated, I think legislation would be necessary. I do not know that it will be necessary to replace all of this equipment. But let me make this statement, Mr. Speaker: Some of this equipment is very urgently needed today in the production of our war materials. Private industries all over the United States, department stores and institutions of that kind have voluntarily been permitting the Government to use such mechanical equipment, and they have suffered the sacrifices incident to giving up that equipment. This is nothing on earth but an effort for the Government to follow in the course of the practice now being engaged in by private capital to promote the war effort. We have had it impressed upon us by the War Production Board that this is urgently necessary in order that this equipment for plants that are now begging for it may be had for the production of synthetic rubber and a few other things that are vital to the war effort. I may say that with that explanation, together with the committee amendment, this bill is in exactly the same terms as the one which passed the House in December.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is my opinion there should be a provision for restoration of this property, of course, but that the funds should go into the general Treasury. Therefore I object.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, the point of order I expect to make will be made only against the sentence which provides that the money shall go into a separate fund to be expendable without appropriation. I do not desire to delay the basic purpose of the bill and will not do so. The good purpose that the gentleman from Ohio desires to accomplish would be accomplished by the making of a point of order against the one sentence, and that will not interfere with the acquisition of the equipment for the prosecution of the war. It is important that the bill be passed. I understand that some of the equipment that will be released is wanted for some of the synthetic rubber plants.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Could not the same thing be done more properly with an amendment?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a point of order against a sentence in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not up for consideration as yet. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REHABILITATION OF VETERANS DISABLED IN THE PRESENT WAR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 801, to amend title I of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933, and the Veterans Regulations to provide for rehabilitation of disabled veterans, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point and to insert the bill and the report thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1, title I, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, approved March 20, 1933, be amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection known as subsection (f) and to read as follows:

"(f) Any person who served in the active military or naval forces on or after December 7, 1941, and prior to the termination of hostilities in the present war shall be entitled to vocational rehabilitation, subject to the provisions and limitations of Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended, part VII."

SEC. 2. Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new part to be known as part VII and to provide as follows:

"PART VII

"1. Any person who served in the active military or naval service at any time after December 6, 1941, and prior to the termination of the present war, who is honorably discharged therefrom, and who has a disability incurred in or aggravated by such service for which pension is payable under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, or would be but for receipt of retirement pay, and is in need of vocational rehabilitation to overcome the handicap of such disability, shall be entitled to such vocational rehabilitation as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to fit him for employment consistent with the degree of disablement: Provided, That no course of training in excess of a period of 4 years shall be approved nor shall any training under this part be afforded beyond 6 years after the termination of the present war.

"2. The Administrator shall have the power and duty to prescribe and provide suitable training to persons included in paragraph I, and for such purposes may employ such additional personnel and experts as are deemed necessary, and may utilize and extend existing Veterans' Administration facilities and utilize those of any other governmental agency as well as those maintained by joint Federal and State contribution; and, in addition, he may, by agreement or contract with public or private institutions or establishments, provide for such additional training facilities as may be suitable and necessary to accomplish the purposes of this part.

"3. While pursuing training prescribed herein, and for 2 months after his employability is determined, each veteran, if entitled to pension in an amount less than the amount payable in accordance with the compensation rates for total and temporary disability, including additional amounts for wife, child, or children and dependent parents, provided by section 202, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 475), shall be paid increased pension which when added to the amount of pension to which he is otherwise entitled will aggregate an amount equal to such rates: Provided, That when the course of vocational rehabilitation furnished to any person as herein provided consists of training on the job by an employer, such employer shall be required to submit monthly to the Administrator a statement under oath showing any wage, compensation, or other income paid by him to such person during the month, directly or indirectly, and based upon such sworn statements, the Administrator is authorized to reduce the pension of such person to an amount considered equitable and just, but not below the amount of pension or retirement pay to which he would be entitled for service-connected disability if not following a course of vocational rehabilitation.

"4. Where any person while following a course of vocational rehabilitation as provided for in this part suffers an injury or an aggravation of any injury, as a result of the pursuit of such course of vocational rehabilitation, and not the result of his own willful misconduct, and such injury or aggravation results in additional disability to or death of such person, the benefits under laws applicable to veterans of the present war shall be awarded in the same manner and extent as if such disability, aggravation, or death were service connected within the meaning of such laws; except that no benefits under this paragraph shall be awarded unless application be made therefor within 2 years after such injury or aggravation was suffered, or such death occurred.

"5. The purpose of rehabilitation to restore employability lost by virtue of a material and permanent handicap due to service-incurred disability. The Administrator shall have the power and duty to cooperate with and employ the facilities of other governmental and State employment agencies for the purpose of placing in gainful employment persons trained under the provisions of this part.

"6. The Administrator is hereby autnorized to make such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary in order to promote good conduct and cooperation on the part of persons who are following courses of vocational rehabilitation provided by this part. Penalties for the breach of such rules and regulations may, with the approval of the Administrator, extend to a forfeiture by the offender for a period of 3 months of such portion of the pension herein provided as will leave him not less than the amount of the monthly pension or retirement pay to which such person is entitled for service-connected disability, and such penalties may also extend to permanent discontinuance of all further benefits of this part.

"7. The Administrator is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary for the granting of leaves of absence to those following courses of vocational rehabilitation provided by this part where in his opinion such leaves do not materially interfere with the pursuit of such courses. Such leaves of absence shall not in the case of any person be granted in excess of 30 days in any consecutive 12 months except in exceptional circumstances as determined by the Administrator: Provided, That during leave of absence under this paragraph such person shall be considered to be pursuing his course of vocational rehabilitation under this part.

"8. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, the sum of $500,000 to be utilized by the Veterans' Administration under such rules and regulations as the Administrator may prescribe, as a revolving fund for the purpose of making advancements not exceeding $100 in any case, to persons commencing or undertaking courses of vocational rehabilitation under this part, and advancement to bear no interest and to be reimbursed in such installments as may be determined by the Administrator by proper deductions from any future payments of pension or retirement pay.

"9. The Administrator shall have the power to provide courses of instruction for personnel and may detail employees to attend the same and may detail any such personnel to attend courses conducted by other than Veterans' Administration agencies, including private organizations, and such employees in addition to their salaries shall be entitled to the payment of expenses incident to such detail, including transportation and tuition, as the Administrator by rules and regulations shall provide; and also in his discretion, to make, or, as by agreement with other agency or institution, cause to be made, studies, investigations, and reports inquiring into the rehabilitation of disabled persons and the relative abilities, aptitudes, and capacities of the several groups of the variously handicapped and as to how their potentialities can best be developed and their services best utilized in gainful and suitable employment, including the rehabilitation programs of foreign nations engaged in the present war. For this purpose he shall have the power to cooperate with such public and private agencies as he may deem advisable and to call in consultants who shall receive as compensation for their services a reasonable per diem, which the Administrator shall by rules and regulations provide, for each day actually spent in the work provided for herein and shall in addition be reimbursed for their necessary traveling and other expenses. For the purposes of this part, the Administrator may accept uncompensated services upon such agreement as he may deem feasible."

SEC. 3. The appropriations for the Veterans' Administration, "Salaries and expenses, medical and hospital, and compensation and pensions", shall be available for necessary expenses, including but not confined to necessary medical care, and pension payment, payment or reimbursement of expenses in connection with supplying suitable training under this act; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such additional amount or amounts as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act.

PROVIDING FOR REHABILITATION OF VETERANS DISABLED IN THE PRESENT WAR

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 801) to amend title I of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933, and the veterans regulations to provide for rehabilitation of disabled veterans, and for other purposes, having considered the same, submit the following report thereon, with the recommendation that it do pass.

This bill is identical with H. R. 7661 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, which was drafted in cooperation between the committee, representatives of the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Veterans' Administration, except that H. R. 801 makes specific inclusion for increased rates to trainees having dependents. After hearings by your committee thereon October 7, 1942, H. R. 7661 was reported favorably and passed the House of Representatives, October 19, 1942. Hearings on this bill, H. R. 801, were conducted February 2 and 3, 1943. The representatives of the service organizations heretofore referred to strongly endorse and recommend immediate passage of this particular measure. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs has advised the committee that this bill will accomplish the purposes sought and represents the most simplified manner of drafting by utilizing, as far as practicable, the existing laws pertaining to veterans. By making the act a part of the present system of beneficial laws there will be for application all of the administrative, regulatory, and penal provisions thereof.

Your committee are convinced that the matter of rehabilitation of the disabled veterans of the present war must be recognized as a separate and distinct function of the Federal Government as it has been heretofore recognized for disabled veterans of World War No. 1. The measure recognizes the necessity for administration of all veterans' benefits by one agency, namely, the one established for this purpose, the Veterans' Administration. Facilities of the Veterans' Administration are already established and will be utilized, as far as practicable, in the administration of this measure. The measure provides that the Administrator shall have the power and duty to provide suitable training to persons included in the act, and to utilize and extend existing Veterans' Administration facilities and to utilize, with or without compensation as may be agreed, those of any other governmental agency, as well as those maintained by joint Federal and State contribution; and also provides for contract with public or private institutions for such additional training facilities as may be suitable and necessary under the act.

Enactment of this proposed measure will facilitate a most economical method of administering rehabilitation, with the assurance that it will be administered in correlation with related benefits and by an agency fully informed regarding the problems of veterans generally as well as having the complete information pertaining to the individual disabled war veterans.

The proposed measure contains provisions designed to profit by the experience in administration of rehabilitation for World War No. 1 by the Veterans' Bureau, and will minimize duplication of existing agencies. This measure also avoids the complications, duplications, and impaired service to veterans which existed prior to August 9, 1921, when World War No. 1 veterans' benefits were administered by separate agencies. The act of August 9, 1921, placed rehabilitation with other World War No. 1 benefits under the Veterans' Bureau. Further consolidation of laws pertaining to veterans was effected by the act of July 3, 1930. This measure, H. R. 801, is in accord with such principle and policy.

No course of training in excess of 4 years may be approved nor may any training be afforded beyond 6 years after termination of the present war.

While pursuing training under the act and for 2 months after, until his employability is determined, each veteran, if entitled to pension in an amount less than the amount payable in accordance with the compensation rates for total and temporary disability, including additional amounts for wife, child, or children, and dependent parents, provided by section 202, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended shall be paid increased pension, which when added to the amount of pension to which he is otherwise entitled, will aggregate an amount equal to such rates.

The rates of compensation under this provision will be as follows:

If the disabled person has neither wife nor child, $80 monthly; if he has a wife but no child, $90 monthly; if he has a wife and one child $95 monthly, and $5 for each additional child; if he has no wife but one child living, $90, with $5 for each additional child; if he has a mother or father, either or both dependent on him for support, $10 for each parent so dependent.

Speedy enactment of this measure is urged in order that rehabilitation will be available to our disabled veterans of the present war at present entitled thereto, and to discharge our obligation in this regard to the future eligibles.

The program of benefits administered by the Veterans' Administration, such as hospital care, out-patient treatment, prosthetic appliances, and pensions, will be rounded out by extending the care to include rehabilitation—that is, care, training, and placement in gainful occupations in accordance with the liberal policy of the Government toward its war disabled.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the rehabilitation of the veterans of this war. It has the support of the veterans' organizations.

We do not want the veterans of this war placed under Social Security. We do not propose for the veterans of this war to be used as a common carrier to rake down billions of dollars of appropriations in years to come in order to take care of people some of whom never have worked or fought either. For that reason we have reported this bill which provides for the rehabilitation of the veterans of this war through the Veterans' Administration just as we did after the last war.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This bill is identical with one that passed the House last year without any difficulty at all.

Mr. RANKIN. We brought this measuse before the House during the last Congress and it passed without any controversy. However, since that time there has been a rising tide of social security sentiment among certain bureaucrats, and they now insist on putting the veterans under Social Security.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. As I understand, the bill was objected to.

Mr. RANKIN. No; the bill was not objected to.

Mr. BARDEN. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from North Carolina. The question is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I object, Mr. Speaker.

COLUMBIA BASIN PROJECT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 839, to amend the act approved May 27, 1937 (ch. 269, 50 Stat. 208), by providing substitute and additional authority for the prevention of speculation in lands of the Columbia Basin project, and substitute and additional authority related to the settlement and development of the project, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand a rule has been granted on this bill. For that reason only, I object to its consideration at this time.

REEMPLOYMENT RIGHTS FOR PERSONS IN THE MERCHANT MARINE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 131, to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill gives persons serving in the merchant marine the same reemployment rights that are given to members of the Army and the Navy, but restricted to May 1, 1940. I yield to no one in my admiration for the splendid work being done by the members of the merchant marine, but the situation in this case is different from that in the case of the Army and Navy. The men in the merchant marine receive high pay. Certainly, to the majority of those who enlisted in May 1940, the pay question was an important factor. I realize that today enlistments in the merchant marine are motivated largely by patriotism, but this was not the case in May 1940. I should think it would be better if this is made applicable only after Pearl Harbor.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. In the absence of the distinguished chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee, may I point out to the gentleman that every argument he has made against this bill is equally applicable to the other legislation

Congress has passed for citizens going into the armed services.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly not, because the men in the armed services receive small pay, while in the merchant marine they receive very high pay.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is true, of course, that they get more pay in the merchant marine than they do in the armed services, but they do not get a lot of the protection that is given to the men in the armed services. I do not mean to do anything but praise the men who go into the armed services, but these men go voluntarily into the merchant marine, we do not draft them. Certainly it is not too much to give them the right of reemployment which we have given to the civilian employees of the Government and to employees from private industry who have gone into the armed services. These men have lost a larger proportion of those who served than any other branch of our activities connected with this war.

Mr. KEAN. I would certainly be glad to support the bill if the date were changed to December 7, 1941.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield so that I may ask a question of my colleague the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true that the War Shipping Board or the Maritime Service, should I say, is conducting a recruiting campaign to attract the attention of the young men of the country on the same basis as the recruiting campaigns being carried on by the Army and Navy?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct. There is nothing more vital to our war effort than the manning of a cargo ship. We cannot fight unless we can send supplies. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will not object to the consideration of this bill. We are not trying to give these men anything we have not given to others. As I recall, the date in the bill is the same as in other legislation passed for similar services.

Mr. KEAN. If the gentleman will not accept an amendment, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

WAR SHIPPING ADMINISTRATION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 133, to amend and clarify certain provisions of law relating to functions of the War Shipping Administration, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a very complicated bill. Will the gentleman from Georgia give an explanation of the bill to the House?

Mr. RAMSPECK. May I say to the gentleman from New Jersey that this bill was reported in the last Congress and passed the House in almost the identical form in which it is presented here. It has a great many provisions in it which are wanted by the War Shipping Administration. It has a few changes, none of any great importance, which were made to conform with amendments presented in the Senate during the last session. The bill did not pass the Senate. We have not included in the bill, however, one controversial amendment which the Senate put in its bill, an amendment dealing with section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, which has to do with the enhancement clause of the Merchant Marine Act. That was left out because we did not want anything controversial in this bill.

This bill deals with seamen's benefits, with insurance protection for seamen and their dependents, with the procedure of the requisition of vessels but not the payment of the price under section 902, and with the insurance administration, and coverage of vessels, and it contains some miscellaneous provisions.

I may say to the gentleman that I am not as familiar with the bill as the chairman of the committee would be if he could be here, but I can assure him that the bill passed the House once without any question and has been reported in the Senate with the provisions in the bill which are now presented.

Mr. KEAN. This is a unanimous report?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is.

Mr. KEAN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) officers and members of crews (hereinafter referred to as "seamen") employed on United States or foreign-flag vessels as employees of the United States through the War Shipping Administration shall, with respect to (1) laws administered by the Public Health Service and the Social Security Act, as amended by subsection (b) (2) and (3) of this section; (2) death, injuries, illness, maintenance and cure, loss of effects, detention, or repatriation, or claims arising therefrom not covered by the foregoing clause (1); and (3) collection of wages and bonuses and making of allotments, have all of the rights, benefits, exemptions, privileges, and liabilities, under law applicable to citizens of the United States employed as seamen on privately owned and operated American vessels. Such seamen, because of the temporary wartime character of their employment by the War Shipping Administration, shall not be considered as officers or employees of the United States for the purposes of the United States Employees Compensation Act, as amended; the Civil Service Retirement Act, as amended; the act of Congress approved March 7, 1942 (Public Law 490, 77th Cong.); or the act entitled "An act to provide benefits for the injury, disability, death, or detention of employees of contractors with the United States and certain other persons or reimbursement therefor", approved December 2, 1942 (Public Law 784, 77th Cong.). Claims arising under clause (1) hereof shall be enforced in the same manner as such claims would be enforced if the seaman were employed on a privately owned and operated American vessel: Any claim referred to in clause (2) or (3) hereof shall, if administratively disallowed in whole or in part, be enforced pursuant to the provisions of the Suits in Admiralty Act, notwithstanding the vessel on which the seaman is employed is not a merchant vessel within the meaning of such act. Any claim, right, or cause of action of or in respect of any such seaman accruing on or after October 1, 1941, and prior to the date of enactment of this section may be enforced, and upon the election of the seaman or his surviving dependent or beneficiary, or his legal representative to do so shall be governed, as if this section had been in effect when such claim, right, or cause of action accrued, such election to be made in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator, War Shipping Administration. Rights of any seaman under the Social Security Act, as amended by subsection (b) (2) and (3), and claims therefor shall be governed solely by the provisions of such act, so amended. When used in this subsection the term "administratively disallowed" means a denial of a written claim in accordance with rules or regulations prescribed by the Administrator, War Shipping Administration. When used in this subsection the terms "War Shipping Administration" and "Administrator, War Shipping Administration" shall be deemed to include the United States Maritime Commission with respect to the period beginning October 1, 1941, and ending February 11, 1942, and the term "seaman" shall be deemed to include any seaman employed as an employee of the United States through the War Shipping Administration on vessels made available to or subchartered to other agencies or departments of the United States.

(b) (1) Section 1426 of the Internal Revenue Code (53 Stat. 177, 1383; 26 U. S. C. 1426) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(1) Officers and members of crews employed by War Shipping Administration.—The term 'employment' shall include such service as is determined by the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, to be performed after September 30, 1941, and prior to the termination of title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941, on or in connection with any vessel by an officer or member of the crew as an employee of the United States employed through the War Shipping Administration, or, in respect of such service performed before February 11, 1942, the United States Maritime Commission. The term 'wages' means, with respect to service which constitutes employment by reason of this subsection, such amount of remuneration as is determined (subject to the provisions of this section) by the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, to be paid for such service. The Administrator and such agents as he may designate for the purpose are authorized and directed to comply with the provisions of the internal revenue laws on behalf of the United States as the employer of individuals whose service constitutes employment by reason of this subsection, but the Administrator and his agents shall not be liable for the tax on any employee imposed by section 1400 (unless the Administrator or his agent collects such tax from the employee) with respect to service performed before the date of enactment of this subsection which constitutes employment by reason of the enactment of this subsection."

(2) Section 209 of the Social Security Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 42, sec. 409), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(o) (1) Officers and members of crews employed by War Shipping Administration: The term 'employment' shall include such service as is determined by the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, to be performed after September 30, 1941, and prior to the termination of title I of the First War Powers Act, 1941, on or in connection with any vessel by an officer or member of the crew as an employee of the United States employed through the War Shipping Administration or, in respect of such service performed before February 11, 1942, the United States Maritime Commission.

"(2) The Social Security Board shall not make determinations as to whether an individual has performed services which are employment by reason of this subsection, or the periods of such services, or the amounts of remuneration for such services, or the periods in which or for which such remuneration was paid, but shall accept the determinations with respect thereto of the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, and such agents as he may designate, as evidenced by returns filed by such Administrator as an employer pursuant to section 1426 (i) of the Internal Revenue Code and certifications made pursuant to this subsection. Such determinations shall be final and conclusive.

"(3) The Administrator, War Shipping Administration, is authorized and directed, upon written request of the Social Security Board, to make certification to it with respect to any matter determinable for the Board by the War Shipping Administrator under this subsection, which the Board finds necessary in administering this title.

"(4) This subsection shall be effective as of September 30, 1941."

(3) Section 907 of the Social Security Act, amendments of 1939, is amended by inserting, after the phrase "attaining age 65", the following: "and 1 percent of any wages paid him for services which constitute employment by virtue of subsection (o) of section 209 of the Social Security Act, as amended,".

(c) The War Shipping Administration and its agents or persons acting on its behalf or for its account may, for convenience of administration, with the approval of the Administrator, make payments of any taxes, fees, charges, or exactions to the United States or its agencies.

SEC. 2. (a) Section 222 (f) of Subtitle—Insurance of Title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (Public Law 523, 77th Cong.), is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: "and, whenever the Commission shall insure any risks included under subsection (d) or (e) of this section, or under this subsection insofar as it concerns liabilities relating to the master, officers, and crews of such vessels or to other persons transported thereon, the insurance on such risks may include marine risks to the extent that the Commission determines to be necessary or advisable."

(b) Whenever the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, finds that, on or after October 1, 1941, and before 30 days after the date of enactment of this subsection, a master, officer, or member of the crew of, or any persons transported on, a vessel owned by or chartered to the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration or operated by, or for the account of, or at the direction or under the control of the Commission or the Administration, has suffered death, injury, detention, or other casualty, for which the War Shipping Administration would be authorized to provide insurance under Subtitle—Insurance of Title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended by this act, the Administrator may declare that such death, injury, detention, or other casualty, shall be deemed and considered to be covered by such insurance at the time of the disaster or accident, if the Administrator finds that such action is required to make equitable provision for loss or injury related to the war effort and not otherwise adequately provided for: Provided, That in making provision for insurance under this subsection the Administrator shall not provide for payments in excess of those generally provided for in comparable cases under insurance hereafter furnished under the said Subtitle—Insurance of Title II, as amended: Provided further, That any money paid to any person by reason of insurance provided for under this subsection shall apply in pro tanto satisfaction of the claim of such person against the United States arising from the same loss or injury. The declarations, findings, and actions of or by the Administrator under this subsection shall be final and conclusive.

SEC. 3. (a) The second proviso of section 1 of the act of June 6, 1941 (Public Law 101, 77th Cong.), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That such compensation hereunder, or advances on account thereof, shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, and the fund so deposited shall be available for the payment of such compensation, and shall be subject to be applied to the payment of the amount of any valid claim by way of mortgage or maritime lien or attachment lien upon such vessel, or of any stipulation therefor in a court of the United States, or of any State, subsisting at the time of such requisition or taking of title or possession; the holder of any such claim may commence prior to June 30, 1943, or within 6 months after the first such deposit with the Treasurer and publication of notice thereof in the Federal Register, whichever date is later, and maintain in the United States district court from whose custody such vessel has been or may be taken or in whose territorial jurisdiction the vessel was lying at the time of requisition or taking of title or possession, a suit in admiralty according to the principles of libels in rem against the fund, which shall proceed and be heard and determined according to the principles of law and to the rules of practice obtaining in like cases between private parties, and any decree in said suit shall be paid out of the first and all subsequent deposits of compensation; and such suit shall be commenced in the manner provided by section 2 of the Suits in Admiralty Act and service of process shall be made in the manner therein provided by service upon the United States attorney and by mailing by registered mail to the Attorney General and the United States Maritime Commission and due notice shall under order of the court be given to all interested persons, and any decree shall be subject to appeal and revision as now provided in other cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction."

(b) The Administrator, War Shipping Administration, may determine at any time prior to the payment in full or deposit in full with the Treasurer of the United States, or the payment or deposit of 75 percent, of just compensation therefor that the ownership of any vessel (the title to which has been requisitioned pursuant to sec. 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, or the act of June 6, 1941 (Public Law 101, 77th Cong.)), is not required by the United States, and after such determination has been made and notice thereof has been published in the Federal Register, the use rather than the title to such vessel shall be deemed to have been requisitioned for all purposes as of the date of the original taking: Provided, however, That no such determination shall be made with respect to any vessel owned by citizens of the United States after the expiration of a period of 2 months after the date of delivery of such vessel pursuant to title requisition except with the consent of the owner. Upon the written recommendation of the Secretary of State, such a determination may be made by the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, with respect to any vessel, the title to which has been requisitioned pursuant to the act of June 6, 1941 (Public Law 101, 77th Cong.), which shall have been lost or destroyed or converted to naval or military use by the United States.

(c) In the event that a vessel the title or use and possession of which is requisitioned or taken pursuant to section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, or the act of June 6, 1941 (Public Law 101, 77th Cong.), is in the custody of any court, State or Federal, it shall be the duty of all agents and officers of the court having possession, custody, or control of said vessel, forthwith upon the filing with the clerk of said court of a certified copy of the order of requisitioning or taking, and without further order of the court, to comply with said requisitioning or taking and to permit the representatives of the United States Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration, as the case may be, to take possession, custody, and control of said vessel.

(d) Section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end of subsection (d) thereof a paragraph to read as follows:

"The existence of any valid claim by way of mortgage or maritime claim or attachment lien upon such vessel shall not prevent the taking thereof pursuant to this section: Provided, however, That in the event any such claim exists the United States Maritime Commission may in its discretion deposit such portion of the compensation hereunder, or advances on account thereof, as may equal but not exceed the amount of such claims in respect of the vessel, with the Treasurer of the United States, and the fund so deposited shall be available for the payment of such compensation, and shall be subject to be applied to the payment of the amount of any valid claim by way of mortgage or maritime lien or attachment lien upon such vessel, or of any stipulation therefor in a court of the United States, or of any State, subsisting at the time of such requisition or taking of title or possession; the holder of any such claim may commence prior to June 30, 1943, or within 6 months after the first such deposit with the Treasurer and publication of notice thereof in the Federal Register, whichever date is later, and maintain in the United States district court from whose custody such vessel has been or may be taken or in whose territorial jurisdiction the vessel was lying at the time of requisitioning or taking of title or possession, a suit in admiralty according to the principles of libels in rem against the fund, which shall proceed and be heard and determined according to the principles of law and to the rules of practice obtaining in like cases between private parties, and any decree in said suits shall be paid out of the first and all subsequent deposits of compensation; and such suit shall be commenced in the manner provided by section 2 of the Suits in Admiralty Act and service of process shall be made in the manner therein provided by service upon the United States attorney and by mailing by registered mail to the Attorney General and the United States Maritime Commission and due notice shall under order of the court be given to all interested persons, and any decree shall be subject to appeal and revision as now provided in other cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction."

(e) (1) The second sentence of section 223 of subtitle—Insurance of title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (Public Law 523, 77th Cong.), is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "but the Commission may allow fair and reasonable compensation to any company authorized to do an insurance business in any State of the United States for servicing insurance written by such company as an underwriting agent for the Commission, and such compensation may include an allowance for expenses reasonably incurred by such agent but such expenses shall not include any commission paid by such agent in excess of 5 percent of the premiums in respect of such insurance."

(2) The last sentence of such section 223 is amended by striking out the clause in parentheses, and by inserting before the period at the end of such sentence a comma and the following: "but in no case shall such allowance to the carrier provide for payment by the carrier of commissions in excess of 5 percent of the premiums paid for that portion of the direct insurance so reinsured."

(f) Section 224 (a) of subtitle—Insurance of title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (Public Law 523, 77th Cong.), is amended by inserting after the word "subtitle" and before the comma following such word the words "or in section 10 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended."

(g) Section 225 of subtitle—Insurance of title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (Public Law 523, 77th Cong.), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "All persons having or claiming to have an interest in such insurance, or who it is believed might assert such an interest, may be made parties to such suit, either initially or upon the motion of either party. In any case where the Commission acknowledges the indebtedness of the United States on account of such insurance, and there may be a dispute as to the person or persons entitled to receive payment, the United States may bring an action in the nature of a bill of interpleader against the persons having or claiming to have any interest in such insurance, or who it is believed might assert such an interest, in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or in the district court in and for the district in which any such person resides. In either of such actions any person claiming to have an interest in such insurance, or who it is believed might assert such an interest, if not an inhabitant of or found within the district within which either of such actions is brought, may be brought in by order of the court to be served personally or by publication or in such other reasonable manner as the court may direct, and if it be shown to the satisfaction of the court that persons unknown might assert a claim on account of such insurance, the court may direct service upon such persons unknown by publication in the Federal Register. Judgment in any such action shall discharge the United States from further liability to any parties to such action, and to all persons where service by publication upon persons unknown is directed by the court. The procedure herein provided shall apply to all actions now pending against the United States under the provisions of this subtitle, as amended."

(h) Section 226 (f) of Subtitle—Insurance of Title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (Public Law 523, 77th Cong.), is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(3) The term 'risks of war' shall include those losses which, in accordance with commercial practice prevailing from time to time, are excluded from marine insurance coverage under 'free of capture and seizure' clauses or clauses analogous thereto."

(i) Subtitle—Insurance of Title II of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (Public Law 523, 77th Cong.), is amended by adding at the end thereof a section to read as follows:

"SEC. 229. In addition to the insurance functions authorized by the other sections of this subtitle, the War Shipping Administration may insure directly, or may reinsure in whole or in part any company authorized to do business in any State in the United States and which shall insure directly, any person who shall perform services or provide facilities for or with respect to any public or private vessel against legal liabilities (except liability to employees in respect of employer's liability and workmen's compensation) that may be incurred by such person in connection with the performance of such services or the providing of such facilities, whenever in the opinion of the Administrator, War Shipping Administration, such insurance or reinsurance is required in the prosecution of the war effort and cannot be obtained at reasonable rates or upon reasonable conditions from approved companies authorized to do an insurance business in any State of the United States."

(j) The clause in parentheses in the first sentence of section 3 (b) of the act of June 6, 1941, as amended (Public Law 101, 77th Cong.), is amended to read as follows: "(including any interest or liability of the owner, charterer, or agent)."

(k) The second sentence of section 4 of such act of June 6, 1941, is amended by inserting after the words "national defense" and before the semicolon a comma and the following: "and when so chartered or operated may be insured as provided in said section 3."

SEC. 4. The United States shall, with respect to vessels owned by or chartered to the War Shipping Administrator under bareboat charter or time charter or operated directly by such Administrator or for his account, be entitled to the benefits of all exemptions and of all limitations of liability accorded by law to the owners of vessels. With respect to any such vessel, the term "the United States" shall include agents or other persons acting for or on behalf of the Administrator in connection with the operation thereof.

SEC. 5. The provisions of section 1 (a) of this act shall remain in force until the termination of title 1 of the First War Powers Act, 1941. The termination of the provisions of such section shall not affect any act done or any right accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any cause before such termination, but all rights and liabilities under law as modified by such provisions shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if such provisions had not terminated. The authority conferred upon the United States Maritime Commission by any provision of this act shall be vested in and exercised by the Administrator of the War Shipping Administration in conformity with the Executive order of February 7, 1942 (No. 9054; 7 F. R. 837), as heretofore or hereafter amended.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 12, line 12, strike out "January 1" and insert "June 30."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRAINING OF AIR PILOTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1670) to amend section 2 of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do so to get an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the chairman of the committee on the floor, but this bill is made necessary because of the new training program by which Civil Aeronautics Authority is entering into an agreement with the War and Navy Departments to train Army and Navy pilots who are in the service.

Mr. STEFAN. I do not believe the gentleman is explaining the bill correctly. This bill provides for some change in the Civil Aeronautics Act. I notice that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], the author of the bill, has come into the chamber, and I ask him to explain the bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, the Civil Aeronautics Administration was engaged in the training of civilian pilots. Now they are training entirely sailors and soldiers from the Army and the Navy. They cannot expend any of their appropriation on that, under a decision of the Comptroller General.

Mr. STEFAN. As I understand the gentleman, he says that all of the trainees in the Civil Aeronautics training program are in the armed forces.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. In active service.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. STFFAN. And under the act the C. A. A. cannot expend money except to train civilians.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. For the training of any enlisted reserves if they are in active service status?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Heretofore their money was confined to the training of civilians?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Do I understand there will be an increase in civilian pilots?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No, because they will not train any more. It is a matter of accounts.

Mr. STEFAN. Who is going to pay for this training?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The War Department wanted the Civil Aeronautics Authority or the Board to pay it from their appropriation, instead of from the Army and the Navy appropriations.

Mr. STEFAN. Who pays it under this change?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the Civilian Aeronautics Administration have to pay for the training of enlisted reserves in active service? Will they have to pay them $50 a month, instead of that coming out of the Army appropriation?

Mr. BULWINKLE. No; the whole thing, all expenses, will come out of the Civil Aeronautics appropriation.

Mr. STEFAN. I believe the gentleman is in error about that, because there would not be enough money in the civilian pilot training program to do it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. But that is a matter that they will ask the Appropriations Committee for.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I ask the gentleman further about the program: What is to be established with reference to the new men of the Army and the Navy to be trained? Are they to be trained at existing civilian pilot training fields?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes, and at schools and colleges and at the fields.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. At the present time there are many fields not at the schools and colleges, where men are being trained. Will those fields be continued or abandoned?

Mr. BULWINKLE. They will not be abandoned. It is not contemplated to use any new fields.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. My information from the Civil Aeronautics Administration does not check up with the statements the gentleman has made. They have advised me that fields close to colleges are to be used, and if they are at a distant point from the colleges those fields cannot be used in the present Army program. As far as the Navy is concerned, it will continue to use the civilian pilot fields, but that is not true of the Army.

Mr. BULWINKLE. To be frank with the gentleman, I do not understand it that way.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is the present contemplated plan of the Civil Aeronautics Administration to reduce the contract fields under the Civilian Pilot Training Program, probably 60 to 70 percent.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. TABER. The Civil Aeronautics Board sent around people to work up sentiment for airfields in certain localities, and after the sentiment is locally worked up, then they tell them they cannot do it. I wonder how much of that is going on.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Certain communities have increased their school facilities. They have gone to the expense of housing facilities and apparently, under this program, as far as the Army is concerned, many of the present fields used by flight contractors for training civilian pilots will not be used by the Army.

Mr. STEFAN. If the gentleman will yield further——

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. In regard to the question raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], I am disappointed to hear what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] said about closing down 70 percent of the training fields in the United States, for the reason that the W. P. A. and the Civil Aeronautics Administration have gone into various communities and urged the communities to vote bonds and go into debt to buy airports, to expand airports, to buy additional land, indicating that they would improve them or that there would be some Federal assistance toward completing them. Many communities did this, thinking they were helping the defense program. The result is that in my district we have unfinished airports that are practically completed. The only thing left is to pave the runways. Here are fine airports with fine pilot instructors left high and dry. With the liquidation of the W. P. A. the citizens in my district are alarmed as to what is to become of the great investment they and the Government have made. Here are airports almost ready to be used which we are now told may be abandoned by the very Federal agencies which came to these communities and urged the people, induced them to vote bonds and go into debt to build these airports and to buy property. If what the gentleman from Oklahoma says becomes a fact, a great outlay of community and Federal funds will represent waste. How can we justify such acts?

Mr. TABER. And they are still out urging people to do that sort of thing. In addition to that, after they get them worked up to the right pitch, then they let them down.

Mr. STEFAN. They must not abandon them. Our investment in them is too great.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The reduction program which the gentleman speaks of will not apply to this bill at all.

Mr. STEFAN. No, this bill has nothing to do with that. But it may affect the training program on fields in danger of abandonment.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the bill go over until we can look into the program a little closer with reference to the Army and their arrangement with the C. A. A. in connection with the flight training schools.

Mr. LEA. I would like to say to the gentleman that it is undesirable to do that unless he feels there is something of importance that is required, because this is laying the foundation for the new training program which will take in about 30,000 men a month. So it is important for them to know whether or not they can proceed under this plan.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Can the gentleman from California tell us how many of the existing flight fields which the Civil Aeronautics Administration is now using will be used in connection with the present contemplated program?

Mr. LEA. I cannot tell you the number, but this bill does not affect that question any more than it simply provides that those men who are in an active enlisted status can have training under the C. A. A., which the Comptroller General has held they cannot, under the present act, because the present act provides only for civilian training.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The C. A. A. has advised me that unless the flight training fields are in close proximity to the colleges that have been selected, the present fields will be abandoned and not be used for pilot training purposes.

Mr. LEA. That may be true, but that is not dependent at all on this bill. This bill has nothing to do with that.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. As I understand this bill, in the original act regarding civilian pilot training we allowed around $72,000,000 for that purpose last year. Now there is a balance left in the appropriation of about $25,000,000. I understand that the Navy has turned over for civilian pilot training the sum of $25,000,000 for the training of personnel for the Navy. Now this bill is to take care of the personnel within the Army, and to use the balance of the funds for the purpose of training the personnel of the Army.

Mr. LEA. It is the Army contract that caused this to be brought up at this time, but it does apply to both the Army and the Navy. It permits them to be trained by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, but it does not change the burden of expense in doing it.

Mr. RABAUT. But it shifts the burden of expense out of the Army appropriation to the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. LEA. Not for the pay, but for the training.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I think the Army and the Navy ought to get together on this. Every time we hold hearings for an appropriation for the C. A. A. program we are up against some question of procedure between the Army and the Navy. They never seem to get together on civilian pilot training program. We are in a war. There must be cooperation in everything we do toward winning that war.

Mr. LEA. This bill affects only the appropriations made to the C. A. A. It permits those funds to be used for training the men on the active list, which otherwise could not be done.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. That completes the call of the Consent Calendar.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN MECHANICAL EQUIPMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 2 on the calendar, the bill (H. R. 1294) to authorize the sale or transfer of property belonging to the Government for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this bill was that the funds should revert to the general fund of the Treasury, and not in any special fund. With the understanding this feature would be corrected, I have consented to again call the bill up for passage.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever during the continuance of the present hostilities the President shall determine that any mechanical equipment appurtenant to any building or other real property owned by the Government and devoted to a particular use is urgently needed in the conduct of the war, and cannot otherwise be provided, the head of the department, agency, or establishment having control thereof, in order to fulfill such need, is authorized to sell such property for cash for a price equal to the full replacement value thereof. Any funds realized from the sale of such property shall be deposited in appropriate special funds in the Treasury and shall be available, as the President may prescribe, for replacement of such equipment: Provided, That funds not obligated for such replacement within 2 fiscal years after the cessation of the present hostilities shall be covered into the surplus fund of the Treasury.

With the following committee amendment:

That whenever during the continuance of the present hostilities the President shall determine that any mechanical equipment now owned by the Government and devoted to a particular use is urgently needed in the conduct of the war, and cannot otherwise be provided, the head of the department, agency, or establishment having control thereof, in order to fulfill such need, is authorized to sell such property for cash for a price equal to the full replacement value thereof. Any funds realized from the sale of such property shall be deposited in a special fund in the Treasury and shall be available for replacement and for the restoration, repair, and renovation of any buildings or other property from which it may have been taken.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the final sentence in the committee amendment on the ground that it constitutes an appropriation in a legislative bill reported by a legislative committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the committee thought the provisions of the bill as reported were preferable, I concede the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will report the committee amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That whenever during the continuance of the present hostilities the President shall determine that any mechanical equipment now owned by the Government and devoted to a particular use is urgently needed in the conduct of the war, and cannot otherwise be provided, the head of the department, agency, or establishment having control thereof, in order to fulfill such need, is authorized to sell such property for cash for a price equal to the full replacement value thereof.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, last week, in announcing to the House what the program for this week would be, I stated that the Private Calendar would be called tomorrow. I have been asked to request that the calling of the Private Calendar be dispensed with this week in order that general debate on the independent offices bill may proceed for the balance of today and all of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Private Calendar be dispensed with on tomorrow, Tuesday, but that the Private Calendar may be called some day this week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why not set a definite date for the calling of the Private Calendar so that Members interested may know when the bills will be called? Why not make it Friday?

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not make my request specific because, as the gentleman will realize, it is rather difficult to foretell when consideration of the independent offices bill will be concluded and the bill disposed of; but I will ask for a definite date for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask now unanimous consent that the calling of the Private Calendar on tomorrow, Tuesday, be dispensed with, but that it may be in order to call individual bills on the Private Calendar on Friday, February 19, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOSPITALIZATION OF VETERANS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 1749, a bill to "amend Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended."

Mr. BARDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is this bill?

Mr. RANKIN. This bill, let me state to the gentleman from North Carolina, is one which provides for hospitalizing the veterans of this war on the same terms that we hospitalize veterans of the last World War. We are receiving a great many complaints of hardships to veterans of the present war.

Mr. BARDEN. When was the bill introduced?

Mr. RANKIN. The bill was introduced some time ago.

Mr. BARDEN. And was it reported by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. RANKIN. It is on the calendar; it is the last bill on the calendar, No. 21.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman just desires to move it up on the calendar.

Mr. RANKIN. It did not get on the calendar in time to be considered today, without unanimous consent. It lacked only 1 day.

Many of these boys are suffering, some are having to go to jails and private hospitals, and some of them are being sent to their homes without any treatment at all. They ought to be taken care of promptly.

Mr. BARDEN. Does not the gentleman believe that if it is so urgent, somebody should have a copy of the bill? The gentleman knows I am not opposed to hospitalization of veterans. I have been a member of veterans' organizations just as long as the gentleman from Mississippi, and I do not like to be put in the position of making a reservation of objection on a bill that is as apparently as important as this is.

Mr. RANKIN. The only difference is this: This provides for the hospitalization of not only disabled enlisted men but women who are actually in the military service and who are entitled to this hospitalization.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I have a case where an enlisted man while in the service went crazy. His mentality went wrong. He was taken back to my State and under the law of the State of Kentucky if he is sent to an insane asylum or a State hospital it must be at the expense of his estate or some member of his family who is able to pay it. Will this regulation, as amended, by the pending bill cover a case of that kind, and will he be hospitalized in a veterans' hospital?

Mr. RANKIN. He will be hospitalized in a veterans' hospital.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky relative to a young man who suffered a mental disability, may I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this situation: There is evidence that a very large number of young men going into the military service have become mentally disabled and then are discharged with the statement that the disability existed prior to entering the service. There is a much larger number of such disabilities in this war than in the last war. The percentage is greater. These young men may have no chance to go to a veterans' hospital, they certainly receive no compensation, and I have a feeling from evidence submitted that possibly a considerable number of these young men have been mentally disabled because of faulty or defective serum or inoculations, and I think the law should be amended requiring such disabilities to be considered as having arisen in the service.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my remarks in reference to H. R. 1749, I ask unanimous consent to insert a copy of the bill and the report in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

H. R. 1749

A bill to amend Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended, is hereby amended, by striking out the period at the end thereof and substituting therefor a colon and the following: "Any officer, enlisted man or woman, member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or Navy Nurse Corps (female) employed in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after December 7, 1941, and before the termination of the present war."

REPORT TO ACCOMPANY H. R. 1749

The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1749), entitled "A bill to amend Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended," having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The bill has for its purpose the granting of medical and hospital treatment, domiciliary care, and burial benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration to certain veterans of World War No. 2. The existing law requires that the veteran must have been discharged for disability incurred in service in line of duty or must be in receipt of pension for service-connected disability in order to receive treatment or care for disabilities which the man has been unable to prove to have been incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service.

Your committee conducted hearings on H. R. 1185 (78th Cong.), a similar bill, February 2 and 3, 1943. Many cases have been brought to attention, warranting immediate action of the Congress, where veterans, after being accepted for active service, have by change of environment and due to active service become seriously disabled and in need of treatment. In some instances they have been sent home without necessary care and, not infrequently, in mental cases retained in a jail pending transfer to a State institution. In some cases adequate care is not available. The Federal Government must assume its just obligation to care for these distressing cases, having taken the man into the active service in the first instance.

While the committee have been informed of efforts of the service departments and the Veterans' Administration to institute procedures tending to alleviate the above situation, your committee have determined, on the basis of facts presented to it and which undoubtedly have come to the attention of the Members of Congress generally, that no further delay should be entailed to insure the proper treatment and care of these disabled veterans. Such procedures as are referred to cannot be satisfactory under any circumstances due to the drastic restrictions under the existing law.

By amending paragraph IV of Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended, the veterans of the present war will be brought within the technical definition of a "veteran of any war" under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration. They will thus be entitled to medical and hospital treatment and domiciliary care and burial benefits on a parity with veterans of World War No. 1. While your committee recognize the reasons why these veterans of World War No. 2 have not been included for these benefits as veterans of any war, it is believed that the Congress must remove this inequality and injustice at the earliest practicable date.

In accordance with the provisions of clause 2a, rule XIII, House of Representatives, the changes in the present law made by the bill H. R. 1749 are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is in black brackets; new matter is in italics; existing law in which no changes are proposed is shown in roman):

"The term 'veteran of any war' shall include the following persons: World War—Any officer, enlisted man, member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or Navy Nurse Corps (female) who was employed in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after April 6, 1917, and before November 12, 1918; provided, however, if the person was serving with the United States military forces in Russia the dates herein shall be extended to April 1, 1920; Spanish-American War—Any officer or enlisted man who was employed in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after April 21, 1898, and before August 13, 1898, including those women who served as Army nurses under contracts on or after April 21, 1898, and before August 13, 1898, and including any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States between August 13, 1898, and July 4, 1902, both dates inclusive, and who left the continental United States under orders for military or naval service in Guam, Cuba, or Puerto Rico, between such dates; provided, that for the purposes of hospitalization the term 'veteran of any war' shall include persons who served overseas as contract surgeons of the Army on or after April 21, 1898, and before August 13, 1898; Philippine Insurrection—Any officer or enlisted man employed in the active military or naval service of the United States, including those women who served as Army nurses under contracts, who actually participated in the Philippine Insurrection on or after August 13, 1898, and before July 5, 1902; provided, however, if the person was serving in the United States military forces engaged in the hostilities in the Moro Province, the ending date shall be July 15, 1903; Boxer Rebellion—Any officer or enlisted man, including those women who served as Army nurses under contracts, employed in actual participation in the Boxer Rebellion on or after June 20, 1900, and before May 13, 1901[.]: Any officer, enlisted man or woman, member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or Navy Nurse Corps (female) employed in the active military or naval service of the United States on or after December 7, 1941, and before the termination of the present war."

The SPEAKER. The Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to call up this bill, which is on the calendar. The Chair trusts there will be either a green light for the consideration of the bill or objection made to its consideration soon, because it is desired that the House proceed with the other business of the House. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication which was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 12, 1943.
Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have been tentatively assigned to both the Post Office and Post Roads Committee and the Banking and Currency Committee of the House.

In view of my understanding that it will be necessary for me to relinquish membership on one of the above committees I am writing to tender my resignation from the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the House.

Sincerely yours,

MAURICE J. SULLIVAN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Louisiana [Mr. MCKENZIE] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter, and also that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include certain letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two topics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from the South San Francisco Packing & Provision Co. with reference to the meat shortage in California which has reached a desperate stage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with H. R. 1294.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1762, making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; and pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall continue throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1762, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of demand for time for debate and speeches, most of which I hope will not pertain particularly to this bill. I am not going to consume a lot of time myself going over the individual departments and items in the bill because I am sure when we get to the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule whatever interest there may be in those agencies will develop and we can go into that, perhaps with more profit.

At the outset I want to express my appreciation for the cooperation of the members of the Independent Offices Subcommittee in the consideration of this bill. We had long hearings, we went into each item painstakingly and carefully. It is a large bill and covers a great many departments, requiring a great deal of time in its consideration both in the committee and on the floor of the House. I want to thank not only my Democratic colleagues who cooperated with me but also the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], and the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] for their very intelligent, aggressive, and sometimes too persistent attention to the bill.

I may say that we do not often have any very violent differences of opinion in the Independent Offices Subcommittee. I do not believe there are very many items in this bill on which we do not agree. There may be some differences of opinion as to amount, but I do not believe, in fact, that even that will develop.

We have gone through this bill very carefully with the idea of trying to prepare it and bring it here in line with what we believe to be the sentiment not only of this House but of the country. We believe that every dollar should be cut out of Federal expenditures, except those funds which are absolutely necessary in the prosecution of the war. We have approached the consideration of the bill with that in mind.

The Budget estimate for this bill is $2,627,552,585. That is a lot of money. I call your attention to the statement which I shall put in the RECORD, part of it being in the report on the bill, which will show you that 87.7 percent of the funds in this bill are directly related to the major war effort. Additional funds are in the category of items that you probably could not do anything with in the way of curtailment. For instance, the salary of the President of the United States. Perhaps some people would like to cut out that salary entirely. I do not believe, however, there would be many in favor of that, but perhaps there would be a few. There are also funds for the civil-service retirement fund, for the Canal Zone retirement fund, for the Alaska Railroad, for the operation of public buildings in and outside of the District of Columbia, which refers to public buildings for a number of activities, and funds for the General Accounting Office. Some of those items are for large amounts of money, but we have audited the appropriations very carefully.

You could arbitrarily cut off $100,000,000 here and there if you wished to do so. I do not believe you could find any logical or legitimate basis on which to do that, however. Of course, we could cut out this $175,000,000 for the civil-service retirement fund, but even with putting that amount of money in the fund we are still way behind what the Government owes the fund actuarially. So I just point out that while these items are large sums of money they do not offer very much opportunity to those of us who would like to make a drastic curtailment.

The other larger items in the bill which constitute 87.7 percent are such items as the Bureau of the Budget, the Civil Service Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Power Commission, the Public Roads Administration—which is devoting all of its activities now to strategic highways, war access roads, and roads that are approved by the Army and Navy departments—the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, the Maritime Commission, which has in this bill $1,289,000,000 for building ships, and the Veterans' Administration, which has nearly $900,000,000 in this bill. So we have here a bill covering more or less old-line agencies which are on a wartime basis and which account for practically 95 percent of this bill. However, we have gone through the bill carefully and have made cuts in the bill, some of which are drastic to the point, perhaps, of leaving out an entire agency, such as was done in the case of the National Resources Planning Board. We have also made cuts in the Civil Service Commission and other agencies where we thought funds could be cut after a careful analysis.

The bill is $6,448,206 below the Budget estimate, so those are cuts we have made that we think can be justified. I will insert the statement I have referred to at this point:

|---|---|
| Appropriations provided in the bill specifically earmarked for war purposes or on account of war: | |
| Civil Service Commission | $10,000,000 |
| Federal Communications Commission | 5,590,314 |
| Federal Power Commission | 519,255 |
| Public Roads Administration | 88,000,000 |
| Interstate Commerce Commission | 299,000 |
| National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics | 19,454,500 |
| United States Maritime Commission | 1,289,780,000 |
| Veterans' Administration | 887,017,000 |
| Total | 2,301,485,069 |
| Total percent | 87.7 |
| In addition, other items not specifically earmarked bring the total for war purposes up to 92 percent. | |
| Other items or parts of items which cannot be reduced are as follows: | |
| Salary of the President | $75,000 |
| Civil-service retirement and disability fund | 175,104,000 |
| Canal Zone retirement and disability fund | 1,177,000 |
| Alaska Railroad retirement and disability fund | 175,000 |
| Operation and maintenance of public buildings in and outside District of Columbia due to war program | 16,215,600 |
| General Accounting Office (65 percent due to war) | 17,168,650 |
| Total, additional items which cannot be reduced | 209,915,250 |
| Add items specifically provided for war | 2,301,485,069 |
| Grand total (95 percent of bill) | 2,511,400,319 |
| Total of bill | 2,621,104,379 |
| Less items which cannot be reduced | 2,511,400,319 |
| Total, items in bill which could be reduced | 109,704,060 |
| Reduction made by committee | 6,448,206 |
| Total of items considered which could be reduced | 116,152,266 |
| Percentage of reduction in items available | 5.5 |

I want to say this before I refer to some of the individual agencies in the bill. I think the House and the country may feel that we are entering upon a more or less new era in our method and manner of making appropriations. Some of us have fought for years for the reforms we are now putting into effect. It is fair to say that perhaps in other years when appropriations were not nearly so large and not nearly so complicated the Committee on Appropriations would naturally have more time individually and collectively to go into these things carefully item by item, but with a seven- or eight- or ten-billion-dollar budget for ordinary purposes and nearly $100,000,000,000 for war purposes, the time just does not exist in 24-hour days for any committee or the personnel of any committee to make the careful analyses and study of individual items that we think should be made. Therefore, we have set up some machinery in the Committee on Appropriations.

Before I discuss that, however, I want to state that I think it is a splendid thing that we have set up a subcommittee, and a very fine subcommittee, to go into this very complicated and very troublesome matter of dealing with personnel who are charged with being disloyal and subversive. I think we are approaching that in a judicial and a legislative manner. We have a splendid subcommittee that is going into those charges carefully and will make recommendations to this House. It will be for the House then to accept or reject the recommendations of that committee. However, when we come upon the floor of the House again, I am happy to say we will not be in the position we were a few days ago when all sorts of charges were hurled around the Chamber. We knew nothing about them; we had no carefully prepared record to go on, and we were put in the position of either voting against some man we did not know anything about or putting a vote on the record that might look as if we were condoning some person unfit to serve the Government. Hereafter we will have the carefully considered report of a committee as a basis for our action.

Returning to my reference to the need for study and analysis of individual items, the Committee on Appropriations is taking on a special staff of experts. We are going to draw them from some of the departments, men who are carefully trained in government procedure, and who will be taken off the pay rolls of the departments from which they are drawn and placed on the pay roll of the House of Representatives.

They will be our agents, and not the agents of a department. They will be under the supervision of highly trained men from one of the investigative departments of the Government and it will be their duty under the instructions of the Appropriations Committee to make surveys and audits and investigations of establishments and departments where we think information can be gotten that will be helpful to the committee. For instance, with this rapidly expanding Government that we have, engaged as it is in global war, raising an army not just for America, but for the world, raising a navy not for one ocean but for all the oceans of the world, suddenly faced with the duty of supplying not only that army and that navy, but the other nations of the earth who are our allies, it is an economic and commercial proposition that staggers the imagination. We find ourselves confronted with a civil pay roll of staggering sums. Two and a half or three million people are on the civil-service rolls in a civilian status in addition to the armed forces. If we begin to consider the matter by comparison, of course, we are shocked. We will say that in the World War we had so and so, and now we have so and so. Gentlemen, that does not mean anything. There is no basis whatever whereby you can reach any conclusion that is worth anything to you by considering what we are trying to do in this war and comparing it with what we did in the last war. It just does not make sense. You have got to go at it in a different way. We want these experts to go into some of these departments, not particularly the agencies in this bill because we do not have the so-called war agencies in the independent offices bill.

The places where I think there is overstaffing is in some of these departments that have grown up quickly, the so-called mushroom agencies. We will send trained personnel into those departments to make careful audit and check and bring back to the Appropriations Committee definite, authentic information that we can rely on, so that we can tell whether they have too many or too few. Also, if some other agencies need personnel, instead of employing new people, we can go into one of these overstaffed agencies, and take the oversupply there and put them into another place where they are needed.

In addition to the matter of personnel, there is the item of travel. If you go through all of these appropriation bills you will see that item rise into a colossal sum, and of course travel is an important item with all of these agencies, and with the war scattered all over the United States and in foreign countries, it is even difficult for the bureau or the agency itself to keep track of it. We want to know something definite about that. Also, we want a check made of long-distance telephone calls, and also to determine to what extent those calls are made and to what extent they can be substituted by air mail and telegraph. If we are successful in doing what I think we can do, I believe when we come here a little later with appropriation bills we will be better prepared to say to the House and to the country that we know we have culled out of here everything that can be taken out of this bill.

In addition to that, another field of operation for these experts will be in the matter of field offices. I am sure it is the experience of every Congressman, especially if he lives in a community of any size, that he is impressed by the number of field offices in his community. They are there by the score. There is no question that these field offices, regional offices and State offices is another very fertile field for investigation. We believe our trained investigators and auditors can go into that field and come back to the Appropriations Committee and to the Congress with helpful and constructive suggestions.

The independent offices appropriations subcommittee, if I may say without being too immodest, has, down through the years, been a pioneer in the field of trying to hold down expenditures and in the unnecessary growth of Government agencies. I remember a good many years ago when I first went on this committee as the newest member and a minority member that our late distinguished lamented friend, Mr. Will Wood, of Indiana, was the chairman of the full Appropriations Committee, and that our late friend from New Hampshire, Mr. Wason, was the chairman of the subcommittee having in charge the independent offices appropriations bill. We set about then to try to do the same things we are doing now. I remember one agency we went into, the old Shipping Board—and gentlemen, let me say that overstaffing and overpaying is not a product of any one particular administration. It has always been in the Government and I can say that somewhat in defense of the administration at the present time.

We had in the independent offices appropriation bill then a bill where salaries were paid as high as $10,000, $15,000, $18,000, and $35,000—products left over, stuff from the World War. Many of you perhaps will remember when the Chairman of the old Shipping Board received $35,000 a year, when the manager was paid $18,000 a year, and the general counsel $15,000. Some of you may remember the old Farm Board that some of us were instrumental in liquidating. The general counsel for the old Farm Board received $20,000 a year, and if I remember correctly one gentleman who is now on the Supreme Court of the United States was general counsel for another agency receiving $20,000 a year and his feelings were much hurt when the independent offices appropriations bill subcommittee put him back to $10,000. We are not paying any salaries of that kind now in the Government service. And now I am going to venture where angels fear to tread.

I am going to say a kind word for some men who are perhaps thoughtlessly placed in the category of bureaucrats. That is a term that we handle very loosely sometimes. We speak of a bureaucrat and immediately attending what we say, is a great deal of odium. We throw it out in blanket form and it envelops everybody in the Government service. I want to say to you there are men in the Government service who do not reflect a lot of credit on it. There are heads of departments who are not good administrators; who think more about playing politics than they do about serving the United States Government. There are some of them who think perhaps more about building up a large mushroom agency with a lot of political power than they do about the job that Congress has given them to do. But do not overlook the fact, if you please, that there are in the Government service today, in the bureaus and departments, men of high integrity, outstanding administrative ability, who are working for the United States Government at an infinitesimal part of what they would be paid if they were working for private industry. I could mention many of them.

Admiral Land, head of the United States Maritime Commission, with all of the hot spots he has had to sit on in this great shipbuilding program, and having made, as he will admit, some mistakes and blunders, is performing a service, and has performed a service in this war effort second to no man who wears the uniform. If he were employed by private industry the salary he could secure would make the small amount of money we are paying him seem infinitesimal.

Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, handling in late years almost a billion dollars a year, has done an administrative job that cannot be excelled in the Government service. The finger of suspicion has never been pointed to the great Veterans' Administration since Gen. Frank T. Hines has administered its affairs.

So I might go on down the line. You might go into the Army and the Navy. In a year and a half we have not performed the industrial miracle that we performed in this country; we have not raised a great army and a great navy and put them in the field; we have not built a great air force of over a million men with bureaucrats and crackpots. There have been some leaders and men of administrative ability, men who are devoting their lives to the work they are doing. I know some of them who are about to be casualties of this war, just as much as men who dropped in battle on Guadalcanal or Buna or in some of these other places.

So let us not make the fatal blunder of pointing the finger at every bureau and every department, but let us rather be discriminating and try to pick out the men who are doing a good job, and when they do a good job, support them and stand behind them. That applies not only to the departmental heads, but it applies all the way down the line, even to the smaller paid employees.

Now, our Appropriations Committee hopes that with this new machinery we are setting up we will be able to bring you much more definite and specific data than we have been able to bring you in the past.

I want to talk a little now, if I may, about some of the items in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

If you care to turn to the report, which is available, you will find on page 4 a statement of the general provisions which are carried in the bill. In some of these instances we have in the past carried certain specific authorizations, limitations, and restrictions in different departments. It has been thought best by the Budget, and the committee thinks it is best, to carry certain general provisions which will apply to all of the departments. You will find them set out in this paragraph at the bottom of page 4.

For instance, there is a general provision authorizing the use of travel funds for expenses of travel from one official station to another. That is particularly necessary because of our decentralization program.

Authorizing the use of funds for the transportation of household goods and effects of employees. We have found that in moving so many agencies out of Washington to other places it has only been fair to take some account of the expense to which employees were put in moving their household goods.

Section 202 relating to the purchase and operation of Government passenger-carrying vehicles.

Section 203 authorizing funds derived from the sale of old cars to be applied as part payment toward the purchase of new cars.

Section 204, authorizing purchases in amounts of $100 or less without advertising under section 3709 of the act requiring competitive bids.

Section 205 prohibits the use of funds to pay the salary of persons not citizens of the United States, with certain exceptions.

Section 206, relating to the designation of officers or employees to administer oaths.

So much for the general provisions.

We have approved a total of $2,712,000 for the Bureau of the Budget. This is an actual increase of $452,000 over the current appropriation. Of this increase, $246,500 is required to carry for a full year personnel and expenses now provided on a part-year basis. The remainder of the increase, $205,500, will provide initial funds for the establishment of a field service. This sum will be sufficient to establish four field offices and a small supervisory staff in Washington. We feel that this staff will permit the Bureau to secure information at first hand which would not otherwise be available and that it will increase the effective and efficient service the Bureau is now performing.

I would like to speak a minute about the Civil Service Commission. The Civil Service Commission has had a colossal job to perform. Some of us have found things to criticize about it, and I am sure some of that criticism has been justified. But they have had a large job to perform, especially when we have made an effort, in building up these war agencies, to try as far as possible to have them taken from the civil-service rolls, in order to prevent, as far as we could prevent it, the turning of those agencies into purely political patronage. They have had a hard job, and their job is not lightening very much on account of the tremendous turn-over in these departments. This data shows that on an annual basis the placements in 1944 will be about one and one-half million; turnover in the Government work; people taken out, going into the armed services, moving from one agency to the other on account of being more valuable to one agency than the one in which they were working.

So they have asked for a large sum of money, and we have found that it would be possible to make some reduction in this activity, so we have reduced their regular fund appropriation by $581,600. That is a pretty heavy cut, but we think they can take it.

In their appropriation for war activities we have made a reduction of $1,426,552—another pretty heavy cut—but we think the Civil Service Commission has probably passed over the peak of its recruitment program and that it ought to be able now to revamp and revise its procedure in such way as to absorb certain of the cuts we have made.

The bill contains the total estimate as submitted in the Budget for the General Accounting Office, $26,413,645. This may appear to be a vast sum unless the tremendous task the General Accounting Office has to perform is taken into consideration. For instance, it includes funds for auditing lend-lease and emergency relief, in addition to all other governmental activities. It is estimated that during the fiscal year 1944 this Office will audit accounts and settle claims and do related work on expenditures amounting to $85,000,000,000, as compared to a total of $60,000,000,000 during the current fiscal year. The examination and audit of accounts unquestionably has a wholesome effect on the spending agencies, and savings from such auditing are far in excess of the appropriations made for that purpose.

Another place in the bill to which I should like to call your attention is one that shows quite a marked increase, and I think this is something the committee will be interested in. One of the very few items in which there is an increase in personnel is in the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. The Independent Offices Subcommittee has carried this item in its bill for many years and has been generous in appropriations for research and experimentation in the field of aeronautics. We were told in the hearings by Dr. Lewis, the Executive Director of the N. A. C. A. that they felt that the generosity and sympathetic understanding of the Congress in making adequate appropriations in the field of aeronautic research and experimentation could be credited with our present supremacy in the air in the world conflict. Let me say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the United States fliers in the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard, and the Marine Corps do not have to take their hats off or apologize to any group of fliers in the world.

Our planes, individually and collectively, coming now as they are into mass production, are just the last word in aeronautical perfection. This game of aeronautics however is one thing today and another thing tomorrow; it is a rapidly changing picture, and we are called upon to keep busy and keep working, especially in the field of research, and this is the reason we found it advisable—unanimously, I may say; I do not think there is a discordant note in the whole Appropriations Committee on this—to give the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics the funds they consider adequate to permit them to go ahead with their research and experimentation in this very necessary field of operations.

Another item to which I wish to direct attention is one in which we have made a pretty drastic reduction, the Securities and Exchange Commission. The Securities and Exchange Commission received a Budget recommendation of $4,798,000 for 1944, which is $862,000 less than we appropriated last year; and a cut of $750,000 in the estimates. Some of us think this sum should provide them with sufficient funds to carry on the normal functions of the Commission in this time of war.

Perhaps the chief item in the bill outside of the Veterans' Administration is the United States Maritime Commission. The Budget estimate is $1,289,780,000. This will be used to liquidate contracts heretofore entered into for ship construction. Let me say that the Deficiency Appropriation Subcommittee met this morning on an item from the Maritime Commission for a contract authorization of $5,250,000,000 and an appropriation of $4,000,000,000. These are large sums of money, but the funds carried in the independent offices bill which is presently before you, plus the funds which will shortly be before you in the deficiency bill are the funds which will be used by the Maritime Commission to take care of 2 programs: the programs inaugurated in 1942 of 2,242 ships, of which 554 have already been delivered and the remainder are under construction; and in addition to that a new program of 2,161 ships. This makes a total of something like 4,400 ships under the present program of the Maritime Commission, and the funds carried in this bill plus the funds which will shortly be in here in the deficiency bill will be used to pay for those vessels in progress payments as and when they are delivered from the shipways.

This gives us a very fine, high-powered, high-speed shipbuilding program which I think all of us readily recognize as being one of the most important places in the whole war effort. We are getting these vessels, as you perhaps know, at the rate of more than 100 a month; a little better than 3 vessels every time the sun sets slip down the ways into the water. These are the merchant-carrying vessels, not taking into account the small craft. This in itself is an industrial achievement which pays tribute not only to business management but to the workers of America. Every time the sun sets 3 vessels have slipped into the water to carry the cargoes of this country not only to its troops abroad but to the other nations to whom we are under obligation to assist. This does not indicate that we do not need more ships; we do, and, as Admiral Land said, this expanding effort that we are making is going to call for a maximum of all the shipbuilding resources this country can get; but so far as America is concerned we are on top of the submarine proposition, and with this shipbuilding effort that is now supported as it has always been supported by this Congress, I think we have every reason to look forward to an era where our commerce, our food, our weapons of war, our munitions, and our medicine and surgical supplies will have the necessary bottoms to carry them where they are needed in this great World War.

In his letter to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, inserted in the independent offices bill hearings, page 1179, the Director of the Budget has pointed out that certain language has been eliminated from various appropriation paragraphs as surplus and unnecessary. It is my understanding that this is the case in connection with appropriations for the Maritime Commission and that it is not intended to restrict the use of funds made available to the Commission in the pending bill because of such elimination. I have just received a memorandum from Admiral Land on this subject which I would like to insert at this point:

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION,
Washington, February 6, 1943.

Memorandum for Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, chairman, Subcommittee on Independent Offices, Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives:

The proposed appropriation language for the United States Maritime Commission for inclusion in the independent offices appropriation bill, 1944 (Budget for the fiscal year 1944, p. 104), has been greatly condensed and simplified in cooperation with the Bureau of the Budget. Several items formerly carried in the appropriations for the Maritime Commission (as well as for other agencies) have been eliminated as legally unnecessary or because they will be covered in general language in the Independent Offices or other appropriation bills.

In order to avoid any misunderstanding of the purpose of these changes and omissions and to avoid any possible contention that the omission of specific items not otherwise covered is intended to preclude expenditure of the appropriation for such use, it is suggested that the committee call attention to this situation in its report on the bill, or in any explanatory statement submitted to the House by the Member in charge of the bill during debate. It would avoid unfortunate misunderstanding or controversy if it were clearly indicated that the condensation and the improvement of the appropriation language with respect to the Maritime Commission, involving in some cases deletions of items formerly carried in the appropriation language, is not to be construed as a refusal or failure to make the appropriation available for any such items unless it otherwise clearly appears that the appropriation is not to be available for the item in question.

E. S. LAND, Chairman.

In connection with the Maritime Commission I would like to insert memoranda from the Commission dated February 12, 1943, and February 15, 1943, with reference to acquisition by the Commission of certain privately owned vessels in which the question of the so-called enhancement clause is involved:

FEBRUARY 12, 1943.

Within the last few months the Comptroller General has submitted to Congress three reports of alleged irregularities on the part of the Maritime Commission and rendered a decision pertaining to the meaning and application of the requisition authority contained in the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, challenging the interpretation placed on the statute by the War Shipping Administration.

The controversy over the requisition authority (which is the basis of two of the Comptroller's reports) involves the interpretation of the so-called enhancement clause, which was intended to prevent a repetition of the Government's experience with fantastic ship prices in the First World War.

The question in this controversy is not the objective, but how to attain it.

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives has conducted hearings on the transactions involved in the Comptroller's report on the Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. and the Waterman Steamship Corporation and has asked the Maritime Commission for its comment on the more recent report pertaining to the purchase of a vessel from the United States Lines, Inc.

The chairman of the committee has expressed his intention to conduct full hearings on the controversy relating to the requisition authority. It is anticipated that these hearings will get under way as soon as Judge BLAND is able to return to his office.

The facts with respect to all of the differences between the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration on the one hand, and the Comptroller General on the other, will therefore be fully developed by the House committee that is responsible for merchant marine legislation.

FEBRUARY 15, 1943.

1. The Waterman Steamship Corporation: Extensive hearings on the transactions involved in the Comptroller General's report have been held by the Merchant Marine Committee. Witnesses for the Waterman Steamship Corporation, representatives of the General Accounting Office, and the Chairman of the Maritime Commission were heard. The Merchant Marine Committee has not completed its examination of this record.

2. Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co.: Hearings were also conducted by the Merchant Marine Committee on the matters discussed in the Comptroller General's report. Representatives of the company, the Commission, and the General Accounting Office were heard. The Committee has issued no formal statement with respect to its conclusions.

3. South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation: Hearings were also conducted by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Truman committee of the Senate and reports issued by both committees. The Maritime Commission has taken steps to remedy the conditions that existed at the yard.

4. Requisition authority in section 902: The Chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee has announced his intention of examining fully into the differences of opinion between the Comptroller General and the War Shipping Administration as to the proper meaning and application of the requisition authority contained in section 902.

The decision rendered by the Comptroller General in November 1942 is not concerned with values payable for ships on which construction-differential subsidies have been paid. Such subsidized vessels have been acquired (for title or use) in accordance with the formula prescribed by section 802 of the 1936 act directing valuation upon the basis of the depreciation cost to the owner.

The fantastic prices paid for ships during the First World War are not to be paid again. There is no disagreement about that. The differences of opinion between the General Accounting Office and the War Shipping Administration turn upon questions of law. It is a matter upon which no lawyer would express an opinion without examining both contentions.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I reciprocate the sentiments of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. It is always a pleasure for the minority members of this subcommittee to work with the majority members. We appreciate the consideration accorded us at all times.

Mr. Chairman, the people demand the elimination of waste, of inefficiency, and of corruption. They demand that bureaucracy be curbed and that hypocrisy be terminated. They demand that Congress resume its full powers except insofar as their delegation is essential to the maximum war effort. They demand that loyalty throughout the Federal service be assured.

They key to all these things is congressional control over expenditures. That control was placed in the hands of the Congress by the founders of our Government and in the light of the world's experience. Its retention is vital. To surrender it is to substitute for action by the Congress action by the bureaucrat. This is one of the bitter lessons of the past 10 years.

The problem of reasserting proper control over expenditure is not an easy one. We are confronted by a whole series of Government corporations with a lending capacity of over $32,600,000,000 wholly outside of the Budget. We are confronted by the President's emergency funds and other blanket authorizations over which the Congress has no detailed control. We are confronted by a Bureau of the Budget which, in my judgment, has not to date obtained satisfactory results and which recently has been subjected to severe criticism. We are confronted by a tremendous ever-increasing force on the rolls of the Federal Government. We are confronted by the fact that many agencies fail to account to the General Accounting Office or challenge its jurisdiction.

These matters must be dealt with if we are to control expenditure. Heretofore, in recent years those desiring control have been in the minority. Efforts to establish it have been swept aside. Today the situation is changed. The control by the Congress can and must be reestablished. Every cent required for victory must be made available. Every cent requested for nonessentials must be eliminated.

Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a total in new appropriations of over $2,621,000,000. In addition it carries reappropriations of over $62,885,000; authorizations for expenditure out of funds otherwise available of over $31,250,000; and permanent appropriations of over $1,261,700,000, a grand total of about $4,000,000,000.

Do not be deceived by the Budget statement indicating that this bill carries $212,000,000 less than provided for the same agencies in the current fiscal year. The fact is that on a comparable basis there is an increase reflected of over $643,700,000. The apparent decrease is brought about only by taking as reductions certain items which do not appear in this bill at all, but which may very likely appear in subsequent bills and by also taking as a reduction $136,100,000 in respect to the T. V. A. when we are in fact called upon to make available out of reappropriations the sum of $62,858,000.

It is true that the greater part of the increase referred to is reflected in a few items; in the civil-service retirement fund item, in the N. A. C. A. item, in the Public Roads item, in the Maritime Commission item, and in the Veterans' Administration item. It is also true that your committee has made numerous reductions. These restrictions, however, when added together give a total of only $6,448,000, which is a reduction on a percentage basis of something like one-quarter of 1 percent of the total carried in this bill, or if you put it on the basis suggested by the chairman and apply the percentage only to that portion of the total which the Budget classifies as for nonwar purposes, it is a reduction of about 3½ percent.

Personally I do not believe that such a reduction is going to be satisfactory to the people generally, faced as they are by increased costs of living, by income tax, Victory taxes, forced savings, and a desire to subscribe to War bonds. I hope that further reductions will be possible before this bill is enacted into law.

The bill covers a tremendous territory. The time available makes it impossible to go into detail. All that can be done is to refer to certain of the more important items and certain of the more important information developed in connection with their consideration.

EMERGENCY FUNDS FOR THE PRESIDENT

First, I want to say a word about the emergency funds for the President, because while there are no such funds carried in this bill, there is a complete picture of their use to date embodied in the hearings and because requests for further funds will no doubt be made during the course of the present session of Congress.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. In connection with the request for additional funds, is it not true that we shall have a very large request for increases in pay-roll funds? These estimates are confined simply to the salaries without application of the increases involved in the pay-increase bill?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman is entirely correct.

The record shows that there have been made available as emergency funds for the President something over $631,500,000. Of this total, something over $392,000,000 has been available for expenditure in the current fiscal year and as of the time of the hearing about $101,000,000 had yet to be allocated and was therefore available during the first 6 months of the calendar year 1943.

For what purpose were these funds made available? They were made available as the name indicates, for emergency purposes. They were made available for purposes either confidential in character or so urgent in character as to require making funds available without taking the time to come to the Congress.

How have these funds in fact been spent? If you will look at the tables commencing on page 1181 of the hearings, you will see the entire picture.

Item after item in the list of allocations fails to meet either test I have just referred to. Item after item fails to qualify as emergency expenditure. Item after item has been expended which should not have been expended until brought to the Congress for consideration and approval.

The emergency fund, Mr. Chairman, has been misused. It has been used in a manner to deprive the Congress of its proper control over expenditures. It has been misused despite frequent warnings both on the floor of this House and in committee to the representatives of the Bureau of the Budget. In my judgment, no further funds should be made available on the present basis.

THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

A word as to the Bureau of the Budget. There is no agency in the Government in a position to contribute more to the proper control over expenditure than the Bureau of the Budget. In my judgment, the results obtained by this agency to date have not been satisfactory. The recent Budget has been severely criticized as being misleading, as confusing war expenditure with nonwar expenditure, and as failing to give all the facts.

I do not know that it is true, but during the past year on three separate occasions persons who have appeared before the Budget Bureau have given it as their opinion that the Budget Bureau has acted more as counsel for the appropriation desired by the agency in question than as the hard-boiled judge of the merits of the appropriation.

The primary responsibility of the Budget Bureau is, of course, to the Chief Executive and not to the Congress. It may be that an inquiry by the Congress is desirable to ascertain why we have not been obtaining better results.

I call attention in passing to the fact that the request of this agency for 1944 is just about 300 percent in excess of the appropriation for 1941; that the average salary runs as high as $3,500; that the work to which the Bureau has devoted itself of late includes work on the problem of manpower; work in developing a program for the Food Administration; work in planning for the handling of insurance premiums by the Veterans' Administration and the War Department; work in the field of taxation, rationing, prices, wages, credit, subsidies, and the like, and work in the field of Federal-State fiscal relationships, all of which work seems to me in large measure outside the normal scope of operations of the Bureau, presenting the question if the request of that agency may not well be reduced.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

The Civil Service Commission testimony will be found at page 820 of the hearings. The recommendation of your committee for the Commission, exclusive of retirement funds, amounts to about $15,145,000 as compared with $17,159,000 for the current year.

The record indicates that even at this time there is a net addition each month to the rolls of the Federal Government of as much as 100,000 employes; that we had or the pay rolls as of November 30 last about 2,750,000 employees; and that we may anticipate a total as of the end of the fiscal year of over 3,000,000 employees, a total about three times the size of the total on the Federal pay rolls on November 11, 1918, at the end of World War No. 1.

The following table tells the story:

There is abundant testimony that agency after agency is over-staffed to the point of inefficiency and impaired morale, at a time when the Nation is crying for manpower for the war effort. Senator BYRD, Chairman of the Joint Committee on Nonessential Expenditures, in an address in Boston recently gave it as his "firm and conscientious belief" that "one-third of those now engaged in clerical work could be dismissed to the advantage of the service and for the promotion of the war effort."

The President in a memorandum of December 12, referring to the 48-hour week, stated:

> Obviously, this will permit reduction in personnel in some agencies and eliminate the necessity of filling vacancies in others.

Again, in his Budget message the President said:

> Pay increases should be met largely by reducing the total number of employees proportionate to the increase in the workweek.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Does the gentleman recall any agency which offered to take care of the pay increases in that way?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I recall the Interstate Commerce Commission's stating that certain vacancies had not been filled in the current year and that they hoped to be able to get along without filling them in the next year, but I think the answer, generally speaking, to the question raised by the gentleman from South Dakota is in the negative.

Mr. CASE. In other words, these agencies are not going to follow the recommendation of the President?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I see little evidence of plans to that effect in the testimony before our committee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman expect to come to a discussion of the appropriation made for the Federal Communications Commission?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am going to come to that a little later, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. In connection with the manpower problem, will the gentleman agree with me that one of the very serious factors in that problem is the waste of manpower, particularly in our Government agencies?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I agree entirely with the gentleman. That is the point I am trying to emphasize in this connection. It has been said that "waste of manpower is a crime in peace and a greater crime in war." I think the Ramspeck investigating committee has a tremendous responsibility and a tremendous opportunity to contribute to economy, efficiency, and the manpower needs of the country.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

The General Accounting Office testimony will be found at page 257 of the hearings. This, of course, is another agency which is in a position to contribute tremendously to the control of expenditure. The request of $26,413,000 compares with the appropriation for the current year of about $20,000,000. I believe, however, that the increase is justified. There is an enormous increase in the work confronting this agency. It is estimated that there will be $85,000,000,000 of expenditures to be audited in the fiscal year 1944, and that vouchers will be three times the number of those audited in 1942 and twice those audited in 1943. If this amount is allowed, the expense of auditing will amount to only approximately 32 cents per thousand dollars.

I call your attention to the fact that the record indicates that some 32 agencies of Government fail to account to the General Accounting Office today; that nine others account, but account on a partial basis only; that relations with the Commodity Credit Corporation and with the Navy Department are unsatisfactory; and as I understand it several agencies of this Government challenge the jurisdiction of the Comptroller General.

EXHIBIT 2

AGENCIES INCLUDING CORPORATIONS WHICH DO NOT RENDER ACCOUNTS, INCLUDING SOME WHICH ARE EXEMPT BY LAW FROM RENDERING ACCOUNTS, TO THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

1. American President Lines, Ltd. (U. S. Maritime Commission).

3. Dairy Products Marketing Association, Inc.
4. Defense Homes Corporation.
5. Defense Plant Corporation.
6. Defense Supplies Corporation.
7. Disaster Loan Corporation.
8. District Banks for Cooperatives (12).
9. Federal Home Loan Banks (12).
10. Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.
11. Federal intermediate credit banks (12).
12. Federal land banks (12).
13. Federal National Mortgage Association.
14. Federal Reserve System (Federal Reserve Board).
15. Federal savings and loan associations.
16. State-chartered savings and loan associations (Home Owners' Loan Corporation).
17. Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation.
18. Inland Waterways Corporation.
19. Metals Reserve Company.
20. Panama Railroad Company.
21. Production credit corporations (12).
22. Production credit associations.
23. Reconstruction Finance Corporation.
24. Rubber Reserve Company.
25. The RFC Mortgage Company.
26. The Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.
27. United States Spruce Production Corporation.
28. War Finance Corporation.
29. Alaska Rural Rehabilitation Corporation.
30. Smaller War Plants Corporation.
31. United States Commercial Company.
32. War Damage Corporation.

CERTAIN AGENCIES INCLUDING CORPORATIONS WHICH RENDER ONLY PARTIAL ACCOUNTS TO THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE, OR ACCOUNTS WHICH ARE NOT ENTIRELY IN ACCORDANCE WITH PRESCRIBED PROCEDURES

1. Commodity Credit Corporation.
2. District of Columbia.
3. Electric Home and Farm Authority (in liquidation).
4. Export-Import Bank of Washington.
5. Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.
6. Federal Home Loan Bank Administration.
7. Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.
8. Surplus Marketing Administration.
9. Virgin Islands Company.

Steps must be taken to remedy this situation. Control over expenditures is impossible in the absence of proper accounting.

I call attention also to three statements on behalf of the agency, the first showing unvouchered expenditures, the second showing the list of pending investigations of the United States Maritime Commission, and the War Shipping Administration matters, the third, indicating that over $7,000,000 of illegally spent W. P. A. money down in Louisiana discovered in the course of the investigation of the W. P. A. several years ago, is yet to be allowed.

ACQUISITIONS OF TITLE TO AND CHARTERS OF VESSELS FOR WAR EMERGENCY PURPOSES, AND WAR-RISK INSURANCE EFFECTED ON VESSELS CHARTERED FOR SUCH USE

Investigations in connection with the acquisition, charter, and insurance of vessels by the United States Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration are under way at present, but no definite conclusions have been reached. The transactions now under investigation involve the following steamship owners:

Vessel acquisitions: American President Lines, United States Lines, American Mail Line, Baltimore Mail Steamship Co., Southern Pacific Co. (Morgan Line), Matson Navigation Co., New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Co.

Vessel charters and war-risk insurance: Hawaiian Steamship Co., American Export Lines, American Foreign Steamship Co., American President Lines, Atlas Trading Corporation, Boyd, Wier & Sewell, Inc., Calmar Steamship Corporation, Isthmian Steamship Co.; Lykes Bros. Steamship Corporation, Luckenbach Steamship Co., Inc., Matson Navigation Co., McCormack Steamship Co., States Steamship Co., Pacific Atlantic Steamship Co., Norwegian Shipping & Trade Mission, Shepard Steamship Co., Union Sulphur Co., United States Lines Co., Waterman Steamship Agency, Ltd., Weyerhaeuser Steamship Co.

The Federal communications testimony appears on page 1212 of the hearings. The recommendation of your committee is $7,609,000, as compared with the appropriations for the current year of $7,386,000. The recommendation reflects a reduction in the Budget estimate of over $479,000.

It is difficult to escape the conviction that there is a good deal of duplication of effort between the F. C. C. on the one hand and the Army and the Navy on the other. The Army, I understand, has thousands of people in its radio intelligence companies. The Navy also has its own set-up. The F. C. C. admits that both services advised at one time that they did not require what the F. C. C. was furnishing them. The Bureau of the Budget, in its testimony, recognizes the conflict.

This agency shows a tremendous number of promotions in the past year or so, 1,806, to be exact, at an increase of $145,100. Details were furnished the committee with reference to the Legal Division and the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service. I shall not encumber the RECORD with those details. I may say in passing, however, that the number of promotions was not only enormous, but that in many instances the same individual has been given more than one promotion in the same year. Among other examples is one individual receiving $3,400 increase, or 105 percent, within a period of 8 months, another receiving $1,400, or a 75-percent increase, in 6 months, and another receiving $2,200, a 110-percent increase, in 16 months. There are many other examples that I could cite.

The record also indicates a request by this agency for deferments from the draft to the number of 442. Of this number, there have been granted 391, in respect to which Chairman Fly expresses the hope that the deferments may be for the duration. All of these deferments may, in fact, be justified. It may be stated, however, that neither the description of the positions held, nor the salaries paid, nor the fact that many of them joined the force after Pearl Harbor, lends force to this conclusion in the first instance.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. O'HARA. With reference to the deferments of this agency, does the gentleman mean deferments from going into the armed forces?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COX. It is common gossip all over town that there is a higher percentage of draft dodgers in the Communications Commission than in any other department of the Government. If the gentleman will indulge me further, I am very much surprised to note the success of Mr. Fly in obtaining this large appropriation carried in this item. Apparently he is the witness that appeared in behalf of the Commission, on whose testimony the committee bases its finding. The Commission is divided, and that division differing with Mr. Fly says that the essential work of the Commission can be carried on and carried on effectively with a large reduction of personnel and a large reduction in appropriations. To be exact, it is contended by those in the know that with $2,000,000 the work of the Commission can be carried on. Mr. Fly, who heads the Commission, had no knowledge of communications, other than experience that he obtained as a switchboard operator before he was placed in the chairmanship. At the present time we find the Army and the Navy subordinated to him, and if the committee had found it possible to have consulted the Army and the Navy, disclosures would have been made to it that Mr. Fly is a terrible handicap to them in his effort to dominate completely the secret communications of the Army and the Navy.

Others in the know have said to me that the larger part of the appropriations that are made for this Commission are wasted; that you might as well shovel the money out of the window as to expend it in the manner in which the Commission does expend it. In view of the investigation that is going on, the item ought to be stricken from the bill altogether, and later the Congress will be able to make an appropriation that is proper.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I was about to answer the gentleman by saying that the suggestion he makes was in fact made in the subcommittee, to the effect that inasmuch as an investigation has been authorized by the House to go into the activities of this Commission, it might be just as well to delete this item wholly and allow it to be considered later as a deficiency item. The money, of course, will not be required until the first of the fiscal year, July 1.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman that the circumstance demands that the entire item be deleted until later on.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The same logic would apply to the War Production Board, and to the Army or the Navy, and to any other agency of the Government that is under fire by anybody. That is, put them out of business, convict them, and then afterward, if they are able to prove that they are innocent, give them enough money to carry on. I submit right here in the midst of the colloquy between my two friends that that is not a logical approach to the problem. I feel confident that the investigation of the Federal Communications Commission in the able hands of my friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] will be thoroughgoing.

We may rest assured that long before July 1, when this bill will become law, those gentlemen will apprise Congress of everything they can find that would justify putting the Federal Communications and Mr. Fly out of business. In the meantime it is an agency that Congress has set up to do business and has delegated to it important war functions. The monitoring work of the Federal Communications Commission is very important. However we may feel about individuals in it, let no Member of this House be under any misapprehension that they are performing a very vital and critical service in the war effort. Somebody has to perform that service.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. May I say to the gentleman from Virginia that I certainly do not want to place myself in the position of failing to accord this agency every consideration to which it is entitled. It does not seem to me, however, that the deletion of this item has anything to do with the findings which may be made in the course of the investigation. Of course, the Commission must have the money that is necessary on July 1, but it does not need any part of these funds until that time.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not recall any evidence before our subcommittee that the Federal Communications Commission was a handicap to either the Army or the Navy. Does the gentleman recall any such testimony?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] interrogated the representatives of the agency along that line, and I think substantiated the statement I have made.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am referring to the statement contained in a question asked the gentleman as to whether or not they were a handicap to both the Army and the Navy.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. A duplication.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. "Handicap" was the word used.

Mr. COX. I used the word "handicap" and I used it advisedly, and if the gentleman will take the pains and manifest sufficient concern in the public interest to call upon the Army and the Navy he will find that the statement is justified.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] that as soon as I can get to a telephone I shall certainly make inquiry of the responsible heads of the Army and the Navy, and if any of those gentlemen say that the Federal Communications Commission is a detriment to the war effort, I will take advantage of my seniority in the proceedings to move to delete the item myself. Now will the gentleman join me in saying that if the Army and the Navy say they are performing a useful war service, he will give them a chance to have a fair trial before he executes them?

Mr. COX. I am not trying to execute anybody.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just take their money away from them?

Mr. COX. No; I am not. I am insisting that in view of existing circumstances the appropriation should not be made available at the time. I can tell the gentleman something that would interest him.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. DWORSHAK. In spite of the demands throughout the country for economy, it would appear that most of these agencies are attempting to expand their functions under the guise of defense and war activities. In that respect, will the gentleman explain the item of $206,160 for a War Problems Division under the Law Department, and explain why that is being created? Is there not some existing agency which already has jurisdiction over such activities?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That matter was given consideration by the committee in reducing the request $479,000 below the budget.

I shall not dwell further upon this item, in view of the fact that an investigating committee has been set up to consider the activities of this Commission in detail.

I may mention in passing, however, first, that the record indicates continued approval of the transfer of stations or control of stations for considerations far in excess of the value of the physical assets transferred, with all the danger we have seen in other fields in the capitalization of Government franchises.

Second, that the serious charges said to have been made in connection with former Commissioner Pickard and others have apparently been whitewashed to the satisfaction of the Commission and the Department of Justice in the absence of further evidence.

Third, that 3 of those included in the list of 38 recently published by the Dies committee are to be found on the pay rolls of this agency.

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

I want to say a word about the Federal Works Agency and the testimony appearing at page 347 of the hearings. This Agency consists of the Office of the Administrator, and under his general supervision the Public Buildings Administration, the Public Roads Administration, the Public Works Administration, and the Work Projects Administration. The over-all request made is for $168,666,000, as compared with the current appropriation of $140,496,000, most of the increase being due to road construction.

What I want to emphasize to the committee is the fact that W. P. A. is folding up. We are assured it will be put out of its misery before June 30, with the recapture of at least $80,000,000 already appropriated.

P. W. A. is also folding up. Only $27,000 of reappropriations is requested, and we are assured that P. W. A. will be wound up in the course of the fiscal year 1944.

This leaves therefore for supervision by the Administrator only the Public Buildings Administration and the Public Roads Administration, and a little supervision in connection with war public works. The Agency requested $386,000, as compared with $350,000 in the current year. This figure added to $245,000 coming from constituent agencies would make available almost $632,000, as compared with $594,000 in the present year.

There are 15 people on the pay rolls drawing salaries between $6,400 and $12,000. There are 192 on the rolls, all told, with an average salary of $3,200.

The increase in this appropriation seems entirely without justification, in view of the decrease in the over-all work, and I am inclined to think that the committee recommendation in this instance can and should be further reduced.

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY

The testimony of the National Housing Agency, appears at page 931 of the hearings. The Agency requests authorizations totaling $31,250,000 compared with $42,523,000 for the current year; and appropriations for annual contributions amounting to $11,350,000 as compared with $13,000,000 in the current fiscal year.

This Agency reflects an attempt to bring order out of chaos in the housing field. You will recall that a year ago there were some 16 different agencies or units operating in the field of defense housing. The situation was so chaotic that even today the Bureau of the Budget cannot furnish the number of employees or the dollars spent by the predecessor organizations. All housing is supposed to be under this set-up now except Army and Navy construction on military and naval reservations and the Farm Security Agency's rural program which for some reason has not been brought under the Agency.

The N. H. A. consists of the office of an administrator and three principal subdivisions.

The first subdivision is the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, including the Home Loan Bank Board organization with 3,800 members and assets of $5,600,000,000; the Federal Loan Insurance Corporation with 2,300 institutions and assets of $3,500,000,000; and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation with 800,000 accounts aggregating $1,600,000,000.

The second subdivision is the Federal Housing Administration which has issued insurance aggregating $6,300,000,000, a total of $3,800,000,000 being outstanding.

The third subdivision is the Federal Public Housing Administration which is the catch-all for the various constructing agencies I have referred to and which has an over-all building program of about $5,778,000,000, of which $3,200,000,000 is private housing and the rest public housing.

I call attention to the fact that the administrator plans to maintain five regional offices during the next fiscal year at a cost of $665,575 despite the fact that there are four other sets of field offices in this agency. If this item cannot be reached in this bill it seems to me that it should be eliminated in the consideration of other housing appropriations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. Chairman, before closing I want to refer to two other agencies or more if time permits. The first is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation which is a part of the national housing agency just referred to.

The power of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to refinance distressed home mortgages terminated way back on June 12, 1936. Its functions today are those of loan servicing and property management. Of the million loans made, aggregating about $3,000,000,000, 251,000 have been extended for periods of from 15 to 25 years. Today there are outstanding something like 800,000 loans aggregating $1,675,000,000. There are on hand 41,629 pieces of property.

I call attention to this fact in respect to property sold: On property with a book value of $738,000,000 Uncle Sam has taken a loss to date amounting to $227,000,000. There are still on hand properties with a book value of some $266,000,000 which, if sold with similar success would probably net Uncle Sam a further loss of not less than eighty million dollars.

We have put up something over $250,000,000 for the administrative expenditures for this agency. We are asked to put up $10,000,000 more for the fiscal year of 1944, and we are assured by Mr. Fahey that this sum of $10,000,000 is, in his opinion, bedrock for the agency.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the time has come to liquidate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I understand that the private mortgage institutions of this country stand ready to take over the assets of the Corporation. I believe that the loss Uncle Sam will sustain will be greater the longer we put it off. I am fearful that if we do not take some step to bring about liquidation at this time we shall find 25 years from now that this Corporation, like the War Housing Corporation and the War Finance Corporation today, will still have to be liquidated.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. In just a minute.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has a carefully prepared amendment in this connection. I believe he is on sound ground, and I hope the House will give him its support.

Only 2 days ago I received a letter from a cooperative bank, not in my district but from the State of Massachusetts, which expresses my ideas in this connection so largely that for the benefit of the House I shall insert it in the RECORD at this point:

EXHIBIT 5

GRAFTON COOPERATIVE BANK,
Grafton, Mass., February 8, 1943.

Hon. RICHARD B. WIGGLESWORTH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I understand the House subcommittee, of which you are a member, is considering appropriation requests for the several corporations of the Government of which one is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

I trust in considering the appropriation for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation that you consider the possibility of the Corporation closing out its business according to a bill coming before the House, known as H. R. 1283. It would seem to me very appropriate at this time to close out the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for the following reasons:

1. There are ample funds in the hands of mortgage institutions seeking investment in mortgages and the Corporation can liquidate by the sale of its mortgages and other assets at this time in a good market and upon the most favorable basis.

2. Mortgage institutions will negotiate for and purchase the mortgages and home purchase contracts at this time with the greatest confidence because current payments are at their highest level and real estate values are stable and increasing. These things were not true 5 years ago and are not likely to be true in the future when mortgage institutions can secure an outlet for their funds by the making of good mortgages on new homes.

3. The sale of such assets at this time will enable the Corporation to retire its outstanding bonds which the Government has guaranteed and thereby relieve the Government credit of a large contingent liability.

4. The sale of these assets at this time will contribute to the solution of the manpower problem by releasing nearly 4,000 employees of the Corporation. Such sale will also release office space which is much needed in the war program.

5. Such sale will also release a substantial volume of typewriters, adding machines, and other office equipment which is needed in the war program. Existing mortgage institutions which are ready, willing, and able to buy such assets are confronted with decreasing mortgage portfolios, and can buy such assets and administer them without increasing their personnel, space, or equipment.

6. The Corporation is confronted with the necessity at some time of selling its assets in bulk or in blocks because the administration of the declining unpaid balances upon its mortgages will eventually be too expensive to be justifiable. The present mortgage market offiers the Corporation its best opportunity to sell at good prices and thereby avoid excessive losses. It is believed that the assets of the Corporation can be sold at this time for an amount approximating its obligations. If it proceeds to a slow liquidation over a total of 25 to 30 years from its organization it is evident that the losses will be much greater.

7. The Congress expressed its intention as to the prompt liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation when its purposes were accomplished in section 5 (k) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, by providing: "The Board shall proceed to liquidate the Corporation when its purposes have been accomplished and shall pay any surplus or accumulated funds into the Treasury of the United States." The purposes of the Corporation were long since accomplished. It has made no loans since 1936. No steps have been taken toward its liquidation as contemplated by law.

I trust that you and your committee will arrange to reduce the appropriation of this Corporation sufficient so that it will be necessary to liquidate this Corporation within the shortest possible time and in that way avoid carrying on this department of Government and save taxes to the people of this country. I do not believe that this Government should be in business. To my mind it is the Government's business to make laws governing business.

I trust you will give your full support to this idea.

Yours very truly,
H. A. SIMMONS, Treasurer.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to my genial colleague from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Before the subcommittee it was stated that if we liquidate now close to 300,000 people will lose their homes, that it will cost the taxpayers of this country between four and five hundreds of millions of dollars, and at the same time the very building and loan associations that we bailed out the gentleman wants to rescue now and turn over to them 50 percent. The other 50 percent who are slightly in arrears will lose their homes. Does the gentleman consider this to be the proper thing to do at this time? There is no question but what they will lose their homes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Just to show how much sound and fury there really is in that contention, let me say that when Mr. Fahey testified before the committee, his testimony was that altogether—if you will examine the table—93.6 percent of all these home loans are current to within 3 months. That would leave only 6½ percent of the total number of vendee homes, namely, 811,000. There would be 48,000 in arrears. The country is so filled with money today, every finance company, every thrift institution, every insurance company, every bank is so loaded with money that they are very anxious indeed to have these mortgages and in consequence you can take all of them over on a current basis virtually. If I do not miss my guess, we could actually get a premium on the great bulk of these at the present time, whereas if we do not perform this operation now, and if we wait until after hostilities have terminated and you get a debacle in the market, then we will have 811,000 homes, the average age of which is 26 years old at the present time, competing with hundreds of thousands of homes built under a post-war plan. Then we are really going to hold the sack.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The very building and loan associations referred to we bailed out. There were foreclosures of a thousand a day when that bill was passed. He realizes that. Now he wants to return to that organization that charged the people from 6 to 12 percent interest in this business. They have a lobbyist here getting $25,000 a year, with a suite at the Mayflower, sending out pamphlets asking that that be done so we will return those secured mogtgages and homes and let the other 272,000 people lose their homes. You know that, and so does the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield to me further so that a fair and accurate picture is presented to the Members, may I say that the fact of the matter is that the scale-down on the value of these properties when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation took them over was in excess of $200,000,000. That is point No. 1. Secondly, when you talk about bailing out finance and thrift institutions, let me advise the gentleman from New York that every State law in the land contains a provision relative to those institutions that are State chartered whereby they are governed by State laws, and while I cannot tell what the exact provision is in a good many States, I know in my own

State the law provides that when an account is 6 months in arrears it is mandatory for a thrift institution to foreclose for the very good reason they are cooperative ventures and the only money with which they have to work is the money that is saved by the laboring men, the average family, and placed in there on share account. So the State law protects them and compels these foreclosures in most cases. When you talk about bailing out, we might just as well have the whole story and show how these institutions had to operate under the pressure of the State statutes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. The gentleman from New York will have ample time to debate the amendment when offered.

UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

I want to say something more about the United States Maritime Commission before I conclude. The United States Maritime Commission testimony will be found at page 660 of the hearings. The request is for $1,289,000,000, as compared with the current appropriation of $980,000,000. Of the total, there is provided for administrative expenses $23,000,000 as compared with $16,625,000 in the current year. The personnel increase amounts to 1,959, mostly for the Purchase and Supply Division, Finance Division, the Technical Division and the four regional offices. The War Shipping Administration appropriation is not included in this bill but will be presented to the House as a separate matter.

Since July 1, 1940, contract authorizations for ship construction have amounted to $5,976,000,000. There is pending before the deficiency committee now a further contract authorization request of $5,520,000,000, giving a total of $11,226,000,000, if allowed, in contract authorizations for ship construction.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriations to date aggregate $3,685,000,000 in respect to which there is an unexpended balance of $2,091,000,000. The request here is for $1,289,000,000, and the request pending before the deficiency committee is for $4,000,000,000. If both requests are granted, there will be a total of $7,300,000,000 to be expended in the next 18 months as compared with a total of $1,600,000,000 expended in the last 30 months. This seems a tremendous total, but we are assured that the rate of $400,000,000 a month in expenditure was actually reached in November last and that the total requested or allowed by the Budget is some $900,000,000 less than the request.

The item in this bill is for administrative expenditures and for application in the construction of 2,242 ships under contract as of October 31 last. The item in the bill pending before the deficiency committee is in respect to 2,161 additional ships, bringing the total up to 4,400 ships over all.

The members will find in detail the four construction programs of the agency on page 661 of the hearings. Also testimony as to the goal in terms of deadweight tonnage of construction for the years 1942, 1943, and 1944. Also a statement as to the increase in construction of ships all the way from 50 ships in 1938 up to 1,000 in 1943.

Coming from a shipyard district as I do, I know the magnificent contribution that the workers in this industry have been making to the war effort. They have made a record which has never been approached in the world's history, and I know they can be counted upon for even greater results.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another side to this question in respect to which the Congress has an inescapable responsibility. Serious charges have been made. The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee has some of these charges now under investigation. My able colleague from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] will go into these matters in some detail. I do not wish to cover the ground which he will cover. I would be remiss in my duty, however, if I did not refer briefly to certain matters developed in the course of the hearings.

It has been charged, Mr. Chairman, that exhorbitant prices have been paid for ships purchased; that section 902 of the Maritime Act eliminating any enhancement in value due to the emergency has been violated; that sums in excess of three times the proper value of ships purchased have in fact been paid.

It has been charged that excessive charter hire agreements have been entered into. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] recently put in the RECORD an example, I believe, of 11 ships having a value of $786,000 which in a period of about 1 year earned over $3,300,000.

It has been charged that excessive insurance has been allowed and paid on ships, sometimes amounting to several times the value of the ship. I call attention in this connection to the letter from the Chairman of the Commission to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES], on page 721 of the hearings, with respect to the President Coolidge. This letter indicates an insurance of 200 percent of the value of the vessel if the construction subsidy is not first deducted. It indicates an insurance to the extent of 700 percent of the value of that ship if the amount of ship construction subsidy be first deducted.

I have requested in this connection three separate tables from the Commission, seeking a complete picture since July 1, 1940.

In respect to prices, I have asked for the name of each ship purchased, the name of the seller, the date of purchase, the age of the ship, the original cost of construction, and the price paid.

In regard to charter hire, I have requested the name of each ship, the company, the date of the charter-hire agreement, the age of the ship, the original construction cost, and the earnings, if any, under the agreement.

With respect to insurance, I have requested the name of each ship, the company, the date insured, the age of the ship, the original construction cost, the insurance placed, and the insurance paid.

These tables, Mr. Chairman, to date have not been furnished.

It has also been charged that excess profits due the Government have not been collected. I have requested the Commission to furnish me with a statement showing the amount collected and the amount accrued. This information has not yet been furnished. It is admitted on the record, however, that all that is due has not been collected. It would also appear that the failure to cancel operating subsidies has served to make collection impossible and resulted in tax exemptions probably running into many millions of dollars.

The report of the Comptroller General in regard to the Waterman Steamship Co. transaction, with an apparent excess payment of $2,800,000, is public information and before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The report of the Comptroller General in regard to the Tampa Steamship Co. transaction, indicating an excess payment of $1,900,000, is in a similar category.

The report of the Comptroller General in reference to the sale of the steamship President Roosevelt, indicating an excess payment of over $421,000, has recently been sent to the Congress.

The other investigations which the Comptroller General now has in hand will be found listed at page 269 of the committee hearings.

The situation at the South Portland yard, indicating fees to the extent of $5,000,000 on an initial investment of $250,000, has been the subject of an investigation by a congressional committee.

The situation in the Savannah yard was recently aired in the public press.

I think the committee will wish to read the letter from Senator AIKEN, of Vermont, to Senator WALSH, of Massachusetts, and the reply of the Chairman of the Commission, appearing at page 752 of the committee hearings.

I realize fully, Mr. Chairman, the vital importance of ship construction in the war effort. I have already paid my tribute to the splendid work accomplished in this field. I report the matters just referred to as a matter of duty.

The charges made must be investigated. They must be proved, explained, or disproved. Personally, as one vitally interested in the merchant marine, I should be glad if they can be disproved. I hope they will be dealt with at the earliest possible moment. The truth must be ascertained. It is vital if the welfare of the merchant marine on its present basis is not to be jeopardized.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wonder if the gentlemen can tell the Committee what led to the action of the subcommittee in striking the whole appropriation of the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I am afraid I do not have time to go into the matter at very great length. I think, however,

I can say for the committee that it was felt that the work done by this agency was very largely limited to that of correlating or duplicating the work undertaken by other agencies of the Federal Government or to assisting the States and localities in respect to problems belonging to State and local units.

While I think the committee appreciates fully the importance of proper planning, I think they did not feel that the continuance of an agency with some 350 people and an annual budget of $1,400,000 to correlate the work of other agencies and to advise the States how to do their own jobs was warranted in view of the conditions facing the country at this time.

Mr. MAGNUSON. There was no information, however, that what work the National Resources Planning Board is doing is not a proper work and a valuable contribution to the Nation? In other words, it was a question of there being a duplication of procedure? I hope the committee did not feel that the necessity for national planning does not exist any more and that, therefore, you are going to cut out all appropriations for the agencies that may be doing this type of work.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Under leave to extend my remarks, I include the following comments on other agencies included in this bill:

EXHIBIT 6

THE NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

The National Resources Planning Board testimony will be found on page 50 of the hearings. This agency requests $1,400,000, as compared with $774,000 appropriated and $243,000 allocated from the President's Emergency Fund during the current year. It requests an increase in personnel from 252 to 350.

I have never been impressed by the work of this agency. Much of it has been devoted to the correlation or duplication of the work of other agencies. Much of it has been devoted to assisting the States and localities in fields which should be taken care of by the States. Forty-four States now have their own set-ups.

A break-down of the work of the agency under seven headings will be found on page 57 of the hearings. These include general overhead; economic and industrial trends; public-works programs, both Federal and State; security and services, dealing with such matters as health, nutrition, youth, and education; functional programs, dealing with water and land plans; urban conservation and development; area studies, assisting States and localities; and post-war agenda and reserve.

A very large part of the work in prospect is work which falls primarily within the jurisdiction of other agencies or the States.

The Board states "Our immediate responsibility is to correlate post-war plans." It further states it is important "to make clear the things we are fighting for" and "to give assurance not only to our people but to other people that the four freedoms will be made realities everywhere in the world."

It further states: "In one sense the appropriation for planning might be regarded as insurance. The post-war plans which the Board prepares may never have to be used."

I believe in planning. I believe also that every agency that is worth its salt is planning. I am not impressed with the need of a Board of 350 people, costing $1,400,000 a year, to correlate the plans of other agencies and to tell the States how to solve their problems.

Frank Kent is authority for the statement that the Executive Office staff in World War No. 1 numbered 48 at a cost of $164,520 as compared with the Executive office staff of today numbering 906 at a cost of $2,999,460, or an increase of about 1,800 percent.

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

The testimony from the Securities and Exchange Commission will be found on page 308 of the hearings. This agency administers seven acts under three of its divisions. The Public Utility Division administers the Public Utility Holding Company Act. It requests $720,000, the same amount as was appropriated for the current year. Sixty-eight percent of the registration work has been completed and substantial progress made in respect to the rest.

The Trading and Exchange Division administers the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 and the Investment Advisers' Act of 1940. This division is requesting $352,890 as compared with $382,890 in the current year, a reduction of 7½ percent. The record indicates a decline in investigations of 60 percent, a decline in filings of 50 percent, and a substantial decline in broker-dealer applications and reports.

The Corporate Financial Division administers the Securities Act of 1933, the Trust Indenture Act, the Investment Company Act, and chapter 10 of the National Bankruptcy Act. For this division is requested $1,010,840, as compared with $1,023,840, a decrease of 2 percent. The record indicates a decrease in filings under the Securities Act of 30 percent and a decrease in reorganizations under the Bankruptcy Act of 45 percent.

It indicates also a general reduction of activities in the financial world reflected in tables relating to loans, exchange memberships, number of tickers and electrical boards, and daily average sales on national securities exchanges.

The committee reduction of $750,000 would seem to be fully justified.

TARIFF COMMISSION

The testimony of the Tariff Commission will be found on page 280 of the hearings. The committee recommendation of $760,000 compares with the sum of $868,200 available in the current year and is $103,000 below the Budget estimate. When added, however, to the sum of $282,625 to be received from other agencies, the total to be made available amounts to $1,042,025, as large a sum I think, as has ever been available to this agency. The record indicates that except for a little work done on trade agreements and a little work under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the work of the Commission has been primarily work for other agencies, such as the Bureau of Economic Warfare, Office of Price Administration, and the War Production Board. The real basis for this request appears to be the desire to preserve a staff expert in tariff matters until after the conclusion of the war. The question presents itself whether or not this agency should be continued under the circumstances for the duration.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

The testimony of the Tennessee Valley Authority will be found on page 456 of the hearings. Much of the data presented is regarded as restricted by the Office of War Information. The record indicates 24 dams built or under construction at an ultimate cost of $687,700,000. It indicates sufficient power for all foreseeable demands at least until the end of the fiscal year 1944. It includes statistics as to completion dates for dams, steam plants, transmission facilities, the fertilizer program, related property operations, and development program.

No new projects and no new appropriations are contemplated. The agency asks the use of $62,000,000 of its own revenues and $62,800,000 of reappropriations, a total of $124,800,000 to meet estimated expenditure of $107,300,000. The balance of $17,500,000 is requested as a reserve fund on the theory that projects which have been deferred by War Production Board may be released during the coming fiscal year. It should be noted in this connection that money has been provided for preliminary studies and for the design of plants for future construction wholly apart from the $17,500,000 reserve fund.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

The testimony of the Veterans' Administration will be found on page 209 of the hearings. The total requested amounts to $887,017,000 as compared with $601,195,088 in the current year, an increase of almost $286,000,000. The request reflects an increase in personnel from 7,932 to 8,350 departmental and from 38,206 to 38,833 in the field, a total increase of 1,045.

A break-down of the request into seven items appears on page 211 of the hearings. Ninety-seven percent of the increase is in respect to three items, namely, Army and Navy pensions, $48,000,000 military and naval insurance, $8,600,000; and national service life insurance, $222,230,000. The record indicates under national service life insurance as of January 1, 1943, 6,000,000 policies, aggregating $38,000,000,000.

The increase in personnel is for work in respect to national service life insurance, for increased costs of supplies, materials, and hospitalization, for additional beds and for travel.

The record indicates as of June 30, 1942, 62,453 hospital beds, 18,771 domiciliary beds, a total of 81,224 beds. It indicates as of June 30, 1944, 63,776 hospital beds, 18,849 domiciliary beds, a total of 82,625 beds. The over-all program of the Veterans' Administration is 100,000 beds, the speed of completion depending upon priorities. The Veterans' Administration program in connection with the Army and Navy program now under way calling for 103,000 beds is believed to be adequate for any foreseeable demand.

The work of placing veterans of World War No. 1 in employment has continued with marked success. The total payments in behalf of the veterans of all wars since 1790 have amounted to $15,106,893,986.81.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. TARVER).

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, on February 10, the President transmitted to Congress an estimate of $100,000,000 for the agricultural appropriation bill for the next fiscal year to provide for the making of so-called incentive payments, "to encourage an increased acreage of Irish and sweet potatoes, dried beans, dried peas, soybeans, peanuts, grain, sorghums, flax, and certain vegetables."

The Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations of which I serve as chairman, departing from its usual custom of not announcing action upon any Budget estimate until after the bill is reported, has today by a majority vote disapproved this estimate and announced that fact to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the country. The announced purpose of this action was to advise the Secretary and the farmers of the country that so far as the subcommittee is concerned the amounts projected for incentive payments will not be appropriated by Congress, and to make this announcement in time so that a different plan may be devised and put in operation for increasing the production of these essential crops. It is felt by a majority of the committee that the announcement of the program has been so recently made that farmers have not yet incurred any expense in making plans to cooperate in it, the program having been announced under date of January 27, 1943, and that the Secretary of Agriculture who is also Food Administrator and the farmers of the United States should be promptly advised that the funds for the incentive payment program will probably not be made available.

The matter is one of such tremendous and far-reaching importance that I feel it is incumbent upon me as chairman of this subcommittee to outline to the House my own feeling with regard to it. Since my views are not in all respects in accord with these of a majority of the subcommittee, I approach the discussion with some reluctance, but at the same time I feel that it is a subject which should be thoroughly discussed and thoroughly understood. I shall certainly not speak in criticism of anybody who entertains contrary opinions. I am concerned only with laying the facts as I understand them before the House.

I feel that the action of the subcommittee has been occasioned by a considerable number of reasons, which I believe I must appropriately leave in large part for expression by those who have been responsible for the action taken. So far as the merits of the proposal are concerned, if this House were here and now empowered to determine it definitely, and to substitute a different method of increasing production of these essential crops, I should be in accord with most of the reasons advanced. I do not, however, consider that to be the case.

The act of October 2, 1942, amending the Emergency Price Control Act, provides—

> That modifications shall be made in maximum prices established for any agricultural commodity and for commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity, under regulations to be prescribed by the President, in any case where it appears that such modification is necessary to increase the production of such commodity for war purposes.

That is the direction given by Congress in an act approved by the President as to how increases of production of agricultural commodities needed for war purposes shall be brought about. It is a legislative mandate which in my judgment should have been followed. I do not conceive, however, that it was within the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to follow it. It could only have been done by the Office of Price Administration under the direction of the President.

Had that power been exercised by the Office of Price Administration, there is no question but that the Secretary of Agriculture would have had authority of law to establish so-called support prices which would have furnished all necessary incentive for additional production, thus giving to the producers of these commodities the prices to which they are entitled, not from the Treasury of the United States as a subsidy, but in the market place. That, in my humble judgment, is what should have been done.

The danger of inflation at this time in my opinion does not come because of threatened increases in farm commodity prices. The American farmer is not profiteering. The inflation danger comes largely from huge and unconscionable profits in war industry, and from wages in war industry entirely out of proportion to agricultural prices.

There is a further very important problem connected with the whole question involved. It is whether or not a saner and more satisfactory approach to the goal of increasing agricultural production would not have been through proper steps to increase the supply of farm labor, through deferment of necessary labor from military service, and furloughing for agricultural work essential farmers already in the service; whether provision of additional farm implements and machinery, adequate supplies of fertilizers, and other steps of that sort might not have been tried to stimulate agricultural production. Personally, I do not believe that the American farmer today needs any monetary subsidy or incentive to cause him to produce for his country in this time of emergency to the very limit of his capacity. I believe that all his Government has to do is to tell him what it wants him to do, and see to it that he gets the means to do it with. I do believe, however, that he ought not to be made the goat of this continued movement toward inflated prices, which is tending to increase by leaps and bounds the cost of the products of industry, including of course the things the farmer has to buy, and at the same time is endeavoring to so restrict the farmer's income as to allow everybody else to profit at his expense.

I cannot discuss all of these questions now. I say I think the powers that be should have followed the mandate of Congress in attempting to increase production of essential agricultural products. They should have raised the prices of those products in the manner provided by law. They did not do it. They are now refusing to do it. Members of Congress and great farm organizations are incensed because of that failure. They feel that the authority of Congress has been flouted, that the law has been ignored, and that it is incumbent on Congress to protect its authority and see to it that its mandates are observed.

Under ordinary circumstances, I would be in full accord with that feeling. But we have here no ordinary circumstances. We are advised by the Food Administrator, charged with the duty of maintaining the national food production to a level sufficient for the needs of our armed forces and our allies as well as of our civilian population that the increased production of the essential crops named in the Budget estimate is absolutely necessary. More than that, we are advised that all of this sought-for increase in production in these several crops above what would otherwise be production levels is intended for the use of our armed forces and of our allies. The Food Administrator, the Director of Economic Stabilization, and the President have all approved this plan, this $100,000,000 extra for incentive payments. I do not like the plan. You, perhaps, do not like the plan. We feel that the laws enacted by Congress have been flouted. Shall we now, in order to maintain the dignity and authority of Congress, enter a contest with the administrative branch of the Government to see whose will shall control, who shall be boss, and, whether we are right or wrong, run the risk of decreasing below needed levels supplies of essential foods to the boys in our armed forces and to our allies?

You can take that responsibility if you want to. I refuse to have any part of it.

I call your attention to this fact: The Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act of 1935, section 16, United States Code, title 16, section 590p, authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to create obligations for benefits under the act not to exceed $500,000,000. He has to create those obligations before the beginning of a crop year. The law contemplated that he should do so. If he waited each year until the agricultural appropriation bill is approved in midsummer, it would be too late. He has incurred obligations for the crop year before the beginning of the year and before the money has been appropriated by Congress for every one of the 7 years since the act was passed. Now, he has undertaken under that authority to pledge the credit of the Government for this additional $100,000,000 for the coming crop year. It was only a few days ago, but it has been done. Farmers may not have done much in endeavoring to meet his offer, but thousands of them may have, and doubtless have, made some plans, incurred some expense, and would have their plans thrown out of gear by the withdrawal of his offer.

Who has authority to direct him to withdraw it? Nobody except Congress with the approval of the President. Congress undoubtedly did not contemplate in passing the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act that the power given him in section 16 would be used for such a purpose; it directed in the Emergency Price Control Act as amended that he use a different method for increasing essential agricultural production for war purposes; but it never repealed the authority given him in the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, and he is at least within the letter if not the spirit of that act.

I repeat, who can direct him to withdraw his $100,000,000 offer to the farmers of the country? The Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations has no such authority; even the full Committee on Appropriations would have no such right. The House of Representatives by itself alone cannot do it and will not even have the opportunity until the agricultural-appropriations bill comes before the House, perhaps a couple of months from now. You cannot even have a vote on it now to see how the majority feel.

In the meantime the news goes out to the farmers of the country that the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations has disapproved the estimate for the $100,000,000. That will destroy the incentive-production program. No farmer would feel safe in incurring added expense to cooperate in the program when uncertainty exists as to whether the Government will be able to keep its contract.

Then, you say, let the administration do this thing in the manner directed by Congress—that is, by providing adequate price increases for these commodities to spur production. Perhaps it will be the administration's fault if it does not. Perhaps, however, the administration will say that not a subcommittee, but the two Houses of Congress, must determine whether this money will be appropriated, and that the Secretary had legal authority to bind the Government up to $500,000,000, and therefore invite the farmers of the country to proceed on the basis of the Secretary's offer. Certainly the program would be a flop; certainly the goal of increased production would not be achieved; and while the Congress and the administration settle the question of each other's prerogatives, a war need is not filled, American soldiers and sailors and their allies go without necessary food, and the day of victory in this world-wide struggle is to some extent postponed. Yes; it might even be that failure to furnish these extra foodstuffs would make the difference between victory and defeat.

There may be men who want to take that responsibility. I want none of it. Law or no law, congressional dignity or lack of it, I am going to wash my hands of any responsibility for throwing any sort of a monkey wrench into the war machinery. I voted to approve this Budget estimate. If further opportunity is offered me to support it again, I will do that. I hope that the administration, in view of the situation which has arisen, will withdraw it and resort to the methods provided by the Emergency Price Control Act to accomplish the same ends, but if it does not, I shall not participate in any contest with administrative authorities which could only result, no matter who is right or who is wrong, in adding to the danger of our war effort, to that of the men who are carrying on in that effort on sea and on land throughout the world, and in their failing to receive, no matter through whose fault, the kind of backing to which they are entitled.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Is not the gentleman aware that all leading farm organizations have recently taken action over a joint statement in opposition to these incentive payments as being necessary to stimulate expanded food production.

Mr. TARVER. I am aware that representatives of two farm organizations appeared before our subcommittee on Friday of last week and expressed opposition to the making of incentive payments, in lieu of increasing prices. I was unable to secure from the representatives of those farm organizations, a clear and definite statement of what their attitude would be toward incentive payments, if the movement for increasing prices should not be successful.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield me 1 minute.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague on the committee was on his feet and I thought perhaps he would like to ask a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I listened to the gentleman from Georgia with interest, and he made a fine statement of the case except I think he overemphasized the question of the conflict between the executive and congressional branches of the Government as distinguished from some other considerations in the minds of the subcommittee, when that subcommittee took action this morning. The gentleman will bear me out, I think, that the committee was of opinion that it was embarking on a subsidy program in the first place, and secondly, that there was no assurance that it would work.

Mr. TARVER. And let me say that $200,000,000 of the $400,000,000 first estimated for the 1944 Budget, for the soil conservation and domestic allotment program serves the identical purposes to be served by this $100,000,000. This $100,000,000 is merely on top of that. In other words, $200,000,000 of $400,000,000 in the original Budget estimate is to make payments to the identical types of farmers to whom it is proposed to pay this additional amount, and if this is a subsidy, that is a subsidy, and yet nobody has ever suggested the elimination of the $20,000,000 from the original Budget. While that $200,000,000 is allocated to producers of the five basic crops payment is conditional on their producing the same types of crops designated in this supplemental estimate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And let me say that the vote of the subcommittee this morning on the request of the Secretary of Agriculture for $100,000,000 was rejected by a vote of 5 to 1, those voting in the affirmative being the chairman of the full Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], Mr. LAMBERTSON, myself, Mr. PLUMLEY, Mr. WENE, and my colleague from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] voted in the negative.

Mr. TARVER. Oh, I correct the gentleman by stating that the majority was 6 to 1.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; that is correct. I forgot to mention that Mr. SHEPPARD was not there at the time.

Mr. TARVER. Oh, yes; he was. All of the subcommittee voted.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then it was 6 to 1, and that 6 was made up of 3 Republicans and 3 Democrats.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I believe it is fitting that any Member of this House or of the other Chamber to criticize severely, and criticize up to the hilt, the activities of any officials or any members of any executive bureaus with whom they emphatically disagree. I do, however, feel that it is quite unfair and unsuitable for Members to endeavor, by way of venting their personal spleen, to cut off appropriations because of their disagreement with individual members of the departments and agencies. I do not think it is proper to cut off the appropriations for those agencies and departments for any such reason. That is an unfair method of dealing, and as a humble Member of this Congress I certainly will fight against any efforts of that sort.

I want to spend a bit of time today on Joseph L. Weiner, Office of Civilian Supply Director of the War Production Board. In his official capacity as such, his vote is essentia. in connection with the cutting down of the source of supplies of many industries and services. In connection with the wood pulp and paper-products industry numerous drastic orders have recently been issued, some of them without rhyme or reason and without appropriate consultations with the heads of the industry, or the consuming public which is also concerned. A group of Members of this House asked about an attempted 40-percent cut in the raw materials used in the manufacture of newsprint paper.

Members of the Paper and Pulp Division, I am informed, among them Messrs. Sterling, Wakeman, Gay, Snow, and Chandler have been reasonable and eminently fair in the matter and other matters. My contact with a number of these men have been most agreeable and satisfying. Indeed I found them most pleasant and cooperative. They wish to confer with the industry's groups and want their point of view. They do not want to ride roughshod over anyone. They object to this 40-percent cut, but Joseph Weiner is or was obdurate and adamant. He would not think of any modification. The 40-percent cut would materially affect, if not put out of business, hundreds of small newspapers of this country. Now more than ever, newspapers are essential in this country for obvious reasons. Jefferson once said, "If I were given a choice of government without newspapers and newspapers without government, I would choose the latter."

Efforts are now being made to cut out paper and paper products gradually not drastically—as the needs appear. As to the material for the manufacture of newsprint papers, up to a maximum of 10 percent is all that is necessary at this juncture and Weiner will have to agree—or else. He will have to agree on other matters—or else.

Let me give you another side light upon the aims and aspirations of this gentleman, who, apparently, does not know his backside from a hole in the ground. He actually tried by a "Weiner ukase" to return us to prohibition by the back door.

This man Weiner has the gall, the cheek, in the face of the fact that we repudiated prohibition not so many moons ago, to recommend cutting down legalized liquor to the extent of 99 percent, leaving only the smallest modicum, 1 percent, for medicinal purposes. I endeavored to take up the matter with Mr. Weiner himself, and get his report, but I was not able to get Mr. Weiner on the telephone. He was "in conference" whenever I phoned. That excuse will not wash with me. He did not show enough courtesy to call back. Finally his secretary told me that the report was not for publication. Yet, extracts were found in all of the newspapers, and if the newspapers could get portions of the report the entire report should be at our disposal. I was told by someone in his office that the newspapers had no right to the portions of the report. That sounds fishy or that office was negligent in letting a confidential report leak out. Anyway, the press did a public service in reporting the portions of the report it got hold of. We have, by our protests, nipped in the bud a damnable attempt again to "dry" the country.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. CLEVENGER. This same Joseph Weiner, is the man who is depriving agriculture of its farm machinery down to a very small percentage of what it should have. I do not believe that he knows a hay tedder from a corn sheller.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman's opinion is probably better than mine. But the gentleman should keep after him. He has no right to be in that position of power. He has already shown his unfitness. I do not, however, say that we should cut off the appropriations for the War Production Board because of the derelictions of one man in that Board, as some people would have us do.

I have been all through prohibition from the start, and in order to show, for example, with what ease liquor was obtainable during the prohibition era, right here in Washington, I brought into this chamber and placed on this table 12 bottles of liquor, back in 1926, three bottles of alleged "Scotch," 3 bottles of apparent "bourbon," and 3 bottles of presumed "rye" that I had purchased that very morning in drug stores and from bootleggers in Washington. I had violated the law. Most everybody did. It was the fashion. No one cared a hoot for the eighteenth amendment or the Volstead Act.

Gentlemen, it is very strange to relate that before my speech was over, the bottles had disappeared, indicating that although members even in this chamber had voted "dry," they also, like the whole Nation, were drinking "wet." They coveted and took the bottles from this table. I never got them back. I did not want them. I would not have touched the stuff. I had too much respect for my "tummy."

This new dry proposal, more fantastic than any thus far advanced by even the most fanatical prohibitionist agitator, clearly calls for further explanation from Mr. Joseph L. Weiner, director of that governmental bureau. Of course, the Weiner report itself has not yet been fully published. We have only a newspaper story with no identification as to the authority for it, so that the American people have no means of knowing exactly what the report says fully on this subject nor any explanation as to the reasoning behind such an absurd recommendation. We only know Weiner sponsored it.

Viewed from an economic standpoint, and as a war conservation measure, the proposal is manifestly ridiculous. According to the newspaper accounts, Weiner believes that with respect to the alcoholic beverages we should cut out distilled spirits and permit the production and sale of beer and wine up to two-thirds of 1941 consumption. Let us take a look at the facts.

First. The distilling industry is now completely converted to war production of alcohol for use by the armed forces and in manufacture of synthetic rubber.

Second. The country has on hand 3 to 3½ years' supply of distilled spirits already manufactured.

Third. The continued sale of this product will return approximately $1,000,000,000 in revenue to the Federal Government and State treasuries each year. This revenue is vital to the individual States of the Union whose need of revenue is greater than ever before with the loss of income from automobile license, gasoline, and other taxes.

Fourth. Out of every dollar spent for distilled spirits, from 66 to 68 cents goes to the support of Government.

Fifth. The beer and wine industries employ over 40,000 persons in production alone and sales of these products are much more lightly taxed than distilled spirits, yielding the Federal Government somewhat less than half a billion dollars a year. Moreover, what is more important, there is only about 90 days' supply of beer in the country at any time.

In other words, Mr. Weiner is suggesting that the country should continue to devote manpower and materials to the production of one type of alcoholic beverage, which still has to be made, and which yields the Government a relatively smaller amount of revenue, and eliminate the sale of another type of alcoholic beverage which is already produced, ready for sale and which yields enormous revenue both to the Federal Government and to the sorely-pressed State governments.

The proposal is even more dangerous when viewed from the social side. If adopted, it would inevitably return the country, to a very considerable extent, to the evils of the prohibition era. Mr. Weiner is probably mentally too young to understand that part of the picture. He was probably in his mental diapers when this country went through the terrible crimes of prohibition, with its hip-pocket flask, bay-rum cocktails, bootleg scotch, and the racketeering, banditry, and gangsterism which went along with them.

What background has Weiner to understand civilian tastes and demands for liquor? Even the Army refused to make the country dry—it is feared for the morale of soldier and civilian alike, but Weiner would bludgeon the Nation into prohibition. Who abides with him? What groups held his pen as he wrote? It is worth investigating. Perhaps we should tell him that no more whisky can be made—all distilleries have been commandeered for the making of alcohol in order to produce smokeless powder and synthetic rubber for war use. All distillers and dealers have already voluntarily rationed supplies. The stretching of the limited stocks under reasonable control by the O. P. A. and the W. P. B. would satisfy the Nation and would, I am sure, be agreeable to the administration and particularly to James F. Byrnes, Director of Economic Stabilization.

This is prohibition by stealth—through the back door—despite the fact that the country fought overwhelmingly for and won the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The American people want none of this kind of ridiculous regimentation. It is unnecessary, unsound, and uneconomic.

I went back to my old files and I found some interesting newspaper clippings of what happened during that awful period called prohibition.

Here is a clipping from Aurora, Ill., of March 26, 1929:

> State dry agents today stormed the home of Joseph DeKing, 40, after bombarding it with gas bombs, killing Mrs. DeKing, 35, and clubbed her husband into unconsciousness.
> Their terror-stricken son, Gerald, 9, seized a revolver and shot one of the raiders in the leg.

Another clipping from New York, my own city, of December 28, 1921:

> Three men and a woman died yesterday from the effects of wood alcohol which they drank during the Christmas holidays under the impression they were drinking gin and whisky. Two of the men were brothers. * * * The drinks did not affect one of the brothers until yesterday about noon, when he became suddenly ill and began to lose his sight. He feared that he had drunk wood alcohol and went at once to the hospital. He became steadily worse in spite of everything the physicians could do, and at 6 o'clock was blind. He went into convulsions soon afterward and died in great pain about 10 o'clock.

I commend to Weiner a reading of these records.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CELLER. I could tell you more about those dreadful years under the prohibition era. The noisome scent of bathtub gin still quivers our nostrils. The headlines are still fresh in our memory, as follows: "Beer baron slain," "Senator shot by dry agents," "Booze convoy hijacked," "Coeds in rum orgy."

The Lord deliver us from another era of prohibition. I once said on this floor the return of prohibition would be just like a dog returning to his vomit. That is strong but fitting language. That is the only way I can adequately describe it, because prohibition was that vile.

Now, this man Weiner, when he found that we were getting after him, sort of apologized and said as follows:

There is no indication whatever that we shall at any time in the discernible future get down to rock bottom and be compelled to distribute liquor on a bedrock basis. On the contrary, there is on hand today sufficient liquor to provide normal consumption for several years. It should be added that the entire bedrock economy report submitted to the Director of Economic Stabilization by the Office of Civilian Supply was a study and not a recommendation.

When he was caught with his "pants down" he calls a recommendation a mere study, but anyone who has any knowledge of prohibition, who lived through it or would take the trouble to read about prohibition, would neither make a study nor a recommendation that we should be regimented into prohibition again, particularly after we had in this House and in the other Chamber passed a repeal which was ratified by the necessary number of States. The Nation does not want any more of prohibition and we do not want any more ukases, edicts, orders, studies, or recommendations coming from this man Weiner. Of course, nothing is going to come of that report now after we have scotched him, as it were, as far as Jimmy Byrnes is concerned. He is too practical, too sensible. He knows the temper of the people. As Congressman, Senator, judge, and right-hand man of the President, he will not be fooled by any such asinine study or report.

The report, however, is going to have a bad effect in another direction, in that it is going to be used by all the dry organizations all over the country as proof positive that we must have this prohibition regimentation again. This man has created a tremendous amount of havoc because of what he has said. The drys will quote him up hill and down dale.

Last Saturday and last Monday in New York, and probably in other States and other places, there was a veritable run on all liquor stores, after the publication of this Weiner report. All liquor stores were cleaned out of liquor because of the dumb statement made by this man.

I repeat to the gentlemen who have grievances against him, come here and air those grievances to the end that he will be put back where he came from—my own city of New York, I am unhappy to state. He comes from New York and was formerly in the office of corporation counsel of the city of New York under the LaGuardia administration. I do not know whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. But at any rate he has no place in the War Production Board personnel.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. It might interest the gentleman to know that I have this morning received from one county farm bureau a list of 14,700 acres of very rich land that will not be in crop production this year, probably for two reasons: First, the lack of manpower, and, second, the lack of machinery. Your city of New York is vitally interested in that, because after all, milk does not run out of a faucet.

Mr. CELLER. I am very much interested and I will be glad to cooperate with the gentleman to bring about proper relief.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. RIZLEY].

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, we are now considering the second of the so-called departmental bills. After many weeks of diligent and painstaking work, the Appropriations Committee, by and through the approval and recommendation of the very able subcommittee, has submitted for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole House this bill, which I understand provides for contemplated expenditures by the various governmental agencies provided for in the bill, the approximate sum of $2,621,104,379.

I concede, of course, that the Members of the Congress who comprise the Appropriations Committee, and more particularly those of the subcommittee, who have heard the evidence adduced at the hearings, are in a much better position to pass upon the merits of the bill and the individual items which make up the whole of the sum total than are we, who have not been privileged to hear the testimony or read the very voluminous record of the hearings. Each of us, however, has his own individual responsibility to the particular people he represents, not only in his own respective congressional district and State, but the Nation as well.

I am personally fond of every Member on either side of the aisle who makes up this splendid subcommittee. I do not challenge their sincerity of purpose, their good intentions, or the fact that they may honestly feel that they have used the pruning knife to its full capacity. On the other hand, I am not unmindful of the fact that in our respective committees we are sometimes oversold by those with whom we so often come in contact and who are directly interested in the bureau, department, or agency for which we are appropriating or legislating either for or against; and I doubt whether there has ever been an appropriation bill reported that could not stand further drastic reductions. That is especially true in this particular period of our country's history, so far as nondefense expenditures are concerned.

This Congress has a solemn obligation to the people of this country to trim, and trim to the core, and to cut, and cut to the quick, all expenditures that are not absolutely essential to the winning of the war. I do not pretend to be a fiscal expert or to know all the answers to governmental economics. I doubt whether anyone else does. I do recall that in 1932 it was stated and proposed as a sound governmental principle that a government, like a family, could not long keep on spending in excess of its income without being bankrupt and going upon the rocks. Of course, no one in authority since that time has advocated any such doctrine since that campaign, although it seems to me to be fundamental.

In view of the unprecedented demands that are being made of our people in order to finance this war, I do want to point out a few facts which disturb me and which speak for themselves, and which certainly stress the absolute importance of cutting out of every appropriation bill everything that is not absolutely esesntial for the successful prosecution of the war.

Some of the things which I shall say and some of the comparisons that I want to call to your attention, I may say are not made without some trepidation upon my part, for I realize that any statement that might be made which someone might construe to mean that Uncle Sam is still your favorite, and in making comparisons of our own expenditures in connection with the war with those of our allies, may bring down the wrath of the gods upon our heads and that some vociferous, self-styled guardian of American freedom or self-appointed spokesman of American policies is likely to label us as an isolationist or a tool of Hitler and claim that we are not interested in winning the war because we dare call attention to these war expenditures.

I am sure, however, that the vast majority of the people in this country have well caught on to that class of self-styled gentry and are quite certain that those of us whose sons are fighting on the far-flung fields of battle and who subscribe to the various war chests, are the folk who are not only eager and anxious to win the war as speedily and effectively as possible and get our boys back home, but are likewise anxious that they have, if possible, a solvent Government, and some semblance of the sort of American ideas and ideals to return to when they get back over here.

The New York Times under date of January 12, contained an article setting out the war budgets for 1943, which are as follows:

|---|---|
| United States | $100,000,000,000 |
| England | 21,000,000,000 |
| Russia | 15,000,000,000 |
| Canada | 4,000,000,000 |
| Germany | 34,000,000,000 |
| Italy | 8,000,000,000 |
| Japan | 7,000,000,000 |

According to those figures, the total war budget for 1943 of England, Russia, Canada, Germany, Italy, and Japan, approximates $89,000,000,000, while our own war budget is $100,000,000,000. In other words, our war budget contemplates our expending for the war effort about $11,000,000,000 more than our principal allies—England, Russia, and Canada—plus the budget of all the Axis Powers.

After noting this bit of interesting information concerning the war budget for 1943, I thought it would also be interesting to make some comparisons of the expenditures in dollars and cents of our own Government which has been in the war a comparatively short time, with those of our allies and the Axis Powers; so I asked the Legislative Reference Division of the Library of Congress for information about the war budgets of our allies for the entire period from 1932 to 1943, inclusive. I also requested that I be furnished the information as to not only what our allies had expended during that 10-year period, but also as to the entire expenditures of the Axis Powers during that same period.

The Legislative Reference Service directed my attention to the Foreign Commerce Weekly under date of February 6, 1943, and also to the Federal Reserve Bulletin for January 1943. For the information of those who may not have had the privilege of making these comparisons, I include herein as a part of my remarks, the information as set out in the Foreign Commerce Weekly, in a very interesting article by Mr. Leon S. Wellstone, Division of Commercial and Economic Information, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce:

COST TO UNITED STATES

Leading in the cost of military expenditures, though late to enter the war against Hitler—December 11, 1941—is the United States. During the fiscal year 1940–41 these expenditures amounted to $6,700,000,000; in 1941–42 they were $28,300,000,000; for the fiscal year ending the coming July they are estimated at $77,300,000,000; while for the fiscal year 1942–43 the President, in his recent address before the new Congress, estimates such outlays at $97,000,000,000.

Taking only the expenditures already used or now appropriated, we arrive at the total of $112,300,000 for the last 3 years.

UNITED KINGDOM

The military expenditures by the United Kingdom since the advent of the Nazis in Germany are given (in pounds sterling) in the following table:

Defense and war services, Apr. 1 to Mar. 31

|---|---|
| 1932–33 | £102,990,000 |
| 1933–34 | 107,872,000 |
| 1934–35 | 113,870,000 |
| 1935–36 | 136,949,000 |
| 1936–37 | 186,072,000 |
| 1937–38 | 262,117,000 |
| 1938–39 | 382,456,000 |
| 1939–40 | [1] 1,141,451,000 |
| 1940–41 | 3,220,000,000 |
| 1941–42 | 4,085,000,000 |
| 1942–43 (estimate) | 4,500,000,000 |

[1] £241,201,000 total defense votes; £408,500,000 votes of credits; £491,750,000 amounts met from issues under Defense Loans Acts.

This makes a total of £14,239,000,000.

The yearly average exchange rate of the pound sterling during the foregoing periods has been as follows:

|---|---|
| 1932 | $3.50 |
| 1933 | 4.23 |
| 1934 | 5.03 |
| 1935 | 4.90 |
| 1936 | 4.97 |
| 1937 | 4.94 |
| 1938 | 4.88 |
| 1939 | 4.43 |
| 1940 | [1] 4.035 |
| 1941 | [1] 4.035 |
| 1942 | [1] 4.035 |

[1] Official rate.

Translating the United Kingdom expenditures into dollars, we find a total for the period of $58,200,000,000.

This makes a grand total of $112,300,000,000 plus $57,700,000,000, or $170,500,000,000.

CANADIAN EXPENDITURES

Canadia expenditures on national defense between 1939 and 1943 (fiscal year in Canada ends Mar. 31) were as follows:

|---|---|
| 1939 | $34,000,000 |
| 1940 | 127,000,000 |
| 1941 | 778,000,000 |
| 1942 | 1,351,000,000 |
| 1943 | 3,000,000,000 |

The figure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1943, is conservative and may have already been increased.

The total expenditures in the years cited amount to $5,290,000,000 (Canadian), or approximately $4,814,000,000 (United States) at the rate of 91 cents per Canadian dollar.

This increases the grand total from $170,500,000,000 to about $175,300,000,000.

SOVIET UNION

The military expenditures by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics since the advent of Hitler have been as follows, in rubles (the estimate for 1942 is not yet available):

| | Rubles |
|---|---|
| 1932 | 1,500,000,000 |
| 1934 | 1,700,000,000 |
| 1935 | 6,500,000,000 |
| 1936 | 14,800,000,000 |
| 1937 | 20,000,000,000 |
| 1938 | 27,000,000,000 |
| 1939 | 41,000,000,000 |
| 1940 | 57,000,000,000 |
| 1941 | 71,000,000,000 |

This makes a total of 240,000,000,000 rubles during the 9 years. Owing to the unreality of the foreign-exchange value of the Soviet ruble, it is, at best, difficult to translate it into dollars. But it will not probably be far wrong, in terms of the value of industrial production involved, to equate the 240,000,000,000 rubles to about $96,000,000,000, at an average rate of 40 cents per ruble.

The figure brings the grand total to $271,300,000,000.

FRANCE

The expenditures for national defense by the Republic of France from 1933 to the time of the armistice on June 17–18, 1940, were as follows, in francs:

| | Francs |
|---|---|
| 1933 | 12,618,000,000 |
| 1934 | 11,157,000,000 |
| 1935 | 10,270,000,000 |
| 1936 | 14,112,000,000 |
| 1937 | 21,730,000,000 |
| 1938 | 30,300,000,000 |
| 1939 | 113,672,000,000 |
| 1940 (estimate) | 249,000,000,000 |
| 1933–39 | 213,859,000,000 |
| 1933–July 1, 1940 [1] | 338,359,000,000 |

[1] In making this computation half of the total figure for 1940 has been used to obtain the figure for the whole period; the 1940 figure is therefore a very rough estimate.

This makes a total from 1933 to July 1, 1941, of 338,000,000,000 francs. The rate of exchange during those years follows:

| | Cents |
|---|---|
| 1933 | 5.0 |
| 1934 | 6.6 |
| 1935 | 6.6 |
| 1936 | 6.1 |
| 1937 | 4.0 |
| 1938 | 2.9 |
| 1939 | 2.5 |
| 1940 | 2.1 |

Converting the franc into dollars, we find the total expenditures of France amounting to about $10,000,000,000.

This brings the grand total up to $271,300,000,000 plus $10,100,000,000, or $281,400,000,000.

THREE BRITISH DOMINIONS

The war expenditures of Australia in recent years were as follows:

|---|---|
| 1939–40 | £56,000,000 |
| 1940–41 | 171,000,000 |
| 1941–42 | 320,000,000 |

This makes a total of £547,000,000. At the rate of exchange of the Australian pound, $3.22 to the dollar, the sum amounts to $1,760,000,000.

The war expenditures of New Zealand follow:

|---|---|
| 1939–40 | £7,000,000 |
| 1940–41 | 32,000,000 |
| 1941–42 | 60,000,000 |

This makes a total of £99,000,000, or $319,000,000.

The war expenditures of the Union of South Africa were as follows:

|---|---|
| 1939–40 | £4,000,000 |
| 1940–41 | 60,000,000 |
| 1941–42 | 72,000,000 |

This makes a total of £136,000,000, or (the South African pound being $3.98) $541,000,000.

Bringing together the war expenditures of Australia, New Zealand, and the Union of South Africa and adding them to the total makes a grand total of about $284,000,000.

POLAND

Poland, first victim of the overt Hitler war, had these military expenditures, in zlotys:

| | Zlotys |
|---|---|
| 1933–34 | 2,230,000,000 |
| 1934–35 | 2,300,000,000 |
| 1935–36 | 2,340,000,000 |
| 1936–37 | 2,210,000,000 |
| 1937–38 | 2,400,000,000 |
| 1938–39 | 2,500,000,000 |

This amounts to 14,000,000,000 zlotys for the period, or (as the zloty was worth about 19 cents to the dollar) $2,660,000,000.

In addition to the above expenditures for military purposes, Poland had a number of extraordinary budgets from which funds were appropriated for war ends, so that the estimate of $2,660,000,000 is conservative.

The grand total now, therefore, is $284,000,000,000 plus $2,660,000,000, or about $286,700,000,000.

THE NETHERLANDS

The fiscal year in the Netherlands is the same as the calendar year. Defense expenditures in guilders and the extraordinary credits were as follows:

| | Ordinary | Capital services |
|---|---|---|
| 1933 (provisional results) | 87,600,000 | 300,000 |
| 1934 (estimates) | 87,900,000 | 200,000 |
| 1935 (estimates) | 87,700,000 | 300,000 |
| 1936 (estimates) | 87,646,000 | 323,000 |
| 1937 (probable results) | 87,532,000 | 2,726,000 |
| 1938 (probable results) | 117,798,000 | 38,943,000 |
| 1939 (legally established) | 134,775,000 | 98,839,000 |
| 1940 (proposed) | 147,797,000 | 84,232,000 |
| Total | 838,748,000 | 225,863,000 |

In September 1938 (when the terrible menace of Hitler had become crystal clear) an extraordinary credit of 100,000,000 guilders was voted for the call to arms and another credit of 100,000,000 guilders for a supplementary budget.

On September 6, 1939, an extraordinary credit of 60,000,000 guilders was approved for the Ministry of Economic Affairs for the purchase of foodstuffs, raw materials for industries, and similar necessities in case of threatened war.

In October 1939 there were allocated 116,549,410 guilders from the book profit arising from the revaluation of the gold stock of the Bank of the Netherlands—for extraordinary expenditures.

On February 19, 1940, a bill provided 40,239,219 guilders to supplement the defense budget of 1939. Of this amount 1,548,719 guilders were allocated to the ordinary service budget and the remainder, 39,690,500 guilders, to the capital service budget.

This makes a total of 1,481,000,000 guilders or, at an average exchange rate of 60 cents, $889,000,000—bringing the grand total to $287,600,000,000.

BELGIUM

The defense expenditures of Belgium, just before Hitler overran it, were as follows, in francs:

| | Ordinary | Extraordinary |
|---|---|---|
| 1933 | 894,386,000 | 29,248,000 |
| 1934 | 862,281,000 | Not available |
| 1935 | 766,586,000 | Not available |
| 1936 | 903,508,000 | 427,450,000 |
| 1937 | 981,000,000 | 550,243,000 |
| 1938 | 1,122,000,000 | 480,000,000 |
| 1939 [1] | 1,271,000,000 | 5,000,000,000 |
| 1940 | 1,329,000,000 | [2] 5,260,000,000 |

[1] Actual mobilization expenditures September–December 1939 amounted to more than 3,000,000,000 francs.
[2] 4,810,000,000 francs for mobilization; 450,000,000 for antiaircraft defense.

This makes a total of about 20,000,000,000 francs, or about $3,400,000,000 at an average exchange rate of 17 cents per franc, bringing the total to $291,000,000,000.

NORWAY

The following were the national defense expenditures of Norway, in crowns, as the northern kingdom saw the Hitler threat becoming ever more ominous:

| | Crowns |
|---|---|
| 1936–37 | 45,800,000 |
| 1937–38 | 52,700,000 |
| 1938–39 | 53,600,000 |
| 1939–40 | 235,000,000 |

This makes a total of 387,000,000 crowns or, at the rate of 24 cents per crown, $93,000,000, bringing the grand total to $291,100,000,000.

YUGOSLAVIA AND GREECE

Military expenditures of Yugoslavia since 1938 (largely attributable to fear of the looming power of Hitler) have been as follows:

| | Dinars |
|---|---|
| 1938–39 | 2,770,000,000 |
| 1939–40 | 2,930,000,000 |
| 1940–41 | 3,870,000,000 |

As the dinar during the above period was worth about 2.3 cents, the amount in United States currency is $220,000,000.

The military expenditures of Greece, justly apprehensive of Axis incursions, follow:

| | Drachmas |
|---|---|
| 1937–38 | 5,000,000,000 |
| 1938–39 | 3,300,000,000 |
| 1939–40 | 3,600,000,000 |
| 1940–41 | 6,500,000,000 |

This makes a total of 18,400,000,000 drachmas, or about $165,000,000, the drachma during this period being worth about nine-tenths of a cent.

The war expenditures of Yugoslavia and Greece together bring the grand total to $291,500,000,000.

To this must be added about $1,500,000,000 of military expenditures by Czechoslovakia during 1933–39, bringing the grand total to $293,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, thus it will be seen that while we have been in the war for little over a year we have expended almost as much as all the combined expenditures of our allies.

Now, let no one misunderstand the point I am trying to make. God knows the dollars-and-cents cost of this war is a minor consideration compared with the cost of human suffering, privations, death, and destitution that the war has wrought, and, of course, if it takes every dollar of wealth that this country has accumulated since its beginning to bring this war to a successful conclusion, we shall spend it and spend it gladly.

Let no one claim by these comparisons that I am attempting in any way to evaluate or underestimate the efforts of valiant and courageous Russia or any other of our allies in the sacrifices they have made, and are continuing to make. Ours are to date infinitesimal when compared to theirs.

What I am trying to make crystal clear is that we have got to quit spending for nonwar essentials. Personally, I think it would be possible to cut the so-called civilian pay roll in practically every department of this Government 25 to 33⅓ percent. I think we could and should consolidate or do away entirely with hundreds of boards, bureaus, and agencies which overlap, compete with each other, and are not needed.

We all know the acute situation with respect to manpower, not only in the Army but on the farms and in the factories. Notwithstanding all of this, we see the Civil Service Commission advertising every day attractive jobs, stressing the overtime-pay features of such jobs. Only this morning there came to my desk two very interesting bulletins from the Civil Service Commission—one of them advertising for social scientists, with salaries ranging from $2,600 to $6,500 per year.

Let me call your attention briefly to this document. In black-faced type it sets out:

SOCIAL SCIENTISTS NEEDED, $2,600 TO $6,500 A YEAR (PLUS OVERTIME)

For civilian war service as head historical specialist, $6,500 a year; principal historical specialist, $5,600 a year; senior historical specialist, $4,600 a year; historical specialist, $3,800 a year; associate historical specialist, $3,200 a year; assistant historical specialist, $2,600 a year.

Now the duties of these various specialists are likewise very interesting, and I quote:

I. DUTIES

The positions to be filled from this examination involve archival and administrative records work and the preparation of studies and reports on administrative and operational subjects. Activities include collecting, selecting, analyzing, and classifying documents and records of the departments and agencies of the Federal Government. More specifically, the duties are to develop or assist in the development of plans for determining which documents and records are significant and worthy of preservation for future reference; to prepare or assist in the preparation of plans for the preservation of selected materials; to write or supervise the writing of a chronological account of the background, origins, authorizations, administrative structures, developments, activities, and other events of possible historical significance of a particular agency; or to record and describe noteworthy interagency relationships and the manner in which officials solved difficult administrative and operational problems.

And here is another one:

CROP PRODUCTION SPECIALISTS NEEDED $2,600 TO $8,000 A YEAR (PLUS OVERTIME)

For a standard workweek of 48 hours (which includes 8 hours overtime) the present rate of compensation for overtime increase the above annual salary about 21 percent of that part of the basic salary listed above not in excess of $2,900 a year, provided that such increase shall not make the aggregate compensation more than $5,000 a year.

For positions of chief crop production specialist, $8,000 a year; head crop production specialist, $6,500 a year; principal crop production specialist, $5,600 a year; senior crop production specialist, $4,600 a year; crop production specialist, $3,800 a year; associate crop production specialist, $3,200 a year; assistant crop production specialist, $2,600 a year.

Let me quote further from this very interesting document:

I. DUTIES

The duties of appointees will be to develop and administer programs in connection with the establishment and operation of research stations or establishment of plantations growing rubber or oil-producing plants. Research stations and plantations will be located principally in the South and Central American countries. Somewhat similar duties will be performed by appointees having experience with other tropical plants. These duties will involve making surveys of the country to determine the selection of proper sites, soils, and other essential factors, as well as development and maintenance of research stations and demonstration rubber or oil-producing plantations situated for the most part in remote and primitive areas. The degree of responsibility involved will depend upon the grade of position to which appointment is made.

And this is at a time when our boys overseas and our allies and civilian population might go hungry for lack of ordinary farm hands.

Mr. Chairman, I realize these are indeed small matters compared with the billions we are expending—but there must be a stopping point somewhere. My people are alarmed—they constantly inquire of me, "What is the limit?" They ask me just how far can we go in our spending? Is there a limit even for war purposes?

These are some of the questions they are asking me. As for my part, I shall vote not only to reduce the items in this bill which I think can be eliminated without hurting the effort of our Army and our Navy, and shall continue to do so as the other bills come before the Congress from time to time.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman in the course of his remarks stated that some of these agencies overlapped in their activities, duplicated their efforts. Will the gentleman give us a list of some that overlap so we will know where cuts can be made?

Mr. RIZLEY. I shall be very happy to answer the question. We have the Farm Credit Association, we have the R. A. A. C., we have the Farm Security Administration, all presumably making loans to distressed farmers and actually competing with each other. They should be consolidated and some of them eliminated entirely.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We can agree with what the gentleman says, but, of course, none of the agencies he mentions are in this bill.

Mr. RIZLEY. I appreciate that. However, the H. O. L. C. and some others are in this bill. We should eliminate them now and the others you mention when the bill comes here for consideration.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman might have included a half-dozen other agencies that are handling farm credit. The gentleman also knows that there are certain groups within the administration that want to set up a Government bank in every community to handle all of the credit for agriculture and take it away from other private institutions that might be able to handle it.

Mr. RIZLEY. I am fully aware of that.

Mr. GATHINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GATHINGS. Will the gentleman state what are the duties of some of these people to whom he has referred?

Mr. RIZLEY. Gladly. I am including in my remarks the full statement of the Civil Service Commission as to the purported duties.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Does the gentleman remember that on the 3d of February I put in the names of seven different agencies training manpower that overlapped?

Mr. RIZLEY. I recall that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Have they put out a call for psychiatrists?

Mr. RIZLEY. That may well come along soon.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, the independent offices appropriations bill covers the widest range of Government activities of any of the regular appropriation bills. I have often thought that a new Member of the House could learn more about the activities of the Federal Government by studying the hearings on this bill than those for any other appropriation bill. Between 30 and 50 agencies are ordinarily covered in the independent offices bill. The bill before us has 34.

The easy thing to do these days is to condemn unnecessary expenditures. I have done it. The easiest thing to do is to assert that there is a vast field for economy in operating on the nonessential, nondefense expenditures of the Government. All of us want to do what we can. At first blush many people reading the report of the committee or reading this bill would assume that certainly a bill which runs to over $2,000,000,000 should afford a vast field for economy. I am not entirely satisfied with the bill as reported. There are many items in the bill where some members of the subcommittee suggested far greater cuts than are evidenced in the figures reported.

There is some give-and-take in this bill, as there is in most bills. The net result was more savings than there would have been if each member of the subcommittee had insisted on his own particular version of what the cuts should be. The committee would like to have brought in a much larger total saving. I know that. But we labored against a difficult problem. Of the $2,300,000,000 in this bill, nearly 90 percent is for agencies that it is practically impossible to do much about in the midst of a war. I refer to the items for the Veterans' Administration and the Maritime Commission. The Veterans' Administration appropriation alone accounts for $887,000,000. The Maritime Commission, which is the agency that builds the ships which we need today and will need in increasing number, accounts for over $1,250,000,000. In other words, out of the $2,300,000,000 in this bill considerably more than $2,000,000,000 of it is accounted for in those two agencies alone.

The subcommittee, as the hearings show, was particularly concerned over possible overlapping of agencies. Reference has been made earlier this afternoon to interrogations I directed toward the Federal Communications Commission. It developed that the Federal Communications Commission is making examinations for the Army and Navy in the licensing of certain inspectors and operators. It was difficult to get the Federal Communications Commission to admit that was a duplication of service because they said that the Army and the Navy wanted this done and asked them to do it. At that I said: "Well, it may assist them, but it still may be a duplication of the facilities they have," and the reply was, "But we only do it for the War Department, and if we do it for them they in turn do not duplicate that examination." Then I commented, "But they may have the personnel to do it," and their answer, "They might, yes, sir."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Has the gentleman ever heard one of the employees of an administrative agency of the Government admit that their work was in duplication of that of some other agency? I should like to have the refreshing experience sometime of actually hearing somebody admit that.

Mr. CASE. Never in principle. The incident cited was about as close to it as we have come. So practical problems are involved in cutting this bill. Let us take up the Veterans' Administration for a moment. The testimony before us was that many of the hospitals are understaffed. It is difficult now to get proper personnel, doctors and nurses, to staff the veterans' hospitals as they would be normally staffed. The competition is keen by reason of wages. It is also keen because many of the nurses and the doctors would much prefer to be wearing a uniform and be on the front line today than to be in these hospitals. General Hines in fact suggested to us that it might be worthy of study by the Congress to give the Veterans' Administration the authority to set up a limited pay schedule for people doing limited duty, in order to take over some of the duties that are being slighted, perhaps, at this time.

Every member, I know, desires to have proper hospital care for every boy who comes back from the front and needs hospitalization. Not one member is urging a cut in hospital facilities. We want them ready when the Army and Navy release the boys. We cannot wait until they come. The committee was assured that the Veterans' Administration will be ready—is ready—in fact. There are about 5,000 vacant beds in Veterans' Administration hospitals at this time. General Hines testified that they have a total of about 81,000 beds, and are building to a goal of 100,000 beds which, it is believed, will be sufficient, taken in conjunction with the Army and Navy's own hospitals.

This afternoon, after the consideration of the Consent Calendar, consideration was sought of a bill which would have had the effect of admitting to the hospitals a class of veterans of the present war who are not eligible under present law. It had not been on the Calendar the required number of days, however, and will be called later. In the meantime, I hope that those of you who are interested in the problem of hospitalization will read the testimony of General Hines and the interrogations by the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZPATRICK, and other Members as well as myself on the hospitalization of men who are being discharged for physical disabilities allegedly not incurred in line of duty and existing prior to service.

On pages 243 and 244 you will find that General Hines agreed that the burden of proof ought to be on the Government where men are taken from civil life into the Army or Navy, kept there for 6 months, or a year in some cases, and then turned loose with the statement that they are being discharged for physical disability incurred prior to their induction or enlistment in the service.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] pointed out that if these men had stayed in civil life it is possible they would not have had this breakdown. General Hines, agreeing, said that you could take many strong men and put them through the rather intensive training and it would cause some of them to break. Existing law, however, does not provide for their hospitalization unless the Veterans' Administration conducts a study and makes a finding contrary to that already announced by the Army or Navy.

It was the feeling of the subcommittee that there is a definite responsibility on the part of the Government for these men, but under existing law, if the Army or the Navy discharges them and says the disability was not incurred in line of duty and existed prior to service, they are not entitled to hospitalization. I think the Committee would be glad to see that corrected by proper legislation. In the Seventy-seventh Congress we passed a bill in the House designed to take care of this situation; it died in another body. I have introduced a special bill to cover tubercular and neuro-psychiatric cases, H. R. 1453. It should be passed without delay and without a dissenting vote. A broader bill, H. R. 1749, was passed over this afternoon because it had not been on the Consent Calendar long enough and perhaps because it is so comprehensive that many Members wanted a chance to study it.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Can the gentleman tell me, inasmuch as I have not had a chance to study the hearings thoroughly, in what classification are these 5,000 empty beds? Are they NP or general medical?

Mr. CASE. They are largely general medical and domiciliary. Some of them may be NP. I cannot give the exact break-down.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Was there any testimony or discussion as to any study the Bureau may be making at this time as to the need for beds after this war, or during this war, for that matter?

Mr. CASE. Yes; there is considerable testimony on that in the hearings and I urge all Members to read it. I may say that in the Veterans' Administration item carried in the bill there are funds to add 160 NP beds at Knoxville, Iowa, and 160 NP beds at Lexington, Ky. There are also some other construction items designed to work toward the 100,000 goal that I have mentioned.

I made reference to the Maritime Commission. That is a most difficult agency to cut in any large figure under present circumstances. Statements will be made before the committee and should be made that the members of the subcommittee have grave doubt as to some of the practices of the Maritime Commission at the present time. I think we were particularly startled by the valuations that have been allowed for certain ships purchased. However, as to the basic job the Maritime Commission is doing, the providing of ships, the committee, rightfully, I think, felt that it could not do very much in reducing the amount of the Budget estimate.

It is absolutely futile to talk about building tanks and planes, and training men, and furnishing lend-lease supplies, and so forth, if we are not going to produce the ships to get them across the water where they are needed.

In the consideration of this problem of transportation, as I have heard it discussed during sessions of the House in this session, a great deal of attention has been given to the subject of air transportation, until the feeling has developed, I think, that instead of building ships we perhaps ought to be building air transports, big cargo ships. My feeling is that we should do both—each for the job that belongs to it.

There is a definite field for air transport, but testimony which has come to my attention not only on this subcommittee but in the subcommittee on War Department appropriations convinces me that there is a lot of generalized thinking on the subject of air transportation which does not consider the actual facts in the case.

Some time ago members of the War Department committee had a discussion with General Somervell, commanding Services of Supply, at which he made some general statements about the tonnage that is involved. He made the statement that in some of the theaters of operation it would take more ships to maintain a supply of gasoline and other things necessary to maintain air transportation than it would to carry the cargo in the first place. I wanted to be sure of that statement and the facts on it so I addressed a letter to him the other day and in his absence received a reply from General Styer, his executive officer, commanding, during his absence, in which General Styer stated:

I am enclosing a brief summary indicating an analysis of shipping requirements by plane and by cargo ships to four different areas.

It will be apparent from this summary that for large-scale operations to any distant area, the planes and their personnel will require so many tankers and cargo ships to supply them that these alone are greatly in excess of the ships which could carry the cargo in the first place.

Then he called attention to the fact that the commercial air lines realize this, and sent a copy of an address delivered by W. A. Patterson, president of the United Airlines, before the National Industrial Conference Board at New York last November, saying: "His remarks closely follow our thoughts." Referring to the problem of refueling for an air transport supply system to Australia of a given number of tons, in this address Mr. Patterson said:

Nearly 15,000,000 gallons of gasoline, weighing over 45,000 tons, would have to be transported to intermediate points and to Australia every 2 months by oceangoing tankers. Three such tankers would be required for this purpose so that actually 144 airplanes plus 3 tankers would be required to do the job that could be accomplished by one oceangoing freighter in the first place.

I submit in the light of testimony like that it is essential to be building ships.

The summary to which General Styer referred compares the items involved in water transportation or air transportation of 100,000 cargo tons per month from the United States to four theaters of operations. The figures are so important to clear thinking on this matter that I am placing them in the RECORD at this point under permission granted by the House.

General analysis—Airplane versus seagoing vessels

SUMMARY

SHIPMENT BY WATER TRANSPORT

| Routes | Cargo tons per month | Water route miles (statute) | Number of cargo vessels (C–1) | Fuel tons required per month | Crew personnel required |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| United States to Australia | 100,000 | 7,575 | 54 | 16,640 | 3,780 |
| United States to United Kingdom | 100,000 | 3,610 | 34 | 7,930 | 2,380 |
| United States to Alaska | 100,000 | 1,415 | 16 | 3,110 | 1,120 |
| United States to Suez | 100,000 | 14,100 | 96 | 30,950 | 6,710 |

SHIPMENT BY AIR TRANSPORT

| Routes | Air-route miles (statute) | Number of cargo planes (C–46A) | Fuel tons required per month | Crew personnel required | Number of tanker vessels required to transport aircraft fuel | Number of cargo ships required to maintain planes and personnel |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| United States to Australia | 7,565 | 6,550 | 1,012,000 | 78,500 | 228 | 69 |
| United States to United Kingdom | 3,879 | 1,900 | 295,500 | 22,500 | 52 | 20 |
| United States to Alaska | 1,505 | 563 | 105,500 | 4,150 | 9 | 2 |
| United States to Suez | 10,016 | 5,885 | 837,300 | 58,370 | 85 | 59 |

I trust the Members will study this little table. It is brief, but it gives the picture very quickly, and for illustrative purposes at this time let me mention the Australian situation again. To transport 100,000 tons to Australia by water transport would take a crew personnel of 3,780. The crew personnel for air transport would be 78,500. The fuel tons required per month would be 1,012,000 for air transport, as against 16,000 fuel tons for water transport, which would be carried by the transport itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I trust that Members will look at the figures given in this table because they are authentic, and bear mightily on the problem of air versus water transportation for a sustained operation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Why does the gentleman think that a mistake is made in the added amount of fuel that must be used in air transport rather than a water transport? It vitally affects us on the east coast. Does the gentleman think it is maladministration?

Mr. CASE. I do not quite get the connection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman stated that it would take more for air transportation than for water transportation.

Mr. CASE. I do not know that a mistake has been made. The Army is using water transportation, except for transportation of critical repair parts and matters of emergency.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In other words, the gentleman thinks that boats should be supplied.

Mr. CASE. Yes. For basic transportation, there must be water transportation for any large operation.

There are two other subjects to which I direct attention briefly. One is the subject of foreign service pay adjustment.

Some Members of Congress will be misled, I fear, by the figures in this bill, as they will by the figures in other bills on the items allowed for salaries. In this bill it shows up in two ways.

We have an item here for foreign pay adjustment of $385,000. That is the amount of money that we are appropriating to make our dollar come up to the dollar of the country in which some civilian employees of the Government are operating. I listened with interest to the statement by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] the other day about the importance of having faith in the security of United States currency. He made an inspiring speech but actually the thing that makes the dollar good throughout the world is the amount of gold behind it. The proof of that is that here we are appropriating $385,000 to bring our dollar up to par in certain countries, and this applies to the civilian employees alone. We were not given any estimate for the amount that must be appropriated to take care of pay adjustment for the officers and men of the armed forces. What I am saying is that in addition to the 10 percent allowed an officer and the 20 percent allowed an enlisted man for foreign service, an appropriation will be asked of this Congress to make up the difference between our dollar and a gold dollar for the amount of pay that is paid men while on duty in foreign countries.

There is another way in which this bill and other bills at the present time are not revealing as to the full pay bill of the country. They do not include estimates for the amount of money that must be appropriated to take care of the pay increases granted in the bill passed last December. Under that bill it will be recalled a 10-percent increase was ordered on fixed salaries up to $2,900, and time and a half pay was ordered for every hour above 40 hours where payment is on an hourly basis. Time and a half above 40 hours on a 48-hour week means that for that additional 8 hours you pay for 12 hours of time. That 12 hours is 30 percent of 40.

So, to find out the true Federal pay bill, today, you want to add about 30 percent. Your error will be only for the portion of salaries over $2,900. That will be true up to the expiration of this temporary raise of pay which I believe is the last of April.

There is pending before the Congress legislation designed to establish a permanent pay increase, and I hope these facts will be kept in mind when that comes before us. Remember, we are going to have estimates come in deficiency bills to add to the pay appropriations in this bill and in all other bills thus far presented by approximately 30 percent. There has been an increase in time of 20 percent at least. The President, as the gentleman from Massachusetts pointed out, in approving the pay bill, recommended that the agencies seek to absorb much of this additional cost by cutting down personnel, pointing that they were receiving an increase in personnel.

They will receive approximately 20 percent additional time if the agency is working on a 40-hour basis. On a 44-hour basis they will get 4 additional hours, which would be one-eleventh, or approximately 9 percent. If the experience of our committee is any criterion, however, few of the agencies are making any effort to follow the President's suggestion. All of them but one, I think, told us there would be a supplementary request to meet the deficiency caused by the increase in the pay scales.

Members of the House find it easy to talk about cutting these bills, but I hope they will remember that the responsibility for increases rests upon every Member of the House when he votes for or permits pay increase bills to go through on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PRIEST].

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Chairman, since the pending bill makes provision for the continued operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, I deem it to be in order at this time to give to the House some figures which I believe should be of the greatest interest to the people of the United States.

The figures covering power operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority vindicate the wisdom of Congress in 1933 in establishing T. V. A. as a Government corporation with wide powers and discretion to carry on a comprehensive conservation program.

While the figures relate to the financial success of the T. V. A. in the generation, transmission, and sale of electric power to consumers in six States in the Southeast, I do not want to leave the impression that this is a story of financial success only. The Nation is reaping dividends in many other ways from the investment in the Tennessee Valley. Some of the dividends are in the form of fighting and bombing planes now in action on fronts all over the world, constructed of aluminum which might never have been manufactured in the present proportions except for T. V. A.; some of the dividends are in the form of water transport on a new navigation channel, relieving the wartime load on other forms of transportation; some are in greater quantities of food produced on soils enriched by phosphorus; others are in munitions ingredients produced for the armed forces.

The Tennessee Valley Authority was established in 1933, and it is now rounding out a decade of service. During that decade, in addition to its many other activities, the Authority has built up one of the largest power systems in the country, producing nearly half as much power as the entire United States in World War No. 1. Based on the water resources of the Tennessee River and its tributaries, this system has brought the benefits of low-cost power to half a million consumers.

The Federal investment has paid not only in terms of economic betterment but financially as well. From June 11, 1933, when power operations of T. V. A. commenced, up through December 31, 1942, T. V. A.'s gross power revenues have amounted to a total of $89,393,000. After provision for all power expenses, there remained $44,000,000 representing funds paid into the United States Treasury and reappropriated by Congress. Of this amount $21,683,000 consisted of provisions for depreciation and amortization of acquisition adjustments and $22,319,000 of net income. Thus the Authority has paid back to the people of the United States more than 14½ percent of the $300,883,000 invested in T. V. A. power facilities at the close of 1942.

Moreover, much of the decade of T. V. A. operations was necessarily devoted to building up the system and the market, and most of the revenues required to make this showing have been received in the last 3½ years; thus, gross power revenues received since July 1, 1939, total $77,154,000.

It has sometimes been charged that power operations of the Authority have been successful only because a part of the investment in the system of multipurpose dams had been allocated to navigation and flood control. The figures dispose of that contention. The navigation and flood-control investments can stand on their own feet; the benefits that are being achieved are sufficient justification. But it is interesting to note that the $44,000,000 in depreciation funds and net income so far returned to the Government from the power program is sufficient to absorb the net expenses of the flood-control and navigation programs, totaling $4,603,000 before depreciation charges, and to pay back to the Treasury almost 9½ percent of the $416,063,000 investment in all three programs.

The Authority at present is operating 16 generating stations, including both hydro and steam, and is producing and selling power at the rate of nearly 10,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually; and this output, due to the continually increasing demands of war, will soon be greater than ever. It is selling power to 83 municipal and 45 cooperative electric systems which have invested more than $100,000,000 in electric facilities. Through these systems T. V. A. power reaches more than half a million residential, rural, commercial, and industrial customers who save—those who had electric service prior to T. V. A.—more than $9,500,000 annually, as compared to their former rates. Home users of electricity use more than 1,500 kilowatt-hours a year on the average, or 50 percent more than the average for the Nation; and they pay about 2 cents per kilowatt-hour on the average, or about 45 percent less than the 3.7-cent-per-kilowatt-hour average for the Nation. And selling power at rates substantially below the national level, the municipalities and cooperatives purchasing power wholesale from the Authority are showing substantial net incomes annually on their over-all, combined operations.

The results, I believe, establish the T. V. A. as an efficient, flexible, going business organization. Its development as such an organization has its roots in its charter as a Government corporation, the T. V. A. Act, which, in the words of President Roosevelt in 1933, established it as an agency "clothed with the power of government but possessed of the flexibility and initiative of a private enterprise."

In other words, the T. V. A. was set up—so far as its power operations were concerned—on a business basis, in a position to adapt itself quickly to altered circumstances, make expenditures as needed to preserve its reliability of service, and to meet extraordinary conditions as they arose in the course of serving with electricity an area as large as England. One of the most important considerations in this connection is the fact that the Authority has had full use of its power revenues to meet its current expenses, a freedom which is recognized as essential to any business enterprise, public or private.

One of the best measures of business efficiency is the ability to meet unexpected or emergency situations in stride, and the T. V. A. provides several examples. I touched on one of these examples earlier when I mentioned that planes are now in action over north Africa, Europe, and the South Pacific, which might not now be in the air if it had not been for the ability of T. V. A. to supply electricity for the manufacture of aluminum. This is true of other war materials also.

Everyone will recall that during 1941 power demands were mounting because the national defense program then was getting into full swing. More aluminum, more planes, more of everything was being demanded. And at the same time, one of the worst droughts of all time descended upon the Southeast, cutting down the power production of hydro projects throughout the area. One of the hardest hit private hydro systems was that serving one of the largest aluminum mills in the country in the Southeast area.

Privately owned public-utility systems were likewise hard hit. Into this breach stepped T. V. A., an agency of the Federal Government. I do not mean to say that the T. V. A. promptly produced all the electricity that was needed out of its own plants. It did, due to the conservative estimates of its power engineers, have a considerable reserve which it could, and did, utilize to keep aluminum plants, producers of ships' boilers, and many other defense plants in full production.

But, beyond that, it was able to act as a balance wheel, a clearing house for power, which was able to integrate the power resources of a tremendous region that extended far outside of the Southeast. It happens that many of the surrounding utility systems generate their power largely by steam, as contrasted to hydroelectric generation and this enables them to facilitate the most efficient use of the total power-generating resources over a large area. When the load falls off on a steam system, plants must reduce their output because there is no use for the power they can produce. T. V. A., however, was able to take the power produced during the so-called off-peak hours, at night and over week ends, and use it on its own system; at the same time, it reduced generation at its own hydro plants, saving the water—and hence the energy—that otherwise would have been used. To do this, interconnections with utilities were used to the limit, new interconnections were established, power was interchanged from system to system, and power was purchased.

And by these means the T. V. A. was able over the period of a year to supply an average of 140,000 kilowatts of continuous power to a single large aluminum plant over and above the amounts it was obligated under its long-term contracts to supply. It was able not only to provide power to keep the existing plant running at capacity, but to supply power for new plants and plant expansions. By skillful operation, by assisting in making the most of every available source of power, by taking advantage of every opportunity, the Authority was able to assume a key role in supplying wartime industrial power during a period of crisis.

The industrial demand for power to produce war goods continues to rise. In the fiscal year 1941, T. V. A. sold 1,809,000,000 kilowatt-hours of power to large industries; in the following year, 2,410,000,000 kilowatt-hours; and in the first 6 months of the current fiscal year, 1,926,000,000 kilowatt-hours. Industrial demands on the municipal and cooperative systems likewise are on the increase. In the fiscal year 1941 such agencies sold 1,215,000,000 kilowatt-hours, and in the 12 months ending last November, 1,544,000,000 kilowatt-hours. Further drastic increases are in the offing, and T. V. A. is preparing to meet them on schedule by construction of new plants and storage reservoirs on schedules unheard of a few years ago.

Here is a record of achievement on the part of a Government agency of which every American can feel proud. Not only are we getting the power and more power that we need to produce the war materials to whip the Axis, but we are getting it on a business basis from an agency that is not only paying its own way but in fact is making substantial returns to the Federal Treasury. T. V. A. was set up with the essential freedom of initiative of a private business enterprise and, from any angle, the results have fully justified that course.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] may extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, one very vital problem that continues to receive a super abundance of lip service and a negligible amount of action is the farm-labor problem. Unless something is done soon by Government authorities who are empowered to act, this country and our allies face a critically serious shortage of food. So much has been said on this subject that most of us are getting tired of hearing about it, but the fact remains that the situation is desperate, little has been done about it, and we must have an ample supply of food to win this war.

This subject is of immediate interest to representatives from every agricultural State in the country. The State of California, in which my district is located, is the producer of a larger variety of farm crops than any other State and consequently encounters a greater variety of farm manpower problems. However, the farm labor shortage question is serious no matter where it is found and a sound solution is necessary for the welfare of farmers throughout the Nation.

In discussing farming and farm labor requirements it is well to remember that there are a lot of farmers in the country who are engaged in growing many farm products other than the so-called basic commodities. Fruits and vegetables, poultry, dairy products and many other food items are all a part of our modern diet and highly essential from a standpoint of nutrition and health. We cannot live properly on a diet of cotton, corn, wheat, rice, and tobacco. We have got to have our vitamins.

Last fall the Secretary of Agriculture issued a statement to the country in which he outlined 1943 production goals for winter and spring vegetable crops. The Secretary stated that—

> The goals are designed to bring about increases in production of vegetables of most value in the wartime diet and are aimed toward substantial shifts away from less essential crops.

Particular emphasis has been placed on the value of certain vegetable crops. A substantial percentage of increase is requested for some while others are to be produced at approximately the 1942 levels. The Department release then went on to point out—

That at least a part of the land which ordinarily would be used for producing such crops as cantaloupes, cucumbers, cauliflower, eggplant, watermelons, bleached celery, head lettuce, green peppers, asparagus, and artichokes, should now be shifted to crops more essential to the wartime diet.

The Department further said that measures would be taken to assist farmers who are engaged in producing the so-called essential crops to obtain transportation, labor, fertilizer, containers and other production supplies. However, no such assurance is given to the producers of the crops which have been designated as less essential. In fact, the Department stated it could not assist with the production or marketing of the less essential winter vegetable crops.

Mr. Chairman, the farmers in the United States are patriotic enough to get squarely behind any sound and carefully thought out program that will guarantee maximum production of necessary foodstuffs. However, they need more specific information than has been made available so far and they need it immediately. The planting season for numerous winter and spring crops is already well under way in certain sections of the country.

If the Secretary of Agriculture is prepared to state what percentage of increase is required for certain crops he should also inform the farmers as to the percentage of decrease that is demanded in others. The farmer is no mind reader and he knows from long experience that the Department of Agriculture is notoriously slow in announcing various phases of its annual farm program. If we are to avoid a very serious shortage of food products, this is one time when the Department cannot afford to be too late with too little—information.

Definite steps toward the procurement of an adequate supply of farm labor for 1943 is one assurance that the farmers must have if they are to come anywhere near meeting production goals. Regardless of what claims are made by Government experts, who are supposed to know, I can say, from personal observation and experience, that there was a definite shortage of agricultural labor in California in 1942. This was due primarily to an inexcusable lack of foresight and planning on the part of the various Government departments most directly concerned.

Many of you will recall that when the President returned from his swing through the western United States he mentioned the fact that certain crops had been saved only because businessmen had closed their establishments and gone into the fields to help with the harvest. Mr. Chairman, that happened not once but many times in the district I represent. If it had not been for the patriotic efforts of men and women from every walk of life, for the school children, and even the voluntary efforts of men in the Army and Navy, I hesitate to think of the amount of vital foodstuffs that would have gone to waste.

Are we to be faced with a similar situation during the coming year, or will the Government get busy and make obtainable a sufficient supply of labor at a wage that will permit the farmer to harvest his crops at a reasonable profit? If ever stabilization of wages was needed, it is on the farm front. Farm producers simply cannot compete with the wages paid by defense industries and remain in business. It will undoubtedly surprise many of you to learn that farm workers in California have been demanding and have received wages that run as high as a dollar an hour—and that is no fairy tale; it is an absolute fact.

Members of the California congressional delegation have been working on the farm labor shortage problem for well over a year. I find in my file correspondence with various supposedly interested Government agencies dating back to November 1941. In response to a flood of desperate communications from farmers and farm organizations who realized what was coming, some of us began urging the proper Federal departments to take the preliminary steps that would be necessary in order to import Mexican farm workers.

We met with representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the United States Employment Service, as well as the Lend-Lease Administration and the War and Navy Departments, all of whom are, or at least should be, interested in insuring an orderly harvest of food crops for our civilian population and our armed forces and our allies.

What happened? Well, frankly, not much, for a long time. I guess most of the officials we talked to come from Missouri. They certainly had to be shown. They would not take the advice of Members of Congress from farm districts or from farm organizations who know what they are talking about. They investigated for months, and a lot of the investigating must have been done by persons who did not know their business.

In order to point out just exactly what I mean, Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent I intend to insert a letter which I received from John J. Corson, Director of the United States Employment Service, in October 1942. It follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD,
Washington, D. C., October 22, 1942.

Hon. JOHN Z. ANDERSON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ANDERSON: This is in reply to your letter of October 14 requesting information on the steps that have been taken to date to insure an adequate supply of Mexican labor for 1942 and 1943 and further requesting information as to when the importation of Mexican labor was first taken under consideration and the successive steps that were followed before the Mexicans were brought across the border.

In regard to your first question as to the steps taken to date to insure an adequate supply of Mexican labor for 1942 and 1943 the United States Employment Service has certified to an importation of 3,000 Mexicans for California for the 1942 season. These workers have been primarily employed in the sugar-beet industry and it is contemplated that they will be used in other agricultural pursuits as soon as this activity is completed. If work is available it is our intention to renew their contracts in order that they may be fully employed as long as there is need for their services. If it becomes necessary to import additional Mexican workers for the 1943 season and funds are available to take care of required expenses such as transportation, a further certification will be made for additional workers. As you know the Mexican Government has reserved the right to designate numbers of workers that may be recruited in Mexico and areas in which they may be obtained. The 1943 program for use of Mexican workers will be predicated upon need, availability of workers in Mexico, and availability of funds with which to finance any necessary importation of workers.

In response to your second question I am very happy to review for you the successive steps that were followed before the first Mexicans were brought into California.

1. On May 15 the United States Employment Service certified to the Immigration and Naturalization Service to an immediate need for the importation of 3,000 Mexicans into California.

2. Prior to allowing this importation various governmental agencies indicated that there was a need for deevlopment of standards to prevent the recurrence of conditions which prevailed as a result of Mexicans being brought into the United States during the last World War. Accordingly a committee was established by the War Manpower Commission composed of representatives from War Manpower Commission, Department of Agriculture, Department of State, Department of Labor, Immigration and Naturalization Service, United States Employment Service, and others.

3. Standards thus developed were submitted through the State Department to the Mexican Government with a proposal that available Mexican workers be allowed to come into the United States for agricultural employment.

4. Before action was taken on the above request representatives of the Department of Agriculture contacted Mexican officials in Mexico City and signed an agreement containing certain definite specifications relative to the importation and use of Mexican workers. Included in this agreement were regulations governing the employment of these workers, conditions of employment, and guarantees.

5. After this agreement was completed the United States Employment Service certified to the Department of Justice that the available domestic labor supply had been exhausted and that there was need for the importation of 1,500 Mexican workers to assist in the harvesting of the sugar-beet crop in California.

6. On September 23 the United States Employment Service again certified as to the need for an additional 1,500 Mexican workers for California.

7. The first group of these workers arrived in California on September 29. The Farm Security Administration reports that all of the 3,000 workers for which certification was made have now arrived in California and are employed in the sugar-beet harvest.

The United States Employment Service early last summer recognized the possible need for additional agricultural workers in California to supplement the number available in this country. We have, as a consequence, worked diligently to recruit all men and women in this country who were available for this work. As it has become apparent that this supply would not suffice we have certified to the need for Mexican workers. While there has been less labor available than in previous years when a surplus of manpower was characteristic of the times, we have as yet encountered no evidence that would indicate that essential crops cannot be harvested if all available manpower and womanpower is used to its fullest capacity.

Very sincerely yours,

JOHN J. CORSON, Director.

Mr. Chairman, now let us just look briefly at what this letter discloses. In response to my first inquiry Mr. Corson says, among other things, that—

> The 1943 program for use of Mexican workers will be predicated upon need, availability of workers in Mexico, and availability of funds with which to finance any necessary importation of workers.

Well, the need is great, there is no evidence that workers are not available in large numbers in Mexico and certainly Congress will grant the necessary funds. Let us have some action from the Government agencies whose job it is to handle the program.

In response to my second question Mr. Corson outlines the successive steps that were followed before the first Mexicans were imported in 1942.

First. The need for importing Mexican workers was first certified on May 15, 1942, almost 6 months after members of the California delegation first requested this type of assistance.

Second, third, and fourth. All of these preliminary steps could have been taken early in 1942 instead of letting them go until the need was acute.

Fifth. A belated certification of 1,500 workers after crops had already spoiled in some areas because of a labor shortage.

Sixth. More of the same.

Seventh. Note particularly that the first group of workers arrived on September 29, 1942—over 4 months after their need had been certified and almost 10 months after some of the California congressional delegation had gone to work on the matter. Talk about procrastination and delay—this is the sort of thing that drives the American farmer to distraction.

Mr. Chairman, we are constantly being told by supposedly well informed Government officials that there was no serious loss of food crops because of a farm labor shortage in 1942. Such statements are not supported by the facts. Following are some estimates of crop losses in California as compiled by the California Farm Bureau Federation. These figures are beyond the normal discard of unmarketable products.

Apricots, 3,000 dry tons, or 15 percent loss; peaches, 20,000 fresh tons, or 5 percent loss; tomatoes, 200,000 tons, or 25 percent loss; peas, 25 percent loss; asparagus, 3,700 acres, or 20 percent of crop; cherries, 30 percent loss; sugar beets, 7,000 to 9,000 acres lost in spring, due to lack of labor and 10 percent loss in harvest; dairy, 5 percent loss over 1941 despite attempted 10 percent increase in production—slaughter of dairy cows 46 percent above normal; vegetables, approximately 10 percent loss in both planting and harvesting; cotton, at least 20 percent loss.

Those are just a few of the losses, in one State. I wonder what the actual totals are for the entire Nation. How can anyone tell us that such losses have not had a serious effect on the supply of food commodities to our civilian population and our armed forces?

We are now entering on what may well be the most critical war year this country has ever faced. Our farmers have been asked to raise more food than they have ever produced before. What assurance can we give them that their crops will be harvested after they are planted? Do we continue to muddle our way through or can we expect some forthright and constructive action on the part of our Federal administrators?

Here's a suggested program:

First. Guarantee every farmer a price for his produce that will give him cost of production at least. Many farmers produced their crops at an absolute loss last year.

Second. Stabilize farm wages. Agriculture cannot successfully compete with war industries.

Third. Assure our farm producers that they will be able to obtain at least a minimum supply of farm machinery for planting, growing, and harvesting their crops.

Fourth. Guarantee the farmer enough rubber and gasoline to carry out his production program and in the name of common sense relieve him of the burden of filling out such a vast number of complicated forms and applications.

Fifth. Insure an adequate supply of trained and qualified workers for the canning, processing, packing, and storage plants that must handle and prepare the farmers' produce for market. What useful purpose is served in growing and harvesting crops if they are lost before they reach the final consumer because of a lack of manpower or facilities somewhere along the line?

Sixth. Give careful consideration to the following farm labor program which has been suggested by the California Farm Bureau Federation:

(a) Deferment from draft of all trained farm workers.

(b) Complete reorganization of Farm Placement Service in order to eliminate as much as possible all competition between individuals within an industry and also competition between industries for men and women.

(c) Development of a housing program that will allow for a maximum utilization of present facilities on a farm, which can be converted for essential housing, and development of a project for making movable or permanent housing of new construction type available.

(d) Development of a coordinated transportation program to enable workers to be at locations of need during periods of peak labor load.

(e) Creation of program that will keep each worker producing on a minimum of 6 days per week. Farm labor is now working less than 4 days per week per person.

(f) Creation of coordinated program for placing volunteer labor groups, such as members of the Y. M. C. A. school groups, women's volunteer groups, business and other groups.

(g) Placing the production of food necessary for war purposes on a patriotic basis, so that a desire is created within each individual to produce to his maximum ability.

(h) Definite recruitment program to obtain labor in other areas of the United States.

(i) Importation of Mexican labor, preferably those trained in and obtained from agricultural areas in Mexico.

(j) Authorization of Farm Placement Service to transport workers from other States, within the State and from Mexico.

(k) Adjustment of laws within States that forbid recruitment of labor from outside of the State in order to allow maximum utilization of all labor where needed.

We can have an increase in farm crops this year, only if the above facts are not neglected.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I was very much interested in your statement of sugar-beet production. I just came from my district and I find that they have cut the tonnage allowance to about $1.50 a ton in the Ohio area. The farmers tell me they cannot produce them for that amount, and will not plant them; so we will be short of sugar. The best figures I could find show that even with a favorable growing year we cannot expect more than 85 percent of the production of last year in essential food crops. The unofficial estimate is that a million dollars' worth of soy beans in my district was lost this year.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I would say in response to the gentleman from Ohio that I will be tremendously surprised if we are able to produce 85 percent of last year's food crops. I have mentioned the situation as it affects our own State, because I am more familiar with it. Had it not been for an equable growing season and a fine season for harvesting, our losses would have been much larger than the figures I quoted earlier in my remarks.

Mr. CLEVENGER. The county agent writes me this morning that there are 47 fertile farms without an operator. There are 15 to 35 acres on many fertile farms without production. In my mail there are three instances where the last operator has been drafted from his farm for military service.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I think all of us are getting the same type of complaint from every district in the United States.

Mr. CLEVENGER. We want to win, but if we denude these farms, who is going to feed the boys over there?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. We cannot win unless we are able to feed our armed forces.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I would feed them on nightingales' tongues if that is what they want and we could get them, but I want them at least to have beans, bacon, and beef.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS. In addition to the facts you have given, have we not had two or three extremely favorable growing years?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. That is correct.

Mr. PHILLIPS. All the farmers in your district know that that cannot continue. Therefore we are facing probably an unfavorable year, which has not been taken into consideration by the Department.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Those matters certainly are not being taken into consideration by the Department, because nothing concrete has been proposed to insure us that we will have enough labor to harvest our crops.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, one of the great bottlenecks in the defense effort at this time is the efforts of a lot of these civilian agencies to do things that do not need to be done and which do not contribute to the war effort.

The other day I called attention to a magazine known as Victory. They have already printed 450,000 copies of it, according to a press release, and they are going to print 540,000 more in various languages for distribution as propaganda in foreign countries. This is a ridiculous magazine, made up almost entirely of propaganda—propaganda of a local, domestic, political character here in this country. It is something that should not be printed by any governmental agency. It is absolutely ridiculous for us to print a book weighing 13 ounces and send it across the water at a time when the boys cannot be sent their local papers or cigarettes or anything of that kind, and at a time when I have a communication here from the War Ballot Commission in New York stating that the War Department proposed that the ballots be sent in bulk to prevent divulging of any military information concerning the whereabouts of soldiers:

> This met with our hearty approval and we prepared the ballots and booklets required under the law only to be met with the refusal to ship the ballots. The excuse given us was that it would take up shipping space needed for war purposes. In our answer we called attention to the fact that these bulk shipments would be going to diversified posts and camps and the amounts of ballots shipped to any one would be small in number, with the possible exception of those in England and France.

But they would not send them. Those ballots were not anything like the 402 tons that the 2 editions of this magazine, with all its cheap political propaganda, weighed.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Do I identify the magazine as the one on the table printed in three or four colors?

Mr. TABER. I am afraid the gentleman is in error when he says three or four colors; there are a good many more than that.

Mr. KNUTSON. Whose picture appears there?

Mr. TABER. That is part of the fourth-term propaganda.

Mr. GIFFORD. Read what he promises.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has he not a message for us?

Mr. TABER—

> Liberty under God.
> That is what Franklin D. Roosevelt promises the United States of America to insure for the future of all mankind on the foundation of the "four freedoms" of speech, of worship, from want, and from fear. This future will be built and forever maintained.

But he says nothing whatever about giving the freedom or the right of a man to work, or the right of a man to go out and make something of himself as generations of Americans have loved to do for years and years.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is the message, the one the gentleman just read, which compensated for the cigarettes it displaced in the shipments.

Mr. TABER. I am glad there is somebody who feels that this outfit has a proper apology for existence. The gentleman feels that these neutral countries can be satisfied with propaganda. That is something I should hate to espouse.

Mr. KNUTSON. It should be very popular over in China.

Mr. TABER. Where they are getting nothing.

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; well, yes.

Mr. TABER. Except bald statements.

Mr. CASE. As the gentleman was reading that statement I thought I saw a full page picture of the Vice President.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman did.

Mr. CASE. I think on the opposite side there is a message from him. Will the gentleman read that also?

Mr. TABER. I do not know; I naturally expect so. There is his picture, and this picture is in different colors from the other picture. That is one of the documents. You know this is the same outfit which last fall was going to teach some 30,000,000 pulp writers—what they are I do not know—how to write love stories, this O. W. I.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Were any copies of this magazine printed for the Mohammedans?

Mr. TABER. I do not know.

Mr. CLEVENGER. There are some 300,000,000 of them in that area.

Mr. TABER. I should not be surprised to learn that they were.

Then they put out another magazine known as Negroes and the War. This magazine is something like 50 pages in size and most of it is devoted to political propaganda and to building up certain Negroes who have taken an active part in New Deal propaganda. Six pages out of the 50 are devoted to the Negro himself and his effort in the war. This is rather a large order. I expect this individual copy of this mazagine must weigh at least 10 ounces, and I understand it is going to be given general distribution.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is that going to be sent abroad, too, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. TABER. I do not know; I should not be surprised; at any rate, it will be distributed under penalty mail if it is distributed in this country and will tend to protect the deficit of the Post Office Department.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. This is butchering time on the American farms, the time when they butcher hogs and cattle and process them. Is there a recipe in there on how to make "globaloney"?

Mr. TABER. That has been made already.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, that has been made?

Mr. TABER. That has been made. What is the use of telling how to make it after it has been made?

There is a peculiar thing about these books that come from this organization. They issue a press release—I have it here—stating that they have printed 450,000 copies in English and that they are going to run 450,000 in different languages to send to Europe, but the next day the head of the organization comes out in the newspapers and states that they are printing only 230,000. This press release that I have here is dated February 4. So, within 2 or 3 days they are as far apart as the four winds on the number they are going to print.

I have called attention to this as one of the organizations that is providing bottlenecks. I understand they have secured a great number of deferments from the draft for these young fellows who are doing the writing for them. They have to be protected. It is such an important activity that that is necessary. I understand, though, that the War Department is not satisfied.

I have in my office a magazine known as Battle Neck, gotten out by the Bureau of Ordnance, and in that thing there is not a single article that would tend to help in any way the production of war material. A letter has been sent out by the Chief of Ordnance telling the contractors of the War Department that they ought to subscribe to that magazine.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. Many of these people have felt that they had to subscribe to the magazine, but there is absolutely nothing in it. "Battle Neck" is another "bottleneck."

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Referring back to this question involving the magazine Victory, my attention has been called today to a project that they have under way down there to publish a daily newspaper here in Washington to be sent out all over the country, another propaganda sheet. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. TABER. No; but I intend to do what I can to see that they do not get any more money for it.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Whereas the War Production Board claims it has the responsibility for curtailing newsprint use to civilians, nevertheless they blandly tell us that they have no authority to curtail the Office of War Information use or that of any other Government department.

Mr. TABER. It is about time that somebody had some authority. I think this House has the authority and I hope that the House will exercise it when it gets down to things.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman write the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures and ask him to look into this matter? I think it would get sympathetic attention.

Mr. TABER. I think that should be done. I would hope, though, that he might read the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman has made a very interesting statement. I wish he would show, however, that the items he complains of are not in this present bill.

Mr. TABER. Oh, they are not in this bill, but general debate is not confined to this bill here. I admit that I am going outside the pale of this bill, but these things are so outstanding in their absurdity and ridiculousness that I feel the attention of the Congress ought to be called to them.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does the gentleman get my point? Will he write a letter requesting the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures to look into this matter?

Mr. TABER. Surely.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the orderly procedure.

Mr. TABER. Surely, I will do that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then it will get sympathetic attention, will it?

Mr. TABER. I hope so. Such things never have, but I would hope it might.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. One of my fellow Members has just called my attention to a copy of this Victory magazine. I notice on page 18 a picture of both the President and his wife at their country home estate in my district. It also includes the little dog, Falla. He is there, too. Is this to be sent abroad? Are a million copies of it to be sent abroad?

Mr. TABER. I understand it was all sent abroad. What they would do with 450,000 copies abroad I do not know, in these neutral countries especially.

Mr. FISH. Naturally I am only too glad that my district have this publicity and inasmuch as this charming picture was taken in my district, I am wondering just where these appropriations come from to send this out. I would like to report it back to my own constituents.

Mr. TABER. The appropriation was for the Office for Emergency Management, as I remember it, with an allocation to the Office of War Information. It was thought at the time that we reduced the appropriation we were going to eliminate propaganda involving things in this country and confine it entirely to suitable propaganda in connection with the war effort, not to gorgeous, high-costing documents such as this.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman means to say that the money for this propaganda comes out of the taxpayers' pockets?

Mr. TABER. Certainly it comes out of the taxpayers; so does the money for this propaganda come out of the taxpayers.

Mr. FISH. What can the Congress do to put an end to this New Deal propaganda?

Mr. TABER. The only way we can put an end to it is to refuse to give them any more money.

Mr. FISH. Can we get a vote on that later?

Mr. TABER. Not on this bill. We will get a vote later on though.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman mentioned another magazine entitled "The Negro and the War" and he specifically said, which is correct, that out of 36 pages only the last 6 pages referred to the war.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Does this propaganda also come out of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman know how many of these magazines are sent out to the colored people of America?

Mr. TABER. I have not the slightest idea, but I intend to find out before I get through.

Mr. FISH. This is an entirely different magazine.

Mr. TABER. This is one for circulation in this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. This is an entirely different method of propaganda. The other magazine, Victory, went abroad, but this is circulated to the colored people in America.

Mr. TABER. That is right. This is pure propaganda.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman know how many thousands or millions of these are being sent out?

Mr. TABER. I understand a very large number are being sent out, but I have no definite information as to the number.

Mr. FISH. I hope to speak tomorrow on this magazine, because I regard it as an insult to all the colored people. The very first sentence reads as follows:

> Some Negro Americans say that it makes no difference who wins the war.

To my mind, that is a reflection on the Americanism and the patriotism of all Americans of colored blood.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman and I know that the colored people of America are among the most patriotic of any group. I do not think any writer has any business to put out such a statement as that.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. May I say that the interesting colloquy between my two friends suggests the fact that the publication and the speech we are to hear tomorrow look as if we are going to have a contest as to who can do the most propagandizing of the Negro?

Mr. TABER. That may be, but it ought not to be done on false representations by a department with public money.

Mr. FISH. And it ought not to be done by any attacks on the patriotism or loyalty or Americanism of the Negro.

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. FISH. To me that is the stupidest kind of propaganda.

Mr. TABER. I am hopeful that something may be done to stop a lot of this propaganda and stop a lot of the things that are hampering and impeding the war effort.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT].

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUFFETT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. May I say in furtherance of what the gentleman from New York has just said in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] that I have today introduced a resolution calling for an exhaustive inquiry into the whole question of the printing situation in this country, within the Government as well as without the Government.

O. P. A. IS THE ROAD TO DESPOTISM

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, the people whom I have the honor to represent here are ordinary average Americans of every race and creed. They understand plain facts and simple truths. It is in their language that I want to place before the House the danger of slavery and despotism that faces America today—not from without but from within.

American boys are dying all over the world today, in every land and on every sea, in the name of freedom. But if that freedom is lost at home their sacrifice will have been in vain. They will have been betrayed by their own people, behind their backs. No tragedy could be greater for both.

We hear today a great outpouring of words and flowery phrases about freedom. But I believe this House is seeking the facts, as opposed to the delusions of grandeur associated with the setting up of milk routes in the Fiji Islands. The facts are that never in the history of America have our citizens found their daily lives so restricted by their Government as today. There are a lot of wordy excuses for these commands and edicts eliminating liberty of action. And for every restriction that is decreed, there is a soothing alibi.

The administration, through the O. P. A., is conducting a great experiment in price fixing, with the noble objective of preventing inflation. The O. P. A.

cannot prevent inflation, because rising prices are the result and not the cause of inflation. Rising prices are a brake against inflation, because they inform the people that the economic machinery is out of gear. You cannot prevent the passage of time by stopping your watch, and neither can you stop the course of inflation by fixing prices. The effect is about the same as disconnecting the speedometer on your car as you start down a steep hill. If you would watch the disconnected speedometer and not use the brakes, you would have a smash-up. Price-fixing schemes which ignore the natural economic laws will inevitably lead to a similar crack-up.

In a problem of this magnitude I would rather have my path lighted by the lamp of experience than by the clever logic of bright-witted new dealers, whose every economic experiment for 10 long years, a full decade, has been a failure. The O. P. A. is a reasonable facsimile of the former holder of the price-fixing championship of the world—the Law of the Maximum in France during the French Revolution. Let me give you a summary of that law and what happened.

First, the price of each article of necessity was fixed at one and one-third its price in 1790. Second, all freight costs were added at a fixed rate per league. Third, 5 percent was added for the profit of the wholesaler. Fourth, 10 percent was added for the profit of the retailer. Nothing could look more reasonable, and great was the jubilation in France. What happened?

The first result of the maximum was that every means was taken to evade the fixed price imposed, and the farmers brought in as little produce as they possibly could. This increased the scarcity of food, and the people of the large cities were put on an allowance. Tickets—ration cards—were issued authorizing the bearer to obtain at the official prices a certain amount of bread or sugar or soap or wood or coal to cover immediate requirements.

I could go on at length to describe the results of the law of the maximum. Let me summarize by advising you that it did not keep prices down. It imposed strict penalties, even death, but it simply resulted in the wholesale demoralization of society. Why? Because it attempted to evade and thwart the law of supply and demand.

But you say our case is different because we are at war. It was said in France that price-fixing penalties were made necessary by the war then going on. They had the same sickness, and they were given the same patent medicine.

The administration will not face this problem honestly. Double talk solves nothing. A few days ago Mr. Byrnes explained a 48-hour week order, terming it a measure to prevent inflation. Nothing could be further from the truth, indicates an editorial of the New York Times, dated February 11, 1943. The Times said, and I quote:

> And far from preventing inflation, it (the 48-hour week order) is the most inflationary single positive step that the administration has yet taken.

Confusing and tricking the American people during their hour of trial is a tragic misuse of power.

The American people are told they must now prepare for huge casualties of our youth. Their diet of blood and tears must not be paralleled by a domestic menu composed of alibis, lullabies, and hushabies. Truth and frankness are vitamins necessary to freedom.

The great disaster of France's O. P. A. was not economic, although that calamity was tragic enough. The greatest loss was the moral and spiritual chaos that resulted from these "crackpot" schemes. Speculation, black markets, gambling, and dishonesty were rampant. Corruption, greed, and cheating of all kinds resulted, and the people lost faith in the honesty of one another and of the Government as well.

Mr. Chairman, that is the history of the O. P. A. of an earlier day. Today it is apparent we are moving down that same road. I say it is time for this House, the elected guardians of the sacred liberties of the American people, to overhaul this instrument of oppression.

If price control is necessary to a limited extent, and I am sure that it is, let it be revamped immediately along the lines that worked during the First World War, with improvements based upon that experience. That is common sense.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one brand of slavery. There is not first-degree slavery or second-degree slavery—Japanese slavery or German slavery, American slavery or foreign slavery—there is just one deadly word "slavery." Our boys on the fighting fronts are eliminating the danger of slavery from without; it is up to this Congress now to eliminate it from within. Lenin said the surest way to overturn the existing basis of society was to debauch the currency. That has been going on in America now for 10 years. Under rationing and price fixing, money will not necessarily buy what you desire. Either I work for a money reward that can be used to buy the things I want, or I work with a whip over my back. Persistently freezing labor and fixing prices will lead to slave labor. No new combination of words or phrases can change this simple truth.

Mr. Chairman, the decisive battle for freedom in this generation will be won or lost in America. It will be won or lost in this Congress. It can only be won, Mr. Chairman, by a Congress that will immediately slash Government expenditures by the billions and courageously levy new taxes by the billions. If there were another road whereby we could save our honor and our liberty, I would gladly explore it, but there is none. There is no road to liberty and happiness but obedience to natural laws, including the law of supply and demand, and there is no way to secure God's blessing for America except adherence to His laws. I plead with the Members of this Congress—the last great hope of our bleeding Christian civilization—to meet this challenge courageously.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAMSPECK] having assumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the Independent Offices Appropriation bill, 1944, H. R. 1762, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] be permitted to revise and extend the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole today and include therein a letter from the Social Security Board.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. LUCE] be permitted to extend her own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter she received today from Mrs. Helena Hill Weed, daughter of the late Congressman Ebenezer I. Hill, of Norwalk, Conn., containing certain excerpts and observations relative to Susan B. Anthony, who was memorialized on this floor today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole today and include therein certain tables and extracts from the hearings and a letter I received in reference to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. COMPTON] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the New Haven Journal-Courier, and that he further be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address he delivered over the New Haven station, WELI.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon and to include therein a letter and a brief table to which I referred as coming from the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on Russell H. Conwell, founder of Temple University, the one hundredth anniversary of whose birth is being celebrated in Philadelphia today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a concurrent resolution passed by the Utah State Legislature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a most timely editorial entitled "Strange Panaceas," which appeared in the Clinton Daily Item, of Clinton, Mass., on Thursday evening, February 11, and which was written by the distinguished and talented editor of that highly esteemed publication, Hon. Orra L. Stone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FOLGER], for 10 minutes.

LET US REMEMBER WE ARE AT WAR; AND BE MINDFUL OF WHO ARE OUR ENEMIES AND WHO ARE OUR FRIENDS

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise as a self-appointed attorney for and advocate of the men and boys of America, Great Britain, Russia, China, and all other of our allies, who are fighting today for our freedom.

I have been much impressed in the last few days because of my renewed recollection of the great man Abraham Lincoln, all of whose reproduced photographs indicate an intensive sadness. We need not be astonished at that, when we remember that it is probably truly said that those of his own household were divided against him. I turn to appeal for unity. One has said, and truly so, that united we stand, divided we fall.

Mr. Speaker, I am taking this time to try to bring to our remembrance that we, the American people, with our noble allies, are yet called on to defend and protect liberty and freedom in the world, and to ask that we be impressed with the continuing enormity of our task. It makes one shudder to take account of the disruptions, disorganizations, hardships, and losses that we and our allies have been compelled to suffer on account of the meanness of two nations and the lack of stamina and character of another. Of course, I refer to Nazi Germany and Japan and to Mussolini Italy.

I am thinking of those people who would like to think of nations and peoples as societies of friends—devoted to the doctrine of the good neighbor; not grasping and selfish but liberal and fair. About the time we had begun to hope that people would regard each other as brothers, that security of feeling and helpfulness of hope were ruthlessly attacked by Germany and Japan.

Germany, through Hitler and the military caste of that country, has lost her soul. They became a force of nature and also the superachievement of man, the hero. Under nazi-ism to them there is no longer God. They are wild and fearless—fearless after a fashion; ruthless and cruel, grasping and unkind, covetous and mean. So must and surely will be anyone whose God is not the Lord.

God is love and apart from God there is no love. Where love does not abound, hate will abound.

Listen to Hitler:

> For liberation something more is necessary than an economic policy, something more than industry; if a people is to become free, it needs power, it needs pride and will power, defiance, hate, hate, and once again I say hate.

Over against this we find:

> If the truth shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

For God and righteousness and truth the German volk has been substituted. The German volk is bound by no law. It does not even like the truth. It is force, self-egotistical superiority, hate for everything it is not pleased to call German; yea, German nazi-ism. Hitler boasted that he was, in his youth, a bad little boy. To him the woods, the meadows, and the fields were battlefields where the ever-present conflicts were fought out. Along with the doctrine of man, the hero, force and hate had come. A long time ago the Kaiser had said "Me und Got"; Hitler came to say, "Not God but me. I am your fuehrer, your leader. I am worthy; I am that I am." Hitler abandoned all concept of right. It matters not to him whether even the sons of German people live or die, except as their living and fighting may contribute the more to the realization of his unholy ambitions; not the least of which is to kill and destroy.

In this unholy manner of life, however, he cannot be alone. The Nazi military and military-minded castes of Germany must surely furnish him a deal of support, making possible the ruthless conduct of wars he has carried on against those who had never indicated a gesture other than of general good will toward Germany and all other nations.

The Nazi program is one of world possession, without regard to right. Deification of the mind, force, ruthlessness, and hate have been substituted for all else. These became plans and processes and sole means by which an unjust end was to be attained. And thus we have Germany waging undeclared wars and wars declared without reason or right. A veritable campaign of death and destruction, subjugation and starvation. In this campaign another nation took partnership and stealthily began active participation in this murder by attacking the United States while their deceitful overtures of peaceful understandings were being considered. In this act there was brought to light, or, better said, perhaps, again brought to light the hypocrisy, the treachery, and the meanness of that nation. I have long wondered how long the good people of Germany and Japan, if any, will continue to allow their sons to die upon battlefields to satisfy the thirst for blood and unholy conquest of Hitler and his militaristic gangs and those of Japan in like manner disposed and without any concept of justice or mercy or truth. Italy has joined them. Probably through a lack of manhood than otherwise. Mussolini must be regarded as in truth a puppet of Germany and even now of Japan.

It has been apparent and continues so that these powers, especially Germany and Japan, set about to divide and conquer, possess and enslave the rest of the world.

This they have proposed to do by resort to trickery, untruth, deception of all kinds, and by resort to destruction of the peoples of other countries, including, if you please, definitely the United States of America.

The only mistaken prediction I have made is that this war of conquest would have ere now reached our own shores with a fury and effect that would have alairmed us by now in its proportions. Our allies, Great Britain, China, and Russia, have prevented this, aided by the material help we have been wise enough to give them.

The war is not, however, over. We shall win, but the solemn and serious question remains: How long will it be?

How many of our sons shall we have to lose before it is won and won, as it must be, in unconditional surrender of those countries which have constituted themselves and remain our awful enemies?

I am making a plea for unity at home. Every division among us results in the loss of lives; the lives of our own men and boys, and the lives of our noble allies who are fighting with such bravery and determination to beat back the hounds of hell, who, themselves, have lost their souls and devote themselves to hate and unholy aims and the murdering of all who, loving liberty and freedom, must oppose them.

There is too much carping; too much disunity; too much complaining; too much of intensifying of the relatively minor things and too little realization of the most important—the early winning of this war that involves everything to us and to the world.

I make mention of my opposition to the Dies committee. I have nothing personally against the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. I do not know him except as one may know another by observation of his speech and conduct. My intense opposition to his activities has been solely my firm conviction that all he has done, as chairman of the Dies committee, has been to interfere with our fight against Hitler and Japan, which means our fight for country and home. The publicity of complaint offered and indulged in against men in departments of our Government on account of his accusations against them of having been connected with, or being connected with, what he so often calls Communist fronts, positions sometimes well taken and more often resulting in accusations against loyal citizens, has tended to divide. I would have been glad had he devoted some of his time and spent some of the people's money in investigating Nazi spies and spies of Japanese enemies.

I have not been always pleased with activities of departments of the Government, or with what is so often referred to as bureaus, but I have suffered more in apprehension for the welfare of our fighting men and boys from the disposition of men to be dissatisfied with everything and satisfied with nothing, than I have on account of any mistakes made by those who were, perhaps, trying to do the best they could in hard circumstances.

I have admiration and a feeling of the deepest gratitude for our allies; the British people, Russia, China, the Fighting French, and those who have turned and those who, I knew, would turn themselves to battle for the freedom and rights of men; and as well every country and every people who have joined us by actual war and by announcement and preparation in this battle for freedom and the right. How can we do or allow anything that would tend to divide men engaged in such a noble enterprise?

Would we, for the sake of personal or political advantage, engage in a course or do things that tend to interfere with our war effort or program? I warn you that to do so will react and the boys and men who do come home will call you to account.

Let us think of the men and the boys of our own and, yes, of every one of our allies who are baring their breasts to enemy bullets, not knowing whether they shall live or die, but willingly doing this that men may be free and free as the truth makes us free.

Is Secretary Knox right when he says:

> History is repeating itself. The present administration has been subjected to the same familiar charges of 80 years ago. Partisan advantage still seeks to obstruct the larger purposes and critics still clamor that, because of the exactions of war, the common man will be deprived of liberty.

Am I more anxious about my returning to Washington from the 1944 election than I am for the well-being of our men in arms? Let each of us put first things first, and let our daily inquiry of ourselves be, What is good for our fighting men and our cause?

How can I best contribute to the great task before us? I would not advocate inattention to any of the needs of our people; I would not counsel supineness in the acceptance always of things as they are. If we may, as Congressmen, study to show ourselves approved in our own work and at the same time, by patient consideration, point out to others needs to be considered, all right. But let us not give our time to carping criticisms of others, as a habit, lest, perchance, we should fail in the duty assigned to us.

I invite suggestions as to my own course, and these are often, if not always, helpful; but I have never received any aid from a chronic complainer.

This is a time for cooperation, not division. Our cause is a common one; it is just. Let us, each of us, whatever our situation or position may be, do our full part to the end that men may be free, that our victory may be complete, and that this complete victory may come on the earliest possible day, with the least loss of life that can be. I am not willing to do or to neglect anything that may cause the loss of one mother's son.

I know it is only necessary that we be reminded of the solemnity of our tasks and the import of that in which we are engaged.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore adopted, adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 16, 1943, at 11 o'clock a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization at 10:30 a. m. on Wednesday, February 17, 1943, for consideration of unfinished business.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

173. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a proposed general provision for the Office for Emergency Management and drafts of proposed provisions for the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs and the Office of Defense Transportation, constituent agencies thereof (H. Doc. No. 104); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

174. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1943 and 1944 in the amount of $525,000 (H. Doc. No. 105); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

175. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1943, to remain available until December 31, 1943, in the amount of $65,075,000 (H. Doc. No. 106); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

176. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of the legislation passed by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John in Virgin Islands; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

177. A letter from the Chairman, War Production Board, transmitting the fourth report upon the operations of the Chairman of the War Production Board; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

178. A letter from the secretary-treasurer, Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission, transmitting a report of the operations of Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission for the period of its existence from June 5, 1942, to the present date; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

179. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to existing appropriations of the War Department (H. Doc. No. 107); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

180. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1943, for the Navy Department and naval service, amounting to $250,000,000 contract authorization (H. Doc. No. 108); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

181. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the legislative establishment, Government Printing Office, for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $3,269,430 (H. Doc. No. 109); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

182. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $337,000 (H. Doc. No. 110); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. RAMSPECK: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 1671. A bill to amend section 23 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917; without amendment (Rept. No. 125). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PATMAN: Committee on Small Business. House Resolution 18. Resolution dealing with wartime problems of southern industry; without amendment (Rept. No. 126). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 926) for the relief of Mrs. Sadie Ford, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FORD:

H. R. 1818. A bill to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act to provide for the deduction of certain credits from assessments due the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by certain insured banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RAMSPECK:

H. R. 1819. A bill to extend certain provisions of law relating to overtime compensation to employees in the Library of Congress; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

By Mr. WALTER:

H. R. 1820. A bill to provide for the advancement in rank of certain commissioned officers of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey:

H. R. 1821. A bill to suspend the authority of the Securities and Exchange Commission under section 14 (a) and section 14 (b) of the Securities Exchange Act to issue rules relating to the solicitation of proxies, consents, and authorizations during the period of war emergency; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia:

H. R. 1822. A bill to amend title II of the act entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," approved June 25, 1938 (52 Stat. 1175), in order to give credit for active duty performed by enlisted men subsequent to transfer to the Fleet Reserve, in computing their retainer or retired pay; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. COSTELLO:

H. R. 1823. A bill to amend the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act as amended; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LESINSKI:

H. R. 1824 (by request). A bill to establish more equitable procedure governing the determination of service connection of diseases or injuries alleged to have been incurred in or aggravated by active service in the present global war, campaign, or expedition; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 1825 (by request). A bill to amend Public Law No. 242 of the Sixty-eighth Congress as amended so as to extend monetary benefits to veterans of the present global war and their dependents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 1826 (by request). A bill to provide for presumption of soundness at enlistment after 6 months' active service in the armed forces during the present global war; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 1827 (by request). A bill to provide for the issuance of a flag to the nearest relatives of certain persons who die while in the armed forces of the United States during the present global war; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 1828 (by request). A bill to grant burial allowances in cases of certain deceased veterans of the Regular Establishment who served in a recognized campaign, expedition, insurrection, or occupation; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 1829 (by request). A bill to provide dental service for veterans of the present global war; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

H. R. 1830 (by request). A bill to authorize payment of compensation or pension for partial service-connected disability, plus such percentage of the amount of pension payable for his permanent total disability, nonservice connected, as is equal to the difference between 100 percent and the degree of his service-connected disability; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1943

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be Thou, O Lord God of hosts, at the beginning of another day we ask Thy gracious guidance. We trust that we shall not begrudge our best even in the humblest tasks, responding in sympathy to all opportunities for service. We pray Thee to set our minds on worthy objects, keeping them filled with pure thoughts, and be in us the power that makes for righteousness.

Heavenly Father, gather within the folds of Thyself the business, the life, and the very soul of our Nation; thrust from it every hindering thing, distrust and greed, and let Thy mercy be upon us as our trust is in Thee. We pray that our temporal prosperity may be measured by our spiritual vision, standing on those great substantial verities which will carry us through all dangers. It is thus that summer comes to the roots of the soul and makes it bud to a noble opening, given fruitage by the river of life, rich with the promise of an abundant harvest. Oh, let Thy blessed presence disturb us with the joy of elevated thoughts and with a sense of Thy sublimity; then will the light of the rising sun show forth the glory of a morn in a world where all is changing, but God; and Thine shall be the praise, through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JAMES F. SCANLON

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, today is an anniversary to which I would like to call the attention of the House. The Honorable Swagar Shirley, who was chairman of the Appropriations Committee, 25 years ago today brought to Washington Jim Scanlon. Mr. Scanlon from that date to this has been a devoted employee serving with the Appropriations Committee. He has been highly intelligent, ever loyal and faithful. He has a personality which has brought sunshine into the work of that committee every day he has been there. He makes friends easily, and he keeps them indefinitely.

I am sure that I speak for everyone from my home city, Louisville, Ky., as well as the membership of this House in wishing him long life and healthful and happy service with his committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEAL. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I also join with my distinguished friend from Kentucky in everything he has said, and suggest just one outstanding quality in addition to that fine personality and that wholesome character; that is, his intense loyalty. In my opinion, that is one of the most important elements that any human being can possess in the journey through life, loyalty to friendship and loyalty to principle.

Mr. O'NEAL. I appreciate that, and Jim Scanlon has that to a marked degree.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, when I first became a member of the Appropriations Committee 20 years ago, James Scanlon was there. He was a Democrat and I was a young Republican just coming into the House. I can never forget his unfailing courtesy and kindnesses to me during all the time I have been a member of that committee. He has been loyal to the committee. It is his first thought; it is his first effort to try to make the work of the Appropriations Committee fine and clean.

I wish to join in paying my tribute to Jim Scanlon, to the work that he has done in 25 years of real service to the Appropriations Committee, to the House, and to the Nation. Jim's work is in charge of the administrative end of the office, and he does not come in contact with us so much on the floor, but with the Members who have occasion to go into the office, he is the man we most frequently see. We really appreciate the kind of service that he is giving.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, February 16, 1918, was a red-letter day for the Committee on Appropriations. On that day, just 25 years ago this morning, James F. Scanlon, of Kentucky, was enrolled as a member of the staff of the committee and has served with singular fidelity and ability in that capacity from that day to this.

He is serving today as assistant clerk to the committee, and in all the years I have been connected with the committee I have never heard a criticism of him or his work. I wish I could say as much of my own service.

For 25 years he has been not only an assistant but a personal and appreciated friend to every member of the committee. And after 25 years he is still the youngest member of the staff—young in spirit and in enthusiasm for his work and his friends.

I am certain I voice the heartfelt sentiments of every member of the committee, if not of the entire House, in congratulating him on his quarter of a century of eminent and devoted service to the committee and the country and in wishing for him another quarter of a century of equally eminent and effective service in the same capacity.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I have not served on the Appropriations Committee as long as the gentlemen who have just addressed the House, but I have served there long enough to be fully appreciative of the very fine and efficient service which has been for these 25 years rendered to the committee and to the Congress and the country by Uncle Jim Scanlon, of Kentucky.

I want to add this to the thoughts that have been expressed: Mr. Scanlon attends to the preparation of committee hearings for the Public Printer, and in connection with his work in this capacity he frequently calls to the attention of subcommittees the inclusion of unnecessary data by departmental witnesses and voluminous statements intended to support their claims for desired items of appropriation, which often comprise many unnecessary pages and which, if they were permitted to go into the hearings, would cost the Government a great deal of money to print, and, as a result, unnecessary volume is eliminated. In this respect and in the suggestions that because of his experience he has been able to make to subcommittees regarding items of appropriation, "Uncle Jim" Scanlon has, during the 8 years I have served on this committee, saved the Government, in my judgment, many thousands of dollars, perhaps a great deal more than the salary which has been paid him. I want to join in the tribute which has been rendered by my colleagues to his efficiency, and to express the hope that he may be spared to continue his useful service for a great many years.

He has the love and respect of all of those with whom he has been associated in his years of service.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I just cannot let this opportunity pass without expressing my appreciation of the very valuable assistance and cooperation rendered to new members of the Appropriations Committee by this man Scanlon who has so ably served on this committee's secretarial staff for 25 years.

All that has been said of him and with respect to him by those who preceded me is true; he merits more. He is one of the most efficient and valuable members of the clerk's organization of and for the Appropriations Committee, and although his work is not publicized, it is genuinely appreciated by those who realize what he does. May the celebration of his twenty-fifth anniversary of usefulness be only the beginning of anniversaries for him. If you count Jim Scanlon your friend you are rich.

1942 INCOME TAXES

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word in behalf of the millions of loyal, patriotic taxpayers who had not filed their income-tax returns by February 1.

I commend the efforts of Secretary Morgenthau, Senator GEORGE, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], in their radio appeal of last evening asking the taxpayers to file their income-tax returns at once. I do not criticize the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for his testimony on February 2 before the Ways and Means Committee, emphasizing the small percentage of people who have paid their income tax as of January 29 of this year, as compared to previous years.

To correct a general impression, widely publicized in the press, that the taxpayers are apparently withholding filing returns and paying first installments of 1942 taxes, because of their belief that a pay-as-you-go plan will be enacted shortly, it is my opinion that this delay has been due in part to inability of taxpayers to secure the necessary forms on which to make returns. In substantiation, one of my constituents, a businessman in Chicago, under date of February 12 wrote me as follows:

> In fact, they were—
>
> The income-tax blanks—
> in a printing plant in this county and had not even been shipped when our office repeatedly called the Internal Revenue office in Chicago, and it has only been this last week that we were able to obtain copies of form 1040.

In fact, the envelope in which I received my own form was postmarked January 23, 1943.

I call this to the attention of the Members of this House, because I think it is only fair that you know that the Treasury Department is to some extent responsible for the slowness of income-tax returns.

All the blame should not be put upon the taxpayers.

THE LATE HONORABLE DONALD C. DOBBINS

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to inform you of the death of a former highly distinguished Member of this body, Donald C. Dobbins, a resident of Champaign, Ill., who represented the Nineteenth District of Illinois in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses.

Donald C. Dobbins was born in Champaign, Ill., March 20, 1878, educated at the University of Illinois and George Washington University, of Washington, D. C., and departed this life yesterday, February 14.

He was a practicing attorney in his home city of Champaign, Ill., at the time of his election to Congress and he retired from Congress to again take up the practice of law upon the death of his brother, who was a senior partner in the law firm of Dobbins & Dobbins.

Mr. Dobbins was a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, where his ability made him a valuable member. He was a fine lawyer and a valuable Member of Congress.

His sterling qualities and outstanding ability won for him the esteem and respect of all with whom he came in contact. His life was marked by many worthy achievements and his name will long be remembered as that of one who was always willing to take an active part in every worthy cause in which his community was interested.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, Members on this side of the aisle join the Illinois delegation in mourning the passing of our distinguished friend and former colleague, Donald Dobbins.

I have never served with a finer character in all my years in this House, a man who seemed to be imbued with higher ideals or one who had a more conscientious regard for the feelings of his fellow members than Donald Dobbins of Illinois.

All I can say of him is that Illinois has lost one of her most distinguished sons, the Members of this House have lost a valued and cherished friend.

I would say of him what William Cullen Bryant has so eloquently said:

Thou'rt gone, the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given
And shall not soon depart.
He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to correct a misunderstanding which has grown out of my remarks of last Wednesday when the Dies resolution was before this body.

In those remarks, I spoke of the Home Rule Advocates or Young Ireland group as they were called, who around 1848 banded together for the purpose of giving Ireland her independence. On one occasion eight of the leaders of that group were arrested by the English, tried for treason and sentenced to death. The multitude of protests from all over the world caused Queen Victoria to change the sentence to banishment to Australia. About 24 years later that same Queen found her Australian Prime Minister to be one Sir Charles Duffy—the same Charles Duffy she had banished. This so startled her that she had the history of the other seven traced only to find that all of them had attained eminence and respect in both political and social life. I related that story in attempting to illustrate, as I said, that time often shows the true character of men in a different and more favorable light than it would appear at the moment.

I have been given to understand that a certain organization has construed those remarks as comparing that young Ireland group to Communists.

I want to say that not only was that not my intention but it is not my conviction. The Irish Home Rule Advocates of 1848 were young nationalists who wished to see Ireland given her independence and while their methods were not always free of violence it must be remembered that force begets force. They asked only independence and freedom for Ireland. Communists and the philosophy they espouse are poles apart from the philosophy of those Irish nationalists. Russia is now an ally of ours and sufficient is for me to say that as much as I admire the truly great stand they have made against the greatest military machine up to now seen, nevertheless, I abhore the thing communism stands for—to me it is an odious and an alien philosophy. Those being my views I do not think I should be censured for something I do not hold.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

THE MAGAZINE VICTORY

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include excerpts from a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, last week attention of the membership of the Senate and the House of Representatives was called to volume 1, No. 1, of the magazine Victory prepared by the Office of War Information for foreign distribution.

In reply to a telephone request to Mr. Armitage Watkins of the Office of War Information for a copy of the magazine, Mr. Watkins stated that although he was reluctant to distribute any copies domestically one copy would be sent to my office. I am happy to say that it was received this morning with a letter of enclosure from Mr. Elmer Davis, Director of the Office of War Information.

I can say that as a magazine it is a beautiful piece of workmanship, turned out on a fine grade of glazed paper, and resplendant with beautiful examples of photographic work, color plate and printing. So far I have been unable to discover any information in its contents that could not be given to the American people, but in his letter of enclosure Mr. Davis makes this request:

I must ask that, in view of the fact that the entire distribution is foreign, you treat it as a confidential document.

I will, of course, be glad to comply with the request and keep the copy in my office.

It is my understanding that the magazine has, and will be, distributed to our troops abroad as well as to the population of foreign countries as soon as some 540,000 copies of foreign language prints can be run.

The foreign propaganda value of the publication remains to be seen, and althought our boys in service abroad will welcome it as something from home to read, I am inclined to believe they would prefer letters from home that could be shipped in the space required for 990,000 copies of this super deluxe edition of Victory.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, to revise and extend my own remarks, and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BALDWIN of New York addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two places and to include certain material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES]?

There was no objection.

MRS. ALYCE W. SINNOTT

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 100, which provides for the payment of funeral expenses and a year's salary to the wife of our deceased Doorkeeper and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Mrs. Alyce W. Sinnott, widow of Joseph J. Sinnott, late Doorkeeper of the House, an amount equal to 1 year's salary compensation, and an additional amount not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Joseph J. Sinnott.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD twice, one of them on the subject Get Rid of the Japs, and to include therein a letter and a resolution from the Native Sons of the Golden West, the other one on the subject of power companies, and in which I ask to insert an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a simplified method of computing overtime in the Postal Service, compiled by Albert F. Waite, of Sioux City, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COLE]?

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication which was read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 15, 1943.

HON. SAM RAYBURN,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I herewith submit my resignation from the Special Committee on Un-American Activities.

Very truly yours,

JERRY VOORHIS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

CONGRESS ASSERTS ITS RIGHTS—USES ITS POWER OF THE PURSE—SAVES $100,000,000 FOR THE TAXPAYERS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, the House, through its Subcommittee on Appropriations for Agriculture, has asserted itself in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Byrnes said the other night that the farmer must expand output in the face of apparent inadequate supplies of fertilizer, lack of material for, and inadequate replacements of equipment and inadequate manpower, due to the draft and employment elsewhere.

It cannot be done as proposed. As an attempted cure-all, Mr. Wickard has offered the farmers $100,000,000 to do the impossible. It is a subsidy, pure, simple, and unadulterated. Calling it anything else does not make it smell any sweeter to the farmers and farm organizations, all of which are opposed to it.

Money cannot be used as fertilizer, nor to cultivate crops, nor to employ a nonexistent manpower, even if he had the right to make the offer, which he did not have.

This is not the way out. The proposal involved payment to each farmer on the basis of the amount which the farmer exceeds 90 percent for certain crops up to 110 percent of the goal. That would put a premium on the failure of the slacker to produce and insult the overwhelming might of those farmers who have already gone and done all in their power. Moreover, the proposal is unauthorized and in direct contravention and flagrant defiance of the first supplemental defense appropriation for 1942, wherein Congress specifically went on record as against subsidy payments of this very type.

The committee is entitled to the wholehearted support of the Members of Congress, and, for saving $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, the people ought to signify their approval.

And this is just the beginning. The sun of the day of executive directives, unauthorized by law and in direct contravention of the intent of Congress, has set.

There is a way out, and a lawful method of procedure, and Congress has shown the way.

Subsidization of one group and discrimination against another group of farmers will not produce more food.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CRAVENS]?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that debate continue throughout the day, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] and myself, and that at the conclusion of the debate today the first paragraph of the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1762, with Mr. WHITTINGTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

A DECADE OF T. V. A.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of criticism in this House lately, criticism of what we call bureaucracy. I believe we are justified in our impatience with the red tape and delay which seem to be characteristic of the operations of some agencies of the executive branch of the Government, and especially with their lack of understanding of the problems faced by the citizens who are our constituents and with whom they deal. But I think we ought to be just as prompt to commend an agency when it does a good job, when it carries out the program Congress directed it to do efficiently and responsibly, and when it has earned and enjoys the confidence of an overwhelming majority of the citizens in the area in which it operates.

The Tennessee Valley Authority is such an agency. In my judgment its record for performance is unequaled. It has kept faith with Congress and with the people. It has given us a heartwarming demonstration of how a Federal program can be administered at the grass roots, strengthening local institutions instead of destroying them, increasing the confidence of the people in their Government instead of undermining the faith of the average man. And bad administration of government does just that.

The management of T. V. A. deserves great praise for the way it has carried out its work. But the Congress deserves credit, too, for the vision it displayed when it created the statute under which such extraordinary results have been achieved. It could not have been done if governmental traditions in organization had been accepted as the final word by Congress, or if conventional methods, weak from obsolescence, had been employed by the Authority itself. We ought to know more about the relation of the kind of statutes we enact to the administrative methods employed to enforce them. For Congress cannot wholly escape responsibility when administration of the laws we make goes wrong. Perhaps there are pitfalls in the very statutes. Perhaps the laws we make invite red tape and delay. We censure the directives of swivel-chair bureaucrats because they fail to understand the conditions of every town from Oregon to Maine. And in the same breath we say "aye" to roll calls that pile up more responsibilities here in Washington, that mean more sweeping regulations, more orders issued from the National Capital. We lose our tempers and our sense when things go wrong, and try to right them by interference in the details of management and administration. I admit the provocation and I share the irritation, but in my judgment, that is not the way to work out the appropriate relationship between the legislative and executive branches of this Government. It is not the road to achievement in peace. It is the road to chaos in war.

I think we might learn more if we paid less attention to the failures and mistakes of Government bureaus and departments and more to the successes we encounter. Perhaps in that way we might find some remedy for the difficulties that plague us.

I am no expert in public administration. I have had no vast experience in the selection and training or supervision of personnel. I have never managed a billion-dollar enterprise. But I know a good job when I see it. I can measure results. And 9 years' close association with this one Federal agency has convinced me that its record could not have been achieved without good management. It takes good men using good methods to do a good job. In the history of the T. V. A. I think this Congress may find some guide to a solution of the problem we must solve—a solution we cannot postpone much longer. We have got to find out swiftly how a central government of this size can be run efficiently, what kind of statutes will encourage decent administration, will increase the loyalty, and not arouse the ire of individual citizens. We have got to determine how we can carry out the decisions of the National Congress without smothering all signs of vigorous local self-government. We found a formula when we created T. V. A., but almost none of us appreciates the remarkable job we did.

HOW THE T. V. A. STATUTE DEFINES THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE CONGRESS AND THE AUTHORITY

Remember, the Congress invented a special type of organization in the T. V. A. Act. We created an independent regional agency. We sent it away from Washington. We set up broad policies to govern its acts, but we gave the Authority flexibility to make its own decisions with respect to detail. In the basic act the major purposes of the legislation were carefully set forth. The Congress declared that the Tennessee River should be transformed into a navigable waterway from its mouth near Paducah, Ky., 650 miles to Knoxville, Tenn. We provided that the dams to be constructed on the Tennessee and on its tributaries should be designed and operated not only to create the navigation channel but also to provide storage for the control of floods for the protection of people living in the valleys of the Tennessee and Mississippi Rivers. We directed that those dams should be used to develop the maximum amount of power consistent with their use for navigation and flood control. We did not even leave it to the administrators of this act to determine the basic policy considerations that were to govern in the distribution and sale of the electric energy generated at these projects. We legislated on that subject by making it clear that the Authority was not to dispose of this Government power by sale to the existing electric-utility monopolies, but was to distribute it on as wide a basis as possible throughout the area of its operations at the most reasonable rates consistent with making the power investment self-liquidating.

I mention these matters because it is important to note that in creating this agency we did not delegate legislative power as we sometimes accuse ourselves of doing. We rightly reserved the control of general policy to ourselves. And that control has been exercised on repeated occasions when the Congress has seen fit to amend the basic law either for the purpose of clarifying questions upon which the original intent was doubtful or for the purpose of enunciating new policies as conditions changed and the project developed. Not only were we careful to retain the exercise of legislative function in the Congress but we made sure that this agency should remain accountable to the Congress and the public for the manner in which it carried out the legislative policies. To that end we provided that the books, records, and accounts should be be subjected to a continuous audit in the field by the representatives of the Comptroller General, and we charged the Comptroller General with the responsibility for reporting directly to the Congress any irregularities that he might find in the operations of the Authority. In addition, in 1935 we specifically required the Authority to submit to us a comprehensive engineering report setting out in some detail the way in which it proposed to carry out the legislative policy for the development of the river system in order that we might have the opportunity of reviewing those plans. Finally, we have required this agency to appear before the Appropriations Committees of each House annually to justify in detail its expenditures during the preceding fiscal year and to explain its proposed program for the next fiscal year. By these devices we have kept within our own control the major policy decisions affecting the program of this agency.

Yet at the same time the Congress was sufficiently far-sighted, in setting up the administrative framework for this organization, to take into consideration the nature of its work and to give to it many of the attributes of flexibility, initiative, and responsibility characteristic of our better organized business enterprises. That this was done deliberately is shown by the report of the conference committee on the original Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, which makes it clear that it was the considered intention of Congress to make it possible for this agency to conduct the highly complex electric-power business according to the best business methods. The provisions of the statute vested in the management of T. V. A. sufficient authority and sufficient discretion to deal with the day-to-day problems that arise in the conduct of any business and to make promptly those decisions upon which the success or failure of such an enterprise so often depend. We worked out and expressed a relationship specially suited to the task we gave the Authority to do. We gave T. V. A. the whole job to do, and made it alone accountable to us and to the people. We did not divide responsibility for the development of this river among a dozen agencies. We did not split authority into pieces, then prayerfully sit back and hope that a coordinating committee of supermen would iron out inevitable disputes of jurisdiction.

WHAT T. V. A. HAS DONE IN LESS THAN 10 YEARS

Let us stop and see how that system has worked. What are the results achieved after 9 years' operation under this statute? Ten multipurpose dams have been built by T. V. A. since 1933, and six are under construction at war tempo today. A giant plant to produce electricity by steam has been erected. Munitions plants have been built and other lesser projects undertaken.

This is the biggest engineering project in the history of the world. This Government has done it directly. There have been no outrageous profits, no startling bonuses, no rackets or kickbacks on this job. Forty thousand men and women were employed at the peak of construction activities last September. Yet there never has been a strike against the management nor an interruption of war work by a single day. Material worth millions of dollars has been purchased all over the United States, and there has never been a hint of scandal in procurement. More than $600,000,000 had been disbursed through the end of the past fiscal year and every penny has been accounted for. Not a single T. V. A. employee has been charged with corruption. They have mobilized a river and a valley for war, and in record time, down there. Look at what has happened in 9 years. Let me summarize the record.

THE T. V. A. POWER SYSTEM TODAY—T. V. A. POWER IN WAR

The Authority now has under construction the second largest power system in the country. Its installed capacity is approximately 1,500,000 kilowatts, of which more than 950,000 kilowatts represents T. V. A. construction since 1933. The balance comes from Wilson Dam, which the Authority inherited, and from structures which have been acquired by purchase. In the fiscal year 1944 T. V. A. expects to produce more than 10,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of power. This electric power spells war power in our fight for freedom and security. Let me translate this for you. For years this area has produced most of our aluminum and here we have the world's largest aluminum plant. In this area we have the largest chemical-warfare arsenal in the world. We have munitions plants, explosive plants, foundries, and factories turning out the equipment of battle. That power will produce aluminum for ships and planes; chemicals for explosives; bombers whose wings will cast shadows of disaster over Axis countries; smoke screens to protect our ships in battle; incendiaries to consume the war industries of our foes. All these things will come from the power created in the Tennessee Valley.

T. V. A. POWER IN PEACE

In addition to 9 large war industries served directly by the Authority, approximately 450,000 customers receive T. V. A. power through the distribution systems of 83 municipalities and 45 cooperatives. You can realize what T. V. A. has accomplished when you remember that in 1933 there were no electricity cooperatives and only a few scattered municipal systems in that area. The farmers did not have electricity in the South because the private power companies thought they could not pay the the bills. Now electric power replaces human energy on our farms. These kilowatt-hours are fighting our shortage of food.

That record of construction, of organization and operation, is unbeatable. And it is going to pay out. It is in the great American industrial tradition. For all time it explodes the outworn notion that the operations of a Government agency are bound to be clumsy and expensive. T. V. A. balance sheets respect the obligation of a business enterprise to make returns on an investment. In the next fiscal year—1944—T. V. A. revenues from the sale of power are estimated to amount to $38,500,000. That is enough to pay all expenses of power operation (and note that these expenses include payments in lieu of taxes and provide reserves for depreciation), and in addition to produce a return of approximately 4 percent on the investment in power facilities. The actual revenue for this fiscal year will amount to approximately $33,000,000. The consumers who had electric service prior to T. V. A. will save almost $10,000,000 annually in comparison with the rates they were formerly paying. This is an achievement in which the Congress should take pride. Within the normal span of life the consumers of power in the Tennessee Valley will pay back to the Federal Treasury all the money the Congress has provided to make that power production possible.

NAVIGATION

When I said the river had been mobilized for war, it was not alone of power I was thinking. The navigation channel Congress directed T. V. A. to build in 1933 is now almost completed. It is a highway for the movement of military supplies. Jeeps, amphibians, ambulances, and huge Army trucks are being unloaded at the docks in the Valley today. A tow of more than 2,000 of these vehicles were unloaded at my home city of Guntersville recently. Think what that means in the saving of gas and rubber or of railway flatcars, and the relief given to our overburdened rail-and-motor transportation facilities. Figure the lowered cost to the Government. Already the expenditure for navigation is beginning to be paid back too. There were plenty of doubting Thomases about the future of river use for commerce when the T. V. A. development started. We stopped doubting in Alabama a couple of years ago when we saw barges with grain from the Midwest, automobiles from Detroit, and petroleum products from the Gulf begin to use a half-completed channel. We knew what it was going to mean before we saw the steady flow of war equipment that moves on the river today. Next year it is estimated that the movement of freight on this waterway will exceed 500,000,000 ton-miles. Four public-use terminals, now under construction, will make it a free highway for the use of all kinds of public and private business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, prior to T. V. A. we had almost no protection from floods in the Tennessee Valley, and our capricious river poured its turbulent waters to add to the disaster of floods in the lower Mississippi. Today T. V. A. has provided approximately 6,700,000 acre-feet of useful storage, much of which is available for control during the flood season. Already we have seen what that means. Just last December, T. V. A. reduced a flood crest at Chattanooga by 3½ to 4 feet and prevented damage estimated at more than a million dollars. The completed system will provide more than 15,000,000 acre-feet of storage and will have considerable effect on the floods of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. Kentucky Dam alone, providing 4,500,000 acre-feet near the mouth of the Tennessee, will be capable of reducing crests at Cairo, Ill., by 2 to 3 feet. Two to three feet is the difference between disaster and safety in floods. And the benefits will extend all the way down river. This reduction alone has been estimated to be worth $200,000,000, or almost double the cost of Kentucky Dam. Flood control here spells safety to private enterprises, homes, and the people all down the mid-continent area to New Orleans.

FERTILIZER FOR PEACE AND MUNITIONS FOR WAR

The Muscle Shoals development started in World War No. 1. In the years of peace T. V. A. converted the plants to the production of plant food. Now once more these huge Government facilities are turning out munitions. They are producing elemental phosphorus, ammonia, and ammonium nitrate for the War Department. They are making the ingredients of synthetic rubber for the Rubber Reserve Company. The amounts and distribution of these war products are not disclosed for publication, because, as was said of the annual report this year, "It might give aid, though certainly no comfort, to our enemies."

THE FERTILIZER PROGRAM

I can speak, however, of the concentrated phosphatic fertilizers that have been developed by T. V. A. at Muscle Shoals since 1933. The finest and highest concentration of phosphatic fertilizer in the world has been successfully developed here, meto-phosphate. They have meant new hope for the exhausted lands of the South and the Nation. Fields and hills that were bare and sterile are green and living now, and farm production has increased. Through June 1942 more than 185,000 tons of T. V. A. plant food had been distributed for use in a demonstration program on 42,000 farms totaling 6,200,000 acres. This program is Nation-wide, and every Member of this House ought to know just how it has been carried out, because some of the material has gone to every State. I think the method used by T. V. A. to carry out this program in the Tennessee Valley shows why the organization has had such tremendous success in all its activities. Let me describe it to you briefly:

Congress directed the Authority to experiment in the production and use of new and cheaper forms of plant food and to demonstrate its use. Now the development of the fertilizer, the laboratory part, is easy compared to the demonstration of the product in use. Because these new plant foods had to be tried out on farms and the farms had to be used at the same time to provide a living for American families, T. V. A. had to face the practical problems of the largest private business in this country, the private enterprise of farming. Here is the way they did it:

They decided to work through existing institutions—the Extension Service and the land-grant colleges. They did not hire thousands of agents themselves and set up a lot of new offices. In cooperation with existing institutions, the farmers of a county were invited to come together to hear about the program. The farmers themselves selected one of their number, who agreed to permit his farm to be used as a demonstration area. He took a risk. He paid the freight on the fertilizer which T. V. A. provided at no cost. He had to change his farm management. He agreed to keep books. He got help from scientists and specialists and cooperation in working out his problems—but never a directive nor a quota. His farm became a kind of school for the whole community.

T. V. A. did not run this program from some distant headquarters. Their men walked over the land. They saw the troubles that developed. It is not easy for a farmer to conserve the Nation's soil for posterity and at the same time buy shoes for the children. Yet that is just what has to be done if this Nation is going to survive. T. V. A. discovered that new and cheaper equipment was needed for the farmer who could not afford to have hired help. They saw that a way must be found to make the growth of soil-restoring crops pay cash. It was not all a matter of national policy and good will. So what did they do? They did not equip a lot of new and fancy laboratories. They went to the educational and scientific institutions of the South. They made contracts with them. They worked on designs together. And community refrigerators came into use, new farm machinery was developed, a quick-freezing process came out of it, and new uses for wood products. The T. V. A. took these inventions through the stage of practical demonstration. Then licenses were issued and private enterprise took over. All the way through from trestle board to the finished product existing local institutions, public and private, were used. Other Government agencies do not work that way.

We who live there have seen what has happened to these test demonstration farmers. Their mortgages are paid, their buildings are better equipped. They have more livestock. They live better. They are buying more things in town. They have money in the bank. Most important today, they are producing more food for war. This program should be vastly expanded when materials for building additional plant capacity are again available, when production of munitions can decline.

This year these products are being shared with our allies. A major portion of T. V. A.'s fertilizer products will go abroad so fields in England can raise the products we should otherwise be obliged to send. We need it here, but it is sound sense to save bottoms. Phosphatic fertilizer is easier to send than cereals.

The summary outlined hits only the high spots of the record of this agency we created in 1933. We outlined the program in Congress. We gave them the job to do and held them responsible. They have kept faith with us. In the accomplishment of this record, the Authority has never failed to meet its promises to Congress as to the schedules of construction time, and T. V. A. has had to face the same problems of manpower and material shortages as private industries. Somehow it has always come through and without any fanfare. Until the recent extreme price increases, which have dislocated all estimates, the Authority has never spent more on a dam than it told the Congress it would cost. Those are tests of achievement. That is how a job should be judged. T. V. A. has met every contractual engagement. Steadily its unit cost of operations has been reduced, and its overhead administrative costs curtailed from year to year until they now stand at less than 4 percent—a remarkably low level for any similar enterprise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

INDUSTRIAL SAFETY RECORD

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Look at T. V. A.'s standing in the field of industrial safety. Accidents always increase when industry speeds up, and the accident rate today is an acute manpower problem. When you find a good safety record combined with a swift production schedule you find good management, trained supervisors, and intelligent and alert employees. In 1940, for example, T. V. A. had an accident frequency rate 60 percent lower than the average rate for all companies engaged in similar operations reporting to the National Safety Council, and its accident severity rate was less than half as much as the others. In August 1941, a rising accident rate, national in scope, was of sufficient extent to be called to public attention by the President. The T. V. A. did not go with the trend in this respect. Their rates went down. Its frequency rate was reduced by 11.6 percent, as compared with its own record in 1940, and the severity rate went down by 22.4 percent. Yet during this period the number of man-hours of work on T. V. A. construction projects increased by 67.8 percent.

WHY AND HOW T. V. A. IS DIFFERENT FROM OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

T. V. A. methods, developed under an unusual charter, are responsible for its success. Achievements like these are not accidental. I do not believe any other public or private agency can match them. What I want to emphasize is this, that record has been made possible because T. V. A. is different from other Federal agencies. Its statute is different, its methods are wonderfully different, and I submit that its accomplishments are startlingly dissimilar from customary performances. It lives and works in the field. It does not operate from Washington, although every once in a while some expert with a blueprint gets worried about that "difference," and decides that T. V. A. should be made a part of a Washington department and enjoy the superlative advantages of red tape, absentee management, and remote control. T. V. A. works in the Valley, close to the people it serves. You do not hear complaints about questionnaires sent out by T. V. A. They rarely need to use that sterile way of getting information. They meet local groups in conference in villages, on farms, and in towns. The people know why information is required, what use is going to be made of it. Nobody resists that kind of inquiry.

The novelty of a regional agency is too much for some people and they suggest that the work of T. V. A., which they profess to admire, should be partitioned among old-line Government departments—that some other agency should buy the land or handle its litigation, or that its employees should be selected by another outfit. They say, "Why should T. V. A. be different?" In my judgment—and the record supports my conclusions—the reason T. V. A. gets things done is because it is different. For one thing, they see their job as a whole. Land buying, for example, has to keep pace with dam construction and family relocation. T. V. A.'s land-buying program has been the most successful ever undertaken by a Federal agency. Look at this record: Of 871,416 acres purchased for reservoir and highway purposes up to June 30, 1942, over 90 percent was acquired by purchase, and of the remaining, 2.3 percent of the cases in condemnation involved only questions of title, with price undisputed.

They have a different system of condemnation procedure in T. V. A., and some people suggest that it should be changed because it is different. I live in the area and I give daily thanks for the difference. Congress put section 25 in the T. V. A. Act deliberately. It was an effort to create a condemnation system that would avoid the abuses of traditional methods and would be fair alike to the owners of land and to the Government. It has worked admirably. Whenever there is large-scale purchase there will be disgruntled individuals. But in the area generally it is recognized that the method has been fair and swift.

It is at times suggested that the method of selection of T. V. A. employees should be changed, that they should be chosen either by the Civil Service Commission or with the approval of Members of the Congress. I am against any such proposal. The Authority has an independent merit system, and I have never heard any responsible person level charges at T. V. A. for politics, favoritism, nepotism, or any other "ism" in the selection of its workers. Everyone admits the T. V. A. system is fine. But some worry because it is different. They want T. V. A. to have every problem and every drawback of every other department. They do not seem to see the relation between cause and effect. T. V. A. has recruited skilled and unskilled workmen in an area which had no vast reservoir of industrially trained manpower. It was not an easy job. But they have done it. As of February 1, 1943, T. V. A. employment totaled approximately 35,000. Of these 35,000 employees, more than 25,000 are skilled workers, operators, engineers, chemists, and other highly technical and professional personnel. These are the men who have designed and built the dams, the powerhouses, transmission lines, and substations. They are maintaining and operating them today. They have designed and built and now they are operating the fertilizer and munitions plants. I do not know where T. V. A. found them, but they must be well chosen, well trained, and well directed, because they are the men and women who are doing a superlative job. Whatever methods T. V. A. has developed, I want them continued. I should like to see them adopted by other agencies of the Government. I think we need some more different agencies. Maybe if we drafted a few more statutes with the vision we showed when we created T. V. A., perhaps we would have more records like this.

Every once in a while another thoroughly specious proposal is advanced. That is that T. V. A. power revenues should be paid directly into the Treasury of the United States and that the organization should come to Congress for all the money it requires to operate its system. The idea is that this Congress, not T. V. A., should manage the details of operation of this great electricity system.

Now Congress wrote section 26 of the T. V. A. Act in another fashion. We catalogued there the purposes for which T. V. A. could use its revenues. We outlined limits beyond which T. V. A. could not go, but we recognized that continuity of electricity service could not depend on annual appropriations. We recognized that in this sort of enterprise operating estimates could not be accurate so far in advance as Federal Budget and appropriation procedure requires. We had sense enough to see that you cannot know, more than a year in advance, every expenditure that may have to be made to take on new business or to repair the sudden ravages of storms or flood. Why if such a provision had been in the law in September 1939, the Authority could not have made additional power available to the plant of the Aluminum Co. in Alcoa, Tenn. The business was unanticipated. Alcoa had no power contract to cover the new demand for aluminum for airplanes. No surplus hydro power was available. So high cost steam plants had to be put into operation. The Authority spent over a million dollars to provide the service. I will not put a money value on the production of that metal. But I will point out that the Authority had a net return of some $300,000 on the investment.

That is just what a private business would do. That is what T. V. A. has done, and that is why they have been able to serve war industries without delay. They have not had to come to Congress for a deficiency appropriation for every little line and substation for every ton of coal beyond anticipated needs. We cannot run an electricity business from Washington and we should not try. The method we have followed so far is right. This Congress has laid out the general policies and has held T. V. A.'s management strictly accountable for carrying them out. We require them to submit their plans, and to report their acts in detail.

I sometimes wonder why, when an agency is so outstandingly successful, anyone should propose to mangle it or to interfere with its management. Is it jealousy? Is it a desire to make possible the failure of a public enterprise? Is it some strange kind of politics? Or cannot we learn? Cannot we learn that when the result is successful, the charter must be good, and the methods used are bound to be right? Instead of trying to make T. V. A. like other Government bureaus, I propose we try to make the other bureaus a little more like T. V. A. This organization brings a breath of fresh air to clear the murky atmosphere of bureaucracy.

So I will be opposed to any proposal that will change T. V. A.'s organization or force it to alter its methods until it can be proven there are better ways for it to accomplish its purposes, or until there are abuses in its management which must be corrected. I am opposed to any suggestion that would yield any of its independence in making its decisions of operation, either to any other executive agency or to Congress. I like the way they are doing the job now.

I want Congress to study the methods of T. V. A. and to take pride in its achievements. I want us to give praise where it is due. And it is due T. V. A. I believe that David Lilienthal, Chairman of its Board, is one of the ablest, most loyal, and devoted public servants this country has produced. He has headed a program which is changing the economic picture of the South, which has permitted us to be in truth the arsenal of democracy. It is a program which has brought to my part of the country not only massive dams and power houses, not only a useful river highway, but a new concept of the relationship that can exist between the common man and his Central Government—a relationship that must exist if this democracy is going to solve the problems of the post-war world.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

DECENTRALIZATION OF THE STEEL INDUSTRY

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Chairman, the independent offices appropriation bill, now under consideration, includes the appropriation of the necessary funds for the administration of the United States Merchant Marine by the Maritime Commission.

The Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, has been referred to as the magna carta of our American Merchant Marine. It is the organic law specifically defining the duties of the Maritime Commission. Section 101 states:

> It is necessary for the national defense * * * that the United States shall have a merchant marine * * * capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency.

Thus the United States merchant marine is an integral part of our national defense. From the outbreak of this war the cry has been for ships, ships, and more ships. It is the duty of the Maritime Commission to exert every effort of which it is capable to furnish these ships in sufficient quantity to guarantee the winning of the war.

In almost every speech made by members of the Maritime Commission, from the chairman on down, over the radio, before public bodies, and in their statements they have made before committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, they refer to the steel shortage existing in this country as the primary reason why they cannot produce more ships. It becomes apparent that the only way we are to get more ships is by increasing the production of steel to meet every requirement of the Nation. If steel production is to be increased it can only be accomplished by the decentralization of the steel industry which will break the strangle hold these steel masters have held upon this Nation in both wartime as well as peacetime.

You and I know that more ships are required to furnish the ammunition, guns, tanks, and supplies to our ever-increasing military forces in Africa, the Solomon Islands, Australia, and India. These ships are absolutely essential.

Mr. Chairman, more ships are needed to carry food to the destitute and hungry women and children of Puerto Rico, and in turn to bring back to this country the 300,000 tons of sugar now stored in Puerto Rican warehouses. The crying need for food to be shipped to these citizens of our own United States is almost beyond human description, as has been testified to by their elected representatives before the Committee on Insular Affairs, of which I am a member.

Large sections of our population are being relocated to carry on shipbuilding and manufacturing for the war effort. Agents of the Maritime Commission, as well as other agencies of Government, are recruiting labor from the Middle Western States. These workers are sent at Government expense to the Pacific Coast, large numbers of whom go to the San Francisco Bay area, where they are forced to live under conditions of squalor and filth in tents and campwagons, by reason of a lack of housing. Housing cannot be furnished because of the lack of steel. It is a sorry picture, indeed, in a country which has the greatest stands of virgin timber in the world—of redwood, pine, and fir—but no hardware with which to assemble and build houses. This critical situation has caused an alarming labor turn-over amounting in many instances to as much as 20 percent per month.

The greatest bottleneck in all history exists in the shortage of steel, fostered and nurtured by the steel masters of this Nation that they might continue to control its production and price structure in the post-war period. This self-centered, self-satisfied group, too long tolerated by a nation fighting for its very existence, have built up an empire of steel production in a very limited area of our Nation, outside of which they exert every effort to prevent the production of steel from the natural resources of great areas of our Nation. They have established a dividing line, over which they stand guard, separating the remainder of the Nation from the great mineral resources of the West. They defiantly maintain that there shall be no decentralization of the steel industry beyond that dividing line, while the security of the Nation demands that those western resources shall be used.

Evidence of their defiance of the development of our western resources was brought out before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries which was appointed by the chairman to investigate the steel shortage, and of which I am a member. It is again more recently found in the mouthpiece of the steelmasters, the weekly magazine the Iron Age. In the issue of January 21, 1943, by ridicule and contempt, they attempt to discourage and destroy the enterprise of Henry J. Kaiser in his effort to meet the expanding needs of steel on the Pacific coast by building a steel plant with his own financial resources. And this notwithstanding the fact that the Federal Government has poured almost a billion dollars into the laps of these steelmasters for the expansion and modernization of their plants.

The Government of the United States, more than a century ago, found it necessary to insure the safety of our country by building its own navy yards. That policy has proven itself to be farsighted and admirable. Our merchant marine is one of the four important links in our national defense, along with our Army, Navy, and Air Forces. The merchant marine is dependent upon steel. Up until the present crisis these same steelmasters, who own the mines, the smelters, and furnaces, and the mills, also owned or controlled the entire shipbuilding industry at the outbreak of this war. Their stranglehold extended beyond steel production. It is now time that the Government itself shall step into the picture and establish its own steel-producing plants, for no other group in this country is sufficiently large to overcome the obstacles which will be placed in their way by the present steelmasters.

In order to utilize the full natural resources of the entire Nation in the interest of national defense and the security of the Nation through the construction of all the ships required to win this war, it is the bounden duty of the Maritime Commission to demand the decentralization of this steel octopus whose tentacles reach into every phase of our national economy.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, on February 8 former President Hoover appeared before the Manpower Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee in a closed session, and thereafter, following his testimony, distributed to reporters a memorandum or statement for the press which was given wide publicity.

In his release to the press he said, in part, "We should not try to do too much too fast" and this is so because "time runs in our favor."

Let us analyze this statement, "Time runs in our favor," and what would probably happen if our Government and the United Nations followed his views.

Time did run in our favor, but that is not so now. It is not correct to say that at this stage of the war. Ever since Nazi Germany started this war, those nations opposing Germany had to wage a defensive warfare, and time was their ally. After Pearl Harbor, we also had to wage a defensive war—and time was our ally, but that situation has changed. The United Nations are now on the offensive in all parts of the world, with the exception of China, where offensive action will occur in the reasonably near future. Time is not the ally of those nations possessing the offensive.

Until Hitler failed to conquer England by air attack, and later to destroy the Russian armies, the Nazi blitzkrieg was a race against time. Divide people within by propaganda, by hatred, by racial, religious, or other appeals; through fear, by any means, to soften up a people; to employ deceit and hypocrisy whenever it could be done effectively, even lulling into a feeling of safety, then the sudden attack by air and tank followed by infantry consolidation; playing one nation against another, so he could attack one at a time and conquer them quickly, and then accomplishing the objective with quick success.

The Nazi blitzkrieg consisted of attacking and conquering quickly one nation at a time, as long as that policy could be followed. It was a race against time.

The Nazi blitzkrieg's days are now over. The attempt to quickly compel Britain to submit by the vicious, powerful air attacks was prevented by the courage of the people of England, their ability to stand the pain and suffering of the air blitzkrieg.

Then Hitler turned on Russia, to remove that country as a threat to his rear or flank before the actual land invasion of England took place. The quick removal of Russia from the war, then the strong concentrated attack on England to conquer that country, or to compel it to sue for peace, before the United States could reach a stage where we could play an important and telling part in the war. That was the blitzkrieg in operation.

The second setback for the blitzkrieg type of military campaign took place on the plains and in the mountains of Russia; when the Nazi failed to capture Moscow and Leningrad last year and Stalingrad this year and, above all, when the Nazi failed to destroy the intactness and effectiveness of the Russian Army.

That means that Hitler's race against time—an important and necessary element of a successful blitzkrieg—is over.

We witness through the press of the victories of the Russian Armies, the defeats of the German Armies, their seeming confusion. That is the time to strike hard, to follow up successes, no let-up to permit the enemy to reorganize and form new lines of defense. In Russia time is the ally of the Nazi. The Russians are not letting them use time as an ally. With a victory and the demoralization that has followed, the Russians are not delaying or resting, content with the victory they have won, thereby allowing the Germans to use time as a means of reorganization, of bringing up reserves and needed weapons of war, to resist successfully the next attack. The Russians apparently recognize that with the Germans on the run, badly shaken, that is the time to attack—and attack—that actions can be taken that could not be when and where the enemy was not badly shaken—that to get the maximum results it is a race against time.

No, former President Hoover; as you were so badly mistaken in your judgment before December 7, 1941, when you opposed President Roosevelt in his recommendations to prepare our country for defense against the then impending danger, so is your judgment again wrong when you said that "time runs in our favor."

Time is now the ally of the Axis. With Germany on the defensive and with Hitler admitting that time is his ally as he did in his speech in the latter part of September, for anyone to take the position that time is our ally is to take a position in favor of a negotiated peace, of unadulterated appeasement. If that is what former President Hoover stands for, why does he not say so—frankly state to the American people that he stands for a negotiated peace instead of using deceptive words to hide his true thoughts.

I do not charge that former President Hoover, whom I respect personally, stands for appeasement, but if we follow his advice the result will be a stalemate of the war, a wave of appeasement sentiment, and a negotiated peace. Such a peace would be a victory for our enemies and constitute only a short truce until our enemies have regained their strength and again start on the road of world conquest; the destruction of the democratic way of life; of a decent world in which to live; and of the religious civilization we possess and which is the origin of everything that decent men and women stand for and aspire to obtain.

Last September Hitler admitted that time is the ally of the Axis. His speech was followed up by speeches along the same lines by Goebbels and Goering. The controlled press of Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy upon the orders of their masters took up the same line. Later events have supported the fact that the Nazis are waging a defensive warfare. This does not mean they are not dangerous. They are. This does not mean they will not engage in offensive attacks and actions. They will, if the opportunity presents itself. But it does mean that the blitzkrieg is over. Germany has failed to remove Russia as a potent factor in this war before the United States and England, and particularly the United States, because of our recent forced entry into the war, have developed to the point where our resources could be thrown into the conflict with telling effect.

Instead of being weak, Russia has shown great strength; the United States and England have developed their resources and armed forces to a powerful extent, and while the enemy is weakening we are growing stronger.

Time is the ally of Nazi Germany and of Fascist Italy, as it is also becoming the ally of Japan.

We have captured Guadalcanal, an offensive action. General MacArthur has also recently won an offensive victory in New Guinea. The African situation is known to all of us. That is also an offensive action. Are we to sit back, using time as our ally, and rest content with what we have done? Does anyone think that such policy will win the war? This is what Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, and imperialistic Japan would like to see us do.

Yes; "time was once on our side," but not now, Mr. Hoover. If you were President now, former President Hoover, and charged with the duty and responsibility of leading our people to victory, of preserving our country, which is the specific duty of a President in time of war, under conditions as they now exist, would you adopt the policy of using time as an ally?

If you did, you would probably go down in history as a President who meant to do the right thing, but who was unable to grasp and meet the problems of our country in war, just the same as you failed to grasp, understand, and meet the problems of the economic war of 1929 to 1933. You would go down in history as a President who failed in his trust.

With our recovery from Pearl Harbor, with the victories of MacArthur in New Guinea, with the capture of Guadalcanal, with our naval victories in the Far East, and with what will take place in that area and in China in the future, with the African expedition, with the defeat of Rommel, relieving the threat to Alexandria, the Suez Canal, and to India, with the successes of the Russian armies, the whole basic course of the war has changed. The United Nations are no longer on the defensive, and time, our valuable ally of past days, is no longer our ally now. Time is an ally of defensive powers in a war. It is now the ally of the Axis, admitted by word and conceded by deed. Before New Guinea, Stalingrad, Rommel's defeat, the African invasion, Guadalcanal, our naval victories over the Japs, it was different.

One year ago and less the picture for us looked bad. Thank God, that picture has changed. Of course, we have hard days ahead of us, but one thing is certain, as we view world happenings of recent months, and look underneath the surface and analyze those events, their meaning and results, one has been to change the basic conduct of the war. We have changed from a basic policy of defensive warfare—using time as an ally as much as we could, to the basic policy of offensive warfare. Hitler and his allies have been compelled to concede the defeat of the blitzkrieg method and to change from the offensive to the defensive.

If we use time as former President Hoover indicates we should, we will thus permit the enemy to recover from his defeats, and thereby permit a recovery that might enable the Axis to regain the offensive again. To permit that to happen would constitute criminal negligence, willful and reckless disregard on the part of those charged with the conduct and the winning of the war.

I wonder if former President Hoover were President today, charged with the grave responsibilities that rest upon the Commander in Chief in time of war, with the duty of leadership that will save our country, if he would say in the light of world conditions as they exist today, that "time runs in our favor." If he did, thereby permitting Hitler, and he is the main enemy in Europe, if not in the world, to have time to build strong lines of fortified places, so that when the flower of our youth and the youth of our nations united with us were killed or wounded in large numbers where such fortified places were attacked—the result would probably be a rise of the feeling of appeasement, and a negotiated peace. A negotiated peace is a partial victory for our enemies. Such a peace would be a defeat for us. When time becomes the ally of both sides to a conflict, it usually means that both sides are so exhausted that neither one cannot administer the knock-out blow to the other. The result is likely to be an armistice—a temporary stay, under the guise of a compromise peace.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts is trying to make it appear that Mr. Hoover stands for appeasement.

Mr. McCORMACK. Was the gentleman here during all of my remarks?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the gentleman hear me say that "I do not charge that former President Hoover, whom I respect personally, stands for appeasement, but if we follow his advice the result will be a stalemate of the war, a wave of appeasement sentiment, and a negotiated peace"?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman understands Mr. Hoover has on many occasions said that he is in this war to fight it to a decisive finish?

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman agree with former President Hoover that time is now our ally?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I do not know what Mr. Hoover had in mind at that time. If he had in mind that the United States because of its tremendous productive possibilities is getting stronger with each succeeding day, his remarks might well be interpreted that time was on our side. Of course, one can interpret words whichever way one desires to have them interpreted. What I rose particularly to find out is whether the gentleman wants to make a serious charge that Mr. Hoover is working with the Nazis or is trying to appease them.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has no right to try to read into my remarks thoughts that are not there, because nobody has for an instant said that of Mr. Hoover. If anyone did say it, I would be the first to challenge him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Having regard for the unity we are trying to have in this country, I do not want the gentleman to try to read anything into the motives of Mr. Hoover.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts talks about unity. Nobody has fought more than I have for unity.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I agree with the gentleman, and I dislike to see him try to raise a discordant note at this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman need not feel disturbed about the extent to which he must apologize for what Mr. Hoover said. What Mr. Hoover said speaks for itself. Mr. Hoover has said that time now runs in our favor, and I challenge that statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman believe that from now on we will be stronger, that time will make us stronger?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not material to my discussion today. Time is not running in our favor. The fact that we get stronger is no reason for thinking that time is running in our favor. We are on the offensive.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And we want to keep on the offensive; we are demanding that we go on the offensive, but at the same time, time is in our favor; we are getting stronger.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman makes that statement, he puts himself in the same category as former President Hoover.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I do not; and the gentleman from Massachusetts knows better than that, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. Am I to conclude from the gentleman's remarks that it is his opinion that it might be better to expend the blood of American boys than the ammunition that is in the making?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's question has no relationship to this. We are producing. Until recent months we were on the defensive and now we have taken the offensive. To consider time as an ally now would be to follow a policy that would be favorable to our enemies. Of course, Mr. Hoover is a fine American—nobody questions that—and any attempt to inject that into this discussion is irrelevant, immaterial, and not pertinent; I might say impertinent in the sense it was intended as such, but certainly it is not pertinent to the issue. However, Mr. Hoover did make the statement that time is our ally, but the fact is that we are now on the offensive, and time is not the ally of the nations that are on the offensive—that are waging an offensive war to victory.

Of course, the increasing production of the weapons of war is important, but are we going to sit back and wait and rest content, with the enemy on the run—on the defensive—and let them consolidate their forces and reorganize and fortify themselves, which would result in a greater loss of life when our American boys undertake to attack them in the places we permitted them to fortify strongly, simply because we held back from making an attack when the time was ripe for us to do so?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not mean to interpret from anything that Mr. Hoover said, at least as far as he read it here, that Mr. Hoover wants this to be an appeasement.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am discussing the results that would follow, if the policy of Mr. Hoover was adopted.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman think that he has gone far afield in trying to interpret these things?

Mr. McCORMACK. No. I am justified in interpreting Mr. Hoover's remarks. The gentleman himself undertook to interpret them a moment ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. When he undertook not to take issue but to undertake to defend Mr. Hoover in that statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I was trying to show that time was really in our favor.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, Mr. Hoover said that, but it is not now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I said the productive forces of America were gathering every day, and as that momentum gathers force we are getting stronger.

Mr. McCORMACK. But time is not necessary; we have taken the offensive.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why do you not do it now?

Mr. McCORMACK. Why do we not do it? If we should depend upon our friend from Massachusetts and former President Hoover—could the gentleman conduct the war any better than the President?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not saying that I could.

Mr. McCORMACK. Apparently the gentleman would leave that impression. I am glad to see my Republican friend so excited.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not so excited at all, and I am sure the gentleman must be excited, or he would not make this charge against me.

Mr. McCORMACK. What charge have I made against the gentleman?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, the gentleman can read the remarks.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is the gentleman himself who is making the charge.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not.

Mr. McCORMACK. In general you are putting yourself in the same position that Mr. Hoover has put himself in, but I have never considered you in that position in your attitude here, and I want to say that for my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the people on this side of the aisle have given the gentleman more support in this war than any minority ever did.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have said that, and I have stated that I am not attacking the conduct of the minority. I am not saying a word about the Members on that side. I am discussing a remark made by former President Hoover that had wide publicity and presented serious implications to the American people, so that proper public opinion would be aroused and state what the results would have been likely to be, if we had followed the advice of former President Hoover. I have said that this House has cooperated on war measures, and if anyone should undertake to attack the House I would resent it. Any remark that I made is in no way directly or indirectly to cast an aspersion on anyone who sits on the Republican side of this House. I have said there is no organized opposition to the President in this war. I said before that the President of the United States has received the best support in this war that any President in war had ever received from any Congress. I stand by that statement and my remarks today are not inconsistent with it in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the United Nations have only started. We have wrested the affirmative or the offensive from the enemy, and under able military leadership we can continue to ultimate victory.

I am looking forward to the day when I will hear former President Hoover utter as a former President the stirring appeal to courage, action, and quick victory that I am confident he would utter if he were in the White House. I am looking forward to the day when I will hear him supporting affirmatively President Roosevelt in his courageous leadership instead of being generally, as he has in the past the negative critic, the man of uncertainty, the man who indicates a confused state of mind.

Uncertainty of mind and action will never win this war.

We can all thank God that in this crisis we have as our President and Commander in Chief a man of courageous thought and action. His most bitter enemy; without or within, will admit that President Roosevelt is a man of courage—a leader who does not know what fear is.

No; former President Hoover, time now runs in favor of the Axis. Now is the time for the United Nations with our military leadership using sound judgment, to follow up our advantage—to keep the enemy on the defensive, to administer blow after blow—to keep wearing the enemy down—to break the morale of the enemy on the civilian front, which will rapidly spread to the enemy armed forces, and bring about as early a victory as possible.

Time—now—is Hitler's ally—no longer ours. It is up to our military leaders to see that Hitler and his allies cannot make such use of time as to bring about a stalemate that will result in a compromise or negotiated peace.

The American people are far ahead of most of our men in public life in their determination to win a clean-cut victory. They want the menace of a pagan controlled world removed from our midst. They want as early a victory as is possible, and thereafter a just peace that will mean a termination of this war—and not a mere cessation—with another war following this—when the next generation of youngsters have grown to the age where they can again be used as cannon fodder.

The people of America do not want a negotiated peace—they are opposed to the appeasers within our midst.

Whether or not he meant it, with the enemy on the defensive, and on the run, so to speak, if we now adopt the policy "that time runs in our favor" as stated by former President Hoover, such as holding back, taking it easy, going slow, when the enemy is badly shaken, and with swift telling blows that would produce demoralization, chaos, a collapse of morale and resistance, the results would be in the directions of negotiated peace and not the clean-cut victory that the vast majority of American people want and recognize is necessary for our future peace and safety, and for a future decent world in which free people can live.

It is only a few weeks ago the world was electrified by the meeting of President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, both men of courage and determination. Was that a meeting based on feeling "time runs in our favor"? Out of that meeting has already come great events; and greater will come—all offensive, not defensive.

Churchill thereafter visited Turkey. Was his visit based on the presumption that we still had to stall the enemy as much as we could, that we had to continue to use "time," or was it a part of the offensive warfare now being carried on by the United Nations?

We read in the papers of the meeting in China of General Arnold in command of our American air forces and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Was that just an ordinary conference coming after the Casablanca meeting? Are there any connections between that meeting and the stirring speech of President Roosevelt Friday night when he served notice of carrying the fight, not island by island, in the far Pacific, but to the heart of military Japan, as well as to the heart of the Nazi machine in Europe?

The United Nations have agreed there will be no appeasement, and no compromise peace will come out of this war. President Roosevelt has well said that the fight will be carried to an "unconditional surrender" of the enemy. Time does not run in our favor if we are to accomplish such a victory.

On one hand we have the honest but misguided opinion of former President Hoover that "time runs in our favor," resulting, even if not intended by him, in appeasement, and in a negotiated peace.

On the other hand, we have the far-seeing courageous leadership of President Roosevelt who used time as our ally when it was necessary to do so, but who recognizes that that day has gone by—and whose leadership is the only kind that will produce what we seek—the unconditional surrender of the enemy.

Under the leadership of President Roosevelt the whole world picture has changed within the past year. One thing is certain: If we followed Mr. Hoover's advice before Pearl Harbor, even if England had survived and held Hitler in Europe without lend-lease assistance, without the destroyers transaction and other things that took place, our country would have been for all practical purposes defenseless on December 7, 1941.

Fortunately, the advice and recommendations of President Roosevelt were followed, and we were sufficiently prepared to withstand the shock of Pearl Harbor, and to recover from that catastrophe. It was due to the leadership of President Roosevelt and not the advice of former President Hoover that we were able to carry on after Pearl Harbor. It will be due to the leadership of President Roosevelt and not the wrong advice of former President Hoover that we will win this war.

We now witness former President Hoover again giving us advice—which sounds nice and pleasant, tends to lull us to sleep and inaction and is the same kind of advice he gave before Pearl Harbor, always too late, but which, if we followed it, would produce results disadvantageous to the best interests of our country and to our cause.

The American people want action that will produce results. They want the type of leadership of action, not inaction.

No one questions the high motives of former President Hoover, but I do question and challenge his judgment.

His judgment, if followed to date, would be the road to defeat.

The leadership of President Roosevelt is the road to victory.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, the colossal disbursements made and proposed by the administration for merchant marine amount to the sum of $19,500,000,000. This sum staggers the imagination and upon Congress is imposed the sacred duty of seeing that this money is expended in a manner which will conserve the interests of the country, not only during the war but during the post-war period to follow.

Shipbuilding and operation are technical performances and to the average layman are overlaid with much mystery. I was delighted therefore to find that the members of this subcommittee seem to have a full and decisive understanding of this question. Reading of the minutes of this subcommittee discloses that—and I desire to express the appreciation of the country and the Congress for the very able and understanding manner in which Messrs. WIGGLESWORTH and DIRKSEN of the minority examined the shipping experts and the members of the Maritime Commission. I am encouraged to believe that Congress is indeed coming into its own in its knowledge of these expert matters. It is no longer content with sham, subterfuge, and deceit in the departmental presentations of their budgets.

90 PERCENT UGLY DUCKLINGS

With this vast sum of $19,500,000,000 we plan to build and operate 4,400 ocean-going merchant ships. We have already completed approximately 700 ships. I wish to stress particularly at this point that 90 percent of these ships are the so-called Liberty ships, which were nicknamed the "Ugly Ducklings" by the President of the United States. These ships are supposed to be 10-knot ships of about 10,000 tons burden and were built, I am advised, from an English design. Originally the English were to build 60 of the ships, 30 at Portland, Oreg., and 30 at Portland, Maine. This phase of the shipbuilding subsequently became lend lease and we have now taken it all over. National wisdom requires us to consider of what use these ships will be after the war. We know that they are a present handicap in the conduct of the war. I have made diligent inquiry of American operating concerns and their experts as to the availability of these ships in the post-war period. I have been advised by the coastwise, intercoastal, and Atlantic operators that these ships will be of no value in the post-war period. They are too slow. They lack stability. I am told that the average speed of these ships in a head sea does not exceed 7½ knots per hour. It should be remembered that Japan 10 years ago had combination passenger and freight ships that did 25 knots an hour. All the other maritime nations long since got into ships that were 18 or 20 knots on hour.

UNFITTED IN PEACE OR WAR

I protested the building of these "ugly ducklings" when the program started, calling attention to the fact that they tied up the escorting naval ships for long periods. A voyage to Australia now is interminable when these boats are in the convoy. It is my opinion that the program is mistaken and adverse to the successful prosecution of the war and that they will not be worth a dime a dozen when the day of peace comes. I should perhaps say that they are much slower than the slowest submarine and some of the new underseas boats run over twice as fast today. It is a matter of recent history that we lost some 650 boats off the Atlantic and Caribbean coasts. I am told that very few of these ships were of the 18-knot type, although none of them were convoyed. It shows that in fighting the submarine speed is a highly important factor. It has been estimated that one C–3 ship, with a speed of approximately 18 knots, is more useful from the standpoint of trans-Atlantic carriage than 5 of the Liberty type. It is claimed there was difficulty in obtaining material and engines for the faster ships. That is the present alibi, but I do not believe it is a substantial one. It has been my belief from the beginning that the Commission should shift into the building of C–3's with all convenient speed so that when the war ends we will be in possession of ships which are usable in the post-war trade.

HISTORY OF MALADMINISTRATION

Members of the House are generally familiar with the unhappy and venal history of shipbuilding and ship operation in the United States. The Black committee investigation of shipbuilding construction and operation gave a truthful picture of the waste, extravagance, and looting of the Treasury during the years that followed the close of World War No. 1. I read the report over recently, and find that it parallels in its conclusions much that is now going on under our very eyes in the present Maritime Commission. For several years I have been living in a fool's paradise about the present Commission, but my concern has been aroused by the recent reports of the Comptroller General and other facts that have come to my notice. The Black report is dated in 1935 and followed an investigation into the spending of $2,000,000,000 by the Government in an effort to create an efficient merchant marine, which would serve our commerce in times of peace and act as an auxiliary to the Navy in time of war. The report indicts the public officials who betrayed their trust and flayed the individuals who, posing as patriots, prostituted the law for their private profit. It found that after spending this vast amount we only had built 9 ships that were comparable to those of Great Britain, Japan, and even little Norway. At the date of the report Great Britain had 735 such ships.

AMERICAN PRESIDENT LINES

I very much fear that under the present auspices we are heading for a similar debacle. In the Black report, for example, they recite the case of the Dollar Line which made a $7,000,000 profit on an investment of $500. Ships were sold on credit to the ship operators for one-tenth of their actual cost and even that sum was not forthcoming. It is interesting to note that this same outfit is today operating as the American President Lines. This line today enjoys outlandish sales prices for its vessels and exorbitant insurance and charter rates under the present emergency. After the death of former Senator McAdoo, Assistant Secretary of State Henry Grady, a friend of the President, was elected president of the company at a salary of $25,000 a year. His first act was to go to the Far East and attend a conference of shipping interests. We have an unsubsidized company operating trans-Atlantic at Mobile, Ala.. known as the Waterman Co. They had applied for admission to the eastern trade. The British were opposed to this and Mr. Grady cast the vote of the American President Lines, which is controlled by the Maritime Commission, against the admission of the Waterman Co. to that trade. At a later time I will refer more fully to this illustration of the maladministration of the present Maritime Commission. Suffice to say that Mr. Grady does not know the difference between the bow and stern of a ship. He could not tell you which is port and which is starboard, but here he is in full glory drawing down $25,000 a year as President of this line. I suggest that Judge Smith's new committee look into that incident. They will find it a flagrant example of the illegal acts of a Government department.

At the close of the last war vast flotillas of ships numbering more than 2,000 lay between wind and weather rotting themselves apart.

The picture set forth in the reports of the Comptroller, reported and unreported, shows many of the same sad conditions that existed in 1935, are again coming into vogue. I have lost confidence in the present Maritime Commission and believe that it is untrue to its trust. I state this fact regretfully. It shocks me more than it will the average Member of the House for I had, until recent developments, a full measure of confidence in the integrity and loyalty of the present Commission.

I wish to show the reasons for my change of heart. My suspicions were aroused in the first instance by the outrageous cancelation of the Higgins contract. My belief is that the moving factor in this performance was the Shipbuilding Trust, which has menaced the American merchant marine since the beginning. You will recall that Higgins, a diamond in the rough, but a genius in the shipbuilding field, had a contract for the erection of a large number of ships. He was getting his shipyard ready and had spent approximately $9,000,000 of Government money on the proposition. Under his unique plan of construction 300,000 man-days would be saved on the construction of each ship. This procedure would, of course, destroy the Shipbuilding Trust. The contract was canceled on the theory that there was a shortage of steel. Mr. Nelson, of W. P. B., denies this, and other large yards were brought into being even after the cancelation. Mr. Higgins brought his case to Washington, where he found the atmosphere extremely hostile. His assertion was that the Association of American Shipbuilders had brought about the cancelation of his contract because his type of yard would revolutionize construction of ships and reduce the cost thereof more than one-third.

Based on what I have learned during my 9 years' service on the Merchant Marine Committee, I believe that the Higgins plan for construction would enable the Government to get away from the rigged bids that were presented by the Association of American Shipbuilders. Their prices were so high it made ship operation uneconomical. To keep the record straight, I wish to state that a subcommittee of the Merchant Marine Committee gave the Maritime Commission a clean bill of health on this incident. I dissent from that most vigorously, and I want the House to note the sequel to this performance.

FEDERATION INVESTIGATION

The American Federation of Labor organized its own investigation into this cancelation and retained as special attorney former Attorney General Margiotti, of the State of Pennsylvania. He is a very able lawyer and conducted an exhaustive examination into the question, filing his report and findings at the White House. No copy of this report is available, but I have talked with some people who have seen it and told me of the remarkable and savage character of the findings contained therein. It tore the mask from the face of the shipbuilding group and asserted, among other things, that they controlled promotions in the Navy. Four days after this devastating report was filed in the White House, the President sent for Higgins and gave him a contract of $180,000,000 to build freight airplanes. I have endeavored to get a copy of this report from every available source, but the door is closed on it. I think it is fair to infer that, upon the granting of the contract, it was arranged that this report be supressed and never see the light of day. I should perhaps say that when Higgins returned to the yard which he had in part organized he found the whole place dismantled, the buildings torn down, and everything disrupted.

May I emphasize at this point that this group of shipbuilding lobbyists are actually imperiling the safety of the Nation. I make bold to call upon the President himself and the other law-enforcement agencies of the Government to smash up this trust and compel them to obey the law. There seems to be no patriotism or love of country in this shipbuilding crowd.

MR. JOSEPH W. POWELL

If you are interested in this question, I suggest that you read the majority and dissenting opinions of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States against Bethlehem Steel Co., handed down in 1941. In that case the dissenting opinion cited a finding from the district court as follows:

> The managers for the contractor (Bethlehem Steel Corporation) adopted the famous Rob Roy distinction, who admitted he was a robber but proudly proclaimed that he was no thief.

Both the majority and minority opinion savagely condemn the unpatriotic and unethical attitude of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation but gave judgment to the steel concern in the amount sought. The profit on this contract was something like 22 percent or $30,000,000.

The gentleman who negotiated this contract was Mr. Joseph W. Powell, an official of the Bethlehem Corporation. Mr. Powell was educated by the Government and is a graduate of Annapolis. Despite this unconscionable performance, Mr. Powell now sits in seats of the mighty. He is adviser in chief on shipbuilding to Secretary Knox of the Navy, and has been put there of course by this shipbuilding ring. By virtue of his present position he exercises a powerful influence over the Maritime Commission and all naval construction. If the interests of the Nation and its program of national defense differs from the program of the shipbuilding crowd, where will Mr. Powell be? We know where he was at the time of the last war when he occupied a similar position under Secretary Daniels. This shipbuilding ring is powerful and bold. They take a man smirched by the Supreme Court and put him in a commanding position in our scheme of national defense.

KENNEDY KICKED UPSTAIRS

Let me give you another illustration of the performances of this group. Mr. Joseph P. Kennedy, of Boston, was appointed by the President as chairman of the Maritime Commission. The President told him to build a merchant marine that would do the Nation credit. Bids were called for on C–3 ships. The bids were so outrageously over the estimate that Kennedy canceled the bids and denounced the performance. He called for new bids and stated that unless the bids were reasonable in character he would build the ships in England where the costs were about one-half.

I was hopeful at the time that we at last were effectively on the trail of the shipbuilding ring. Not so. In the midst of this struggle, Mr. Kennedy was sent to the Court of St. James's as Ambassador. This was a Presidential act but I do not charge the President with complicity in this performance. My judgment is that the steel and shipbuilding boys were so powerful that they were able to get Kennedy kicked upstairs for the purpose of having some more flexible gentleman in charge of the Maritime Commission. I want to say that Mr. Kennedy was a splendid official in both capacities and always remained an American. I mention the fact now for the purpose of showing you the great power of this group who place their own filthy interests above that of the country.

A RAID ON OUR TREASURY

The Maritime Act of 1936 under which we are now operating, was placed on the books for the purpose of creating a worth-while merchant marine, which would operate free from the larcenies of the old system. I was present during the writing of that law and we added to it certain safeguards that would prevent the Treasury from being looted as in the old Shipping Board style. We knew we could not pay exorbitant prices for ships and operate them successfully. It is obvious that the overhead under those circumstances, with rigged bids the order of the day, it would render the economic operation of ships impossible. We intended to build ships that would be comparable in speed and character with ships of the other maritime nations.

In regard to section 902 it was the avowed purpose of the act to make these ships available in times of war or national necessity without enhanced cost, so we wrote into the act a provision known as section 902, which provided that the Government might requisition ships in an emergency declared by the proclamation of the President. Section 902 further recites:

> When any such property or use thereof is so requisitioned, the owner thereof shall be paid just compensation for the property taken, or for the use of said property, but in no case the value of the property taken or used shall be deemed enhanced by the cause necessitating the taking or use.

The House knows that shipping has been highly subsidized, both in construction and operation. In effect, we made a trade with the operators that in consideration of the subsidy the United States could take these ships in time of war and the price paid for them should not be enhanced by the fact that we were in an emergency. The very able Comptroller of the United States has given an opinion on this question maintaining the legality and effect of section 902. For many months this section has been under attack by the shipbuilding interests and by every lobbying influence in the Capital.

DISLOYALTY OF PUBLIC OFFICERS

I have been shocked to note that certain members of the Maritime Commission, their lawyers and advisers, are now in the saddle attempting to nullify this section. The Comptroller has gallantly stood in the breach on this proposition and has defeated an attempt to steal a billion dollars from the Federal Treasury. I charge the members of the Commission and their lawyers with being unfaithful to their official oaths. I say they are not representing the Government. Their function is to assert the integrity of this section and uphold the Comptroller in his stand. I have examined some of these gentlemen in committee. They speak in reverent and hushed tones in regard to the constitutional provision on the taking of property. They are eloquent and tearful on this. In the last session of Congress an attempt was made to emasculate this section. It was killed by the diligence of Members of the House and Senate. It means more than a billion dollars will be taken out of the Treasury for the benefit of the highly favored ship operators and owners if this law is changed. I invite the cooperation of the House in fighting this proposal to the limit and venture the hope that the Maritime Commission and other agencies of the Government will not continue to misrepresent the Nation in such matters as this. Their present position does little credit to their official loyalty and does not display a proper concept of their official oath.

I fully realize that some of these gentlemen will wrap the flag about themselves and claim that they are winning the war. I say that if we legalize larceny in this country and permit groups of shipbuilders, or indeed any other group, to raid the Treasury during such a time as this, we will be in as bad shape as though we lost the war.

We certainly will lose what we are fighting for because popular government cannot survive in America unless administered honestly, free from the taint of influence or venality.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

A PROGRAM FOR PEACE

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I rise today for the first time in this House, sooner than I had intended. I am fully conscious of my deficiencies in experience, and otherwise, for this task, but nevertheless, for all new Members there must be a first time, so I beg the indulgence of this House for the time at my disposal.

The reason I am speaking sooner than I had intended is simply this: Although I am not unconscious of the sparkling beauty and suavity of manner of the honorable lady from Connecticut, yet I find that I am not as susceptible to her logic and to her persuasion, at least on the floor of this House, as some of my colleagues appear to have been.

I realize that I cannot expect as large and as rapturous a gallery, or as attentive an audience in this House, as the honorable lady had. Neither will I have the sympathetic and universal press. Certainly I cannot expect Life magazine to support my views in its editorial policy. Nevertheless, and in spite of these obvious and perhaps fatal disadvantages, I feel constrained to offer a few thoughts for the consideration of this House in opposition to those of the honorable Member from Connecticut. Further, I might add that since the honorable lady is a new Member of this House, I thought it might not be considered inappropriate for me, likewise a new Member, albeit not a very glamorous one, to take exception to her views on the extremely important and delicate issue that she raised in her address to this House a week ago today.

Some of the reasons and conclusions of my honorable colleague may be summarized rather briefly. She says that specific war and peace aims can never be clarified until we know what goes on in the mind of Josef Stalin; she says that we should pity Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill for floundering in a sea of uncertainty, and that the Atlantic Charter is a monumental generality and noble catch-all, and the four freedoms a virtuous platitude—I presume just pieces of paper. She says indeed it will be dangerous for us to propose specific international settlements today which Stalin might dispose tomorrow.

She brushes aside the isolationists and "the bigger and redder and more royal" international new dealers. With her inspired, feminine intuition she reveals that we all agree, on both sides of the aisle, that—I quote—

> We shall all demand henceforth to be secure from attack.

The key to this noble aspiration, she says, is America's position in the postwar air world. The air policy of all young, air-minded Americans is they want to fly everywhere. This statement would seem to indicate that freedom of the skies throughout the world is the desire of young America.

AMERICAN AIR POLICY

From this point on, the train of her thought is difficult to follow, so I hope that I may not be held strictly accountable if I should misinterpret certain passages. The argument apparently is that the United States has achieved supremacy in the commercial aviation field by a policy of sovereignty of the skies over a nation's own territory and the denial of free access to its airports. She is fearful that our Government is now negotiating to abandon the sovereignty-of-the-skies policy for a policy of freedom of the skies. It is at this point that I confess I get lost. The argument seems to reduce itself to this: That our policy must be to exclude all foreign aircraft from our skies and airports and at the same time proceed to establish air lines and airports over and in all the other countries of the world.

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Following your practice, I prefer to finish my statement and then I will yield.

It is inconceivable to me that anyone could seriously urge, in these modern days, except in connection with a plan of imperialistic expansion by force, à la Nazi, that we can adopt an exclusive policy with regard to our own country and a freedom-of-the-skies policy for all other countries. What will our friends of the United Nations think of such a noble and altruistic policy, or should I say sinister policy?

Of a similar nature is her argument that since freedom of the seas did not prevent World War No. 1 and No. 2, that freedom of the air will not prevent World War No. 3. With equal force, it seems to me, one could argue that since freedom of speech and freedom of religion in this country did not prevent two world wars and will not prevent a third, therefore we should abandon these principles as useless to our Nation. It seems superfluous to observe that freedom of the seas was not the culprit; it was merely the innocent bystander and no more caused this war than did Holland, Denmark, or Norway.

Being unable to follow any serious logic in this reasoning, I am compelled to conclude that the point of this passage was to ridicule the Vice President of the United States. Her witty and scintillating remarks about Mr. WALLACE were quite equal to the sophisticated style of Walter Winchell and Time magazine. Not only is Mr. WALLACE spasmodically sane, but he is full of "globaloney," a wonderful word which convulsed the gallery and will certainly live for many seasons in the folklore of Broadway. There is no denying it, our honorable colleague is a wit.

In the concluding paragraphs of the address there was an effort to create the impression that the British are aware of the importance of air power and that we had better begin immediately to grab every base and air route before the war is over and while the British are preoccupied with Herr Hitler. She even hints that the British might use lend-lease planes to help rebuild their air routes after the war.

WORLD WAR NO. 3

The most astounding and at the same time the most significant passage of the address is the next to last paragraph. I quote:

> I do not hesitate to say, if out of indifference or lack of foresight, this administration and this Congress espouse the wrong air policy for this Nation, we shall have most efficiently laid the ground work for America's certain defeat in World War No. 3.

The way to avoid this calamity, she infers, is that we must now, before this war is over, begin to prepare for the next war, World War No. 3, by adopting her version of sovereignty of the skies.

It must be admitted, of course, that the air policy advocated by the Honorable Member is probably the most effective method imaginable of bringing on a Third World War. If we initiate this aggressive program of expanding our international air routes and at the same time exclude everyone from our skies, do any of you have any doubt what the effect would be on our British, Russian, and Chinese Allies?

In the course of the speech a statement by Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles was used to fortify the imperialistic arguments of the gentlewoman. I want to draw the Members' attention to a more recent statement by the same Mr. Welles, printed in the Washington Post February 12. I quote:

> There could be no surer road to disaster, no surer means of bringing about unmitigated havoc in the future, than for the United Nations to enter the post-war period as rivals and opponents in their commercial and financial policies, rather than as collaborators in a common task of seeking and achieving international economic stability and general well-being. Together we can solve this gigantic problem; opposed to one another, no one of us will profit.

This, I submit, is a thoroughly sound policy and is directly opposed to that of our honored colleague.

THE BRITISH POLICY

With regard to the statement of the British Under Secretary for Air, Captain Balfour, quoted by the gentlewoman as justification for our pursuing the old game of grab, the whole debate in Parliament, printed in the RECORD of February 9, certainly does not justify the impression given by that quotation standing alone. In fact, I think it is directly to the contrary. For example, Mr. Perkins, M. P., said:

> I am not in any way antagonistic to the great American Nation. I believe that it is vital that in the future we should cooperate with the Americans in air transport.

Again, Captain Wright, M. P., said:

But if we are to return to a condition of insane, unrestricted international competition, the future of civil aviation, as of so many other features of reconstruction, will be exceedingly black.

The debate as a whole, filling seven and one-half pages of the RECORD, certainly makes no threats in any way to our air supremacy. On the contrary, the British recognize that the necessities of war have given the manufacturing of large transport planes to the United States and left the small fighter planes for the British. They acknowledge that Pan-American Airways has practically taken over the world's commercial air transport. Mr. Perkins stated that there were only two civil aircraft in all England, of their own make, capable of flying the Atlantic.

These circumstances clearly indicate that our interests will best be served by a policy of freedom of the skies in order that we may obtain the bases for our aircraft throughout the world. There is no question as to our predominance in the manufacturing field.

It seems to me a very unwise and dangerous move for us, at this critical time, to adopt a policy of proceeding now to gobble up all the commercial advantages possible, while we and our allies are desperately fighting to defeat the common enemy. Furthermore, I think it exceedingly unfortunate to assume at this time that nothing whatever can be done about controlling the savage and violent elements of the world; to assume that World War No. 3 is just around the corner. Such an assumption is a most powerful inducement to that very result.

I submit that the only rational policy for this great Nation of ours, is to assume, what I believe to be true, that the peoples of this earth have learned something by experience, that they earnestly desire to avoid and to prevent another world war, and that they are willing to make reasonable sacrifices to attain this end. Upon this assumption, our representatives should begin negotiations at once with our allies to formulate a specific and concrete system for collective security of the nations of the world. I, for one, believe that such a system is possible, providing the people of this Nation, especially our national Representatives, are willing to discard our traditional isolationism, now often disguised under the name of Americanism, and to approach the problem of war and peace with a determination to do everything possible to find a practical solution.

Mr. Chairman, I propose that this Congress, instead of assuming a defeatist policy with regard to war, immediately authorize and direct its Committee on Foreign Affairs to undertake a thorough study of all proposals for post-war international organizations designed to prevent war. That committee should be instructed to make a report of its findings to this House in the near future. It should develop specific recommendations regarding this vital matter for the consideration of the executive branch of this Government and the people of this Nation.

The time is getting short for the development and consideration of a program for peace. It must be done now, while the minds and hearts of the peoples of this world are concerned with universal and fundamental issues—while danger and sacrifice give us humility and understanding. With the return of peace and even temporary security from danger, our personal and domestic problems distract our attention and overshadow our will to cooperate for the common good.

I do not propose that we undertake some sentimental and idealistic enterprise. I believe that our own selfish interests—in fact, our very survival as a great nation—is dependent upon an intelligent and practical system of collective security—a system by which brute force and mechanical force can be controlled so that it is no longer available to any gang of outlaws who may happen even temporarily to control a nation. It seems to me that in international relations, as in domestic affairs, force can be made to serve instead of to destroy our society.

I do not think we need to wait for Joseph Stalin to take the lead in the clarification of our war and peace aims. If we can clarify our own aims and give Mr. Stalin some assurance that we are sincere in those aims, I have no doubt that he will be glad to cooperate if those aims are fair and reasonably practicable. Further, I cannot agree that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill are floundering aimlessly about. Somehow it has never occurred to me to pity those two gentlemen as aimless wanderers in a sea of uncertainty. Surely, the gentlewoman has not forgotten already who it was that warned this Nation, long before Pearl Harbor, of events to come and who insisted upon enlarging our Navy, in spite of the violent protest of the isolationists. Likewise, in Britain, whose was the great and prophetic voice that condemned the appeasers of Munich and inspired the British people to an heroic defense? No; I cannot agree that these two men are short-sighted and aimless wanderers in a sea of uncertainty.

PLATITUDES

The Atlantic Charter, it seems to me, is no more of a monumental generality or virtuous platitude than is the preamble of our own Constitution or our own sacred Declaration of Independence. Noble aspirations, nobly expressed, have served and, I believe, will serve a useful purpose in the progress of mankind. They are introductory to the specific and difficult business of creating a sane and practical machinery for the guidance of a turbulent human race. It may be expected that such platitudes have no place in a policy of shortsighted and adolescent, nationalistic, imperialism.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the only substantial benefit this Nation can realize from this war is the assurance of a peaceful world, based upon a world-wide system of collective security. Such a system can be achieved only with the genuine cooperation of our gallant allies.

The narrow, imperialistic policy of grab, advocated by the honorable lady, carries within itself the seeds of its own destruction. An exclusive policy with regard to our own airports obviously will induce the same exclusive policy in all other sovereign nations. But the most evil consequence of that policy is that it will so arouse the suspicion and distrust of our allies as to our purposes that we can never convince them that we have a sincere desire to stop, once and for all, the recurrence of these frightful wars which are so rapidly destroying the vitals of our Christian civilization. I, for one, do not wish to base our policy on the assumption that a third world war is just around the corner. On the contrary, I believe this great Nation of ours now has, or shortly will have, the power to turn this ghastly, barren tragedy into a tremendous opportunity which, with imagination, intelligence, and determination, will enable us, together with our allies, to create the world of the future.

Mrs. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If my time has not expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mrs. LUCE. The young and very able gentleman from Arkansas has spoken rather loosely of what he calls my freedom-of-the-air policy. I would like to ask a very specific question of the gentleman. By his definition of what he calls a proper air policy for the United States, does he intend that this country should control its own skies or airports, or does he intend to relinquish that control?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I cannot imagine that this country can relinquish control of the skies and airports any more than it has relinquished control of its seaports under our traditional policy of freedom of the seas.

Mrs. LUCE. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. At several points the gentleman said I had inferred this or that. I inferred nothing. I implied and the gentleman from Arkansas did the inferring. Now, would the gentleman from Arkansas be good enough to give me the precise passage, the precise quote from the text of my speech in which I said that America must control the sovereign skies of any other nation?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. No; I do not think I said that. You proposed that America gain control of air bases and air routes.

Mrs. LUCE. Will the gentleman be good enough to give me the exact text and quote in which I implied or inferred or stated specifically that this country acquire bases and routes from sovereign nations without free negotiations between those nations and ourselves?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Would you like me to read your speech again to this audience?

Mrs. LUCE. I should like you to read that portion of it which you say says such a thing.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. That is implicit throughout the speech, if I recall correctly.

Mrs. LUCE. You are inferring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, there is a section in the bill that is before us that deals with various increases in research fields, giving recognition to the splendid work being done to improve, through research, our air services to the utmost degree. Certain increased and necessary personnel needs can now be met and the work greatly accelerated. I am, of course, aware of the splendid work being done at Langley Field and in the Ames Laboratory at Mott Field, but I know more about the great research engine laboratory at Cleveland. Need for a three-shift set-up has become increasingly evident, and this recognition by the committee and by the Budget is particularly gratifying to those of us who know something of the enthusiasm, the consecration, and the grim determination that is going into the work there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

GEORGE WASHINGTON AND THE NEW DEAL

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the strain and wear and tear on New Deal heroes is not alone terrific, it is devastating. You will recall that the President started out with Old Hickory as his hero, to whom he claimed spiritual kinship. Indeed, the tie was so close that we were, once upon a time, told by him that he often communed with that great national hero in the long hours of the night. Not only did Jackson provide the New Deal with the necessary spiritual leadership for those who longed to make America over, but Old Andy had a decided monetary value to the New Deal when it came to holding pay-as-you-go dinners.

We vividly recall the first Jackson Day dinner at the Mayflower Hotel, back in the early days of the New Deal, when the faithful, both those who were members of the official family as well as those who hoped soon to be in that happy situation, gathered at the festive board and like a swarm of locusts proceeded to eat off gold plates at $100 per plate.

Similar feeds were given all over the country, but at somewhat reduced rates because fourth-class postmasters, as a rule, do not have $100 to spare for such doings after having paid the cost of framing their diploma in high finance. These dinners, whether they cost $100, or some lesser amount, were held under the auspices of the Democratic National Committee, and the proceeds devoted to making the country safe for the New Deal.

Old Hickory continued to retain his high standing at the White House until the proposal to pack the Supreme Court, sometimes called the remount station, came up. Then someone suddenly discovered that Old Hickory had been strong for the Constitution and constitutional government. That placed too great a strain on the fellowship that had until then existed between his spirit and the Chief Executive, so Andy was thrown into the discard and little has been heard about him since.

Other heroes such as Confucius, Joseph and the Pharaohs, Jefferson, and even Theodore Roosevelt, followed in rapid succession, but one and all developed some weak spot, some defect in their philosophy of government which necessitated their being shoved into the background.

Lo and behold, the new dealers have now adopted a new hero—George Washington—and on February 22 the Democratic National Committee will sponsor dinners all over the country to honor the memory of that great American and, incidentally thereto, garner in more sheckels for the cause.

This is an age of incongruities and certainly nothing can be more incongruous than the new dealers honoring the memory of George Washington at so much per plate. As I recall, George Washington not only refused a crown, but he also spurned a third term because he felt that if the same individual were kept in the White House longer than 8 years there was the possibility and danger that he might seek to perpetuate himself in power.

George Washington was against just about all that the New Deal stands for. He was for a balanced Budget; he abhorred debts; he stood for national solvency; and above all he stood for government by law rather than by men. More especially was he against government by crackpots and dreamers, but these considerations will not be permitted to bar the use of his name in order to raise money for the campaign to promote a fourth term.

The name "Washington" is revered, honored, and beloved throughout the land. No loyal American should refuse to buy one or more tickets to a dinner given to honor his birthday, but how the idea must lacerate the feelings of those who are expected to buy tickets. Evidently, not all Democrats will do so. Let me read an Associated Press story from the St. Cloud (Minn.) Daily Times Journal of February 8, which shows that the program to again milk the faithful is meeting with various and indifferent responses. By the way, this newspaper has been most loyal to the New Deal.

I read:

SUGGESTS CHANGE IN JACKSON DAY ANNUAL BANQUET

ST. PAUL, MINN.—Responding to an invitation to the annual Democratic Jackson Day dinner to raise party funds, John Regan, Mankato, 1940 party nominee for Senator, suggested that the date should be changed to the birthday of Texas Guinan, who greeted her "victims" with, "Hello, Sucker."

Regan expressed his sentiments in a letter to Elmer F. Kelm, of the party State central committee. Saying he was in receipt of Kelm's letter asking for a $25 contribution to the national committee, Regan added:

"I also note that if I pay the $25, I'll be invited to a dinner to be held at the Hotel St. Paul on February 22, Washington's Birthday. Heretofore these dinners have been held on Jackson's birthday. As you know, he was the one who coined the expression, 'To the victor belongs the spoils.' I would like to suggest that the day of the dinner be changed to Texas Guinan's birthday. She at least greeted her victims with, 'Hello, Sucker.' "

Regan asserted that these dinners have resulted in the national committee taking $100,000 out of the State in the past 5 years, although New York, Illinois, and New Jersey contributed nothing. "Our State doesn't enjoy one major appointment held by a Democrat, either in Minnesota or in Washington," he continued.

"No State has been so completely ignored and insulted by the Democratic National Committee as has Minnesota," he continued. "Any time that the Democrats of Minnesota wish to hold a dinner or raise a fund for themselves, I'll be only too glad to attend and contribute, but when it comes to donating to a group such as Flynn, Ewing, and the rest of them, I want you to know here and now I am not to be counted on."

To many Mr. Regan's letter came as a melancholy revelation. To me it is saddening to contemplate the growing discord among the new dealers. Little did I ever expect to live to see the day that John Regan, one of Minnesota's stalwart Democrats, one time candidate for Governor and United States Senator on that ticket, would longer refuse to be played for a sucker. Surely "the world do move."

Purely in self-defense may I not submit my plea to those who are manipulating the wringer that is squeezing out the shekels that the cost of the banquet tickets shall not exceed $50. One hundred dollars per ticket might place a strain on my admiration for Washington, and I am also fearful that it may greatly strain the bond of loyalty of those who are devoting their fine talents to breaking the tradition against a fourth term. Above all, let us have harmony.

How long will the New Deal cleave to George Washington, you ask? My reply is that it will depend on how long his drawing power holds out.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. Those are just some observations. I was not dealing with any controversial subject. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] with regard to the "pay-as-you-go" dinners proposed by the Democratic Party will not lead to any "Ruml-rousing" sessions on those occasions, but I would like to comment to this extent, having in mind the fact that many who will attend will still be hungry after the dinner is over, hungry for office, may I ask whether the gentleman will accept an amendment to his suggestion that they be called, rather than "pay-as-you-go" dinners, "pay-as-you-yearn"?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I intended to start my speech by complimenting the House on the high caliber of the debate that has taken place today. It seems to me we have had opportunity to listen to some very important and ably delivered speeches on matters which must concern us all. Whether or not the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota fall into this category I leave to himself and the House to judge.

The majority leader, in the remarks he made a short time ago, left a message which can briefly be summed up like this: That since the advantage in this war has now passed to the United Nations, this advantage should be pressed as vigorously as possible. With this sentiment I think few Americans will disagree.

There are certain problems which it is incumbent upon this House to look forward to, one of which has been very ably dealt with already by the gentleman from Arkansas—the establishment of a genuine peace between the nations instead of another period of armed truce such as followed the last war.

I turn my attention to a subject somewhat more difficult to discuss and fraught perhaps with more disagreement than that handled by the gentleman from Arkansas, for I want to talk about the importance of having the Congress look forward to meeting the domestic problem which will confront us after the war has been won. At the conclusion of the last war America turned with great desire in her heart to a thing that was held out before her, called normalcy. Normalcy, after people had a chance to examine it turned out to mean a deliberate deflation of the medium of exchange, widespread unemployment, and countless foreclosed farms. Beginning in May of 1920 a collapse of farm prices began which in about 8 months reduced those prices to one-half of what they formerly had been, and they never recovered from that collapse until World War No. 2 was upon us. For a few months immediately after the war there was indeed a boom due to dammed-up buying power, but thereafter a collapse came upon the Nation which meant unemployment and economic distress. I believe that it is of basic importance that these things be prevented after this war has ended.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wish to proceed for just a moment.

Talk to a man in the armed services and you will find when you ask him what is the one charge he would make to you and to me, and he will tell you his charge to us is to see to it that another war does not happen in the future and to see to it that he has some sort of real job when he has finished his work of fighting. Click magazine not very long ago contacted many men in the armed forces and asked them to check the five things they felt were most important in their own minds as to what ought to be done by those not in the armed forces. The one that received twice as many checks as any other received was that there should be jobs and opportunities for them when they returned home.

This thing, Mr. Chairman, is not just going to happen. I take issue directly at this point with those who feel that we can simply forget about the matter, that we can be done with what are termed "plans for the post-war period," that we do not need to pay attention to these problems and that everything will somehow take care of itself. I believe with all those Americans who want freedom of economic opportunity and enterprise preserved into the future, but I tell you there is one way to do it and only one way, and that is to develop methods other than those of governmental controls and regimentation whereby you can assure to the people of this Nation full employment, and to the producers, agricultural as well as industrial, a full market at home for a volume of goods and services equivalent to the total output of American farms and factories at a level of full employment. As a matter of fact, not only do we fight a military war today, but there is being tested free democratic government, and free democratic government will be tested in the future to see whether we by means of our institutions of freedom can solve the difficult economic problems of this machine age. I am confident in my heart that it can be done, but I do not think it can be done without the application of intelligence.

In this bill there might have been an appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board, but I notice that that appropriation has been eliminated from the bill. I do not know why. I want to say that I am sorry it has been eliminated, for I believe that this agency is doing a worth-while job, rather quietly going about its work, and I have felt that it had its work to do rather well in hand.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will yield in a moment.

I want to say this, that I would not have any particular quarrel with this committee for having taken the action they did if only they and the House would recognize at the same time that if we do not want an executive agency to do this over-all job, then this job comes back to us into our own laps, where, in my judgment, it really belongs; in other words, my appeal today is not going to be critical of the committee and the action it has taken, though I disagree with that action, but to say that it seems to me that if you carry through this action and say to this executive agency, "We do not want you to do this job of preparing for the post-war period," then it becomes even more incumbent than it has ever been before—and as I have stated many times before—that the Congress should itself undertake as a national legislature the job of looking ahead in practical fashion and undertaking the job of developing those measures and policies upon which we can depend to guide our domestic economy safely through that difficult period which must necessarily follow this war.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is voicing the very motives which inspired the committee to take the action it did take, and I shall discuss the matter after a while.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will be glad to hear what the gentleman has to say. At the moment there are all sorts of post-war plans going on and even some by those people who make the most fuss about post-war plans. For example, I fear there are some representatives of big corporations in this country who are doing a type of post-war planning looking toward the preventing of effective competition with those corporations after the war is over. This is why there should be more representatives of small business in the War Production Board.

On the constructive side, you have many private agencies, one committee of American business headed by Mr. Harold Hoffman, president of the Studebaker Corporation. You have a committee of the American Federation of Labor which is making studies in this field. You have a number of other agencies which are making studies, working on the problem as to how America will solve this matter after the war. In addition you have a good many of the governmental agencies that are doing this. Every agency I can think of that may logically enter this field has already entered it with the single exception of the Congress of the United States, which, to my mind, is the most logical and central one that should do the job.

For 2 long years I have had before this House a bill to create a national commission on post-war reconstruction, to be composed first of Members of Congress; and, second, to be composed of representatives of industry, agriculture, labor, finance, the churches of the Nation, cooperative organizations, organizations of consumers, war veterans, and other groups.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, that measure was reported unanimously by the committee to which it was referred, but it was never acted on by the House. On the first day of the present session I reintroduced that measure, adding to it two provisions, one that of the representatives from business at least one must be a representative of small business and among the veterans at least one must be a combat veteran of the present World War.

There are two possibilities with regard to the post-war period. The first one is that you will have a situation where the predominant sentiment of the Congress will be one which will again yearn for "normalcy," so, in effect, nothing will be done except to say "the devil take the hindmost," and we will hope that there will be a prosperous condition. If that is done, mark my word, before many months have passed we will find ourselves in economic distress, we will find that we have not made good on our pledge to the men now on the fighting front to see to it that they will have, in fact, jobs and opportunity when the war is over.

The other possibility is that the Congress, having neglected to democratically develop certain measures entirely consistent with free economic enterprise in this Nation and growing out of the very matrix of legislative action, will conclude with accepting some over-all emergency recommendation on the part of an executive with Members voting for it and declaring how sorry they are but they have to do it to meet an emergency. That situation ought not to be permitted, especially not by people who are concerned about the position of the Congress in the National Government.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from California spoke awhile ago about the depression that succeeded the last war. That depression was brought about by W. P. G. Harding, president of the Federal Reserve Board, and those who were working with him in raising the rediscount rate and calling in loans.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right.

Mr. RANKIN. In other words, squeezing the currency, and the panic that destroyed the Hoover administration was brought about in the same way. That condition has not yet been cured.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Exactly.

Mr. RANKIN. Unless something is done to prevent those highbinders of high financing putting on these periodical depressions, they are going to come, war or no war.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman, and I may say that I have written a book on that subject, which I hope to be able to present to the gentleman very shortly.

Mr. RANKIN. I will be glad to read it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I want to add that the significance of the meeting of the Federal Reserve Board to which the gentleman refers was in a statement by Mr. W. P. G. Harding, in which he said it would be nice if our industrial production could continuously expand, but we must understand that the possibility of that expansion must always be limited by the "availability of finances," to my mind the most mistaken statement ever made in the economic field.

I have in this little folder here the mail that I have received in one short 5-day period in support of the measure providing for this national commission on postwar reconstruction about which I spoke. I will conclude by saying that I do not care whether it is my bill that is passed or not, but I do feel the Congress should undertake now to create a commission composed primarily of Members of Congress but inclusive of the American people generally in order that the people may not only present demands as pressure groups but can sit down and take a part of the responsibility for seeing how the general welfare of the entire Nation can be served.

May I say further that the one thing which will put more spirit and heart into our people at home than anything else that I know of is if they can see clearly that the future is secure and that people who are responsible for that future are giving attention to it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Like the gentleman from California, I am very much distressed at the committee cutting out the appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board. I also know something of their work, and, as the gentleman stated, they have done their work in a quiet way.

Yesterday I asked a question on the floor about that and I was told that the main reason was duplication of their work. Like the gentleman from California, I think this work should go on. If somebody else is doing it, that is one thing, but I hope he will make that clear, otherwise it is my intention to submit an amendment to this bill at least to keep the skeleton organizations going in order to do the very thing that the gentleman from California talks about.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS].

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, it seems that many of the things we are doing today are still at cross purposes. Numerous functions of government initiated and carried on during the depression are no longer necessary or advisable. Then, why in the name of all that is reasonable can we not stop doing the unessential and unnecessary when conditions no longer warrant consideration of problems once important. The war has indeed changed our economic status. Untold thousands, yes even millions, now have money in their pockets, money to burn we might well say. No longer do the people have to come to a beneficent government and say "give me" or "help me out." And since we must certainly, when opportunity affords, clear ourselves from paternalistic apron strings, why do we have departments of government so determined and intent on keeping as many individuals as possible under their rule and thumb.

I now speak directly on only one of such activities, namely the credit agencies within the Department of Agriculture. When they might well be curtailing their activities, we find the Production Credit Corporation, Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation, Farm Security Administration and feed and seed loan agencies all out on the firing line trying to drum up business amongst the farmers who may temporarily need funds to carry them through this crop year. I am informed that these departments have over 20,000 employees. Possibly they are trying to keep them busy with and on your money and mine. Right now banks throughout the country have ample and sufficient funds to meet the requests of any farm borrower. Banks want to loan their money to such individuals and they are entitled to have the business.

Why should they be forced to compete with Uncle Sam in making loans. Banks need to make money to pay taxes. They do pay large taxes. Every such institution carries great investments in Government securities. They carry Commodity Credit Corporation loans on which they draw 1½ percent. In most of the small rural communities the bank is the hub of the wheel which makes possible the many activities carried on within the area served. The bankers and their employees serve on all kinds of local and district committees, selective-service boards, head up Government bond selling groups, and spend hours of their time and efforts to help promote the interests of all war projects. Such institutions are valuable assets to our American way of promoting community life. So I deplore and regret to find the Government going far afield and taking unnecessary steps to solicit business from the farmers, which business should and can be handled by these local commercial country banks.

Now is the time for us to serve notice on the many departments of government that we expect them to stop such practices as they are now conducting. If these department heads do not believe in private enterprise or the right of the individual or corporation to carry on without Government competition, then the quicker we know about such a state of affairs the sooner we can act to handle such agencies by refusing to appropriate the funds they use.

Frankly, there must be unity of purpose on the part of all, but such foggy thinking by those who feel that the Government must fight and harass and be in competition with all private business, must be dispelled and right now. Every individual, every corporation, every department of government has a job to do. Through cooperation we can accomplish our goal.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am aware that the subcommittee, as well as the full Committee on Appropriations struck from the bill the appropriation it contained for the National Resources Planning Board. I am taking this occasion to discuss the nature and work of this agency in anticipation of a possible attempt to reinsert the appropriation in the bill on the floor. But I shall discuss this subject for a more fundamental reason than that.

Unless one has made some study of the organizational structure of the Planning Board, its connections, objectives, means for carrying on its program, and the extent of its activities, one cannot realize the dangerous threat to our country that is involved in this combination of elements. The extent of the forces engaged, and their nature, considering the vulnerability of present disordered economic and social processes, make this political arrangement potentially capable of completely destroying all hope of restoring free enterprise and constitutional government.

To me it is truly alarming that such a destructive force as this could grow up to its present size and power without the Congress and the country becoming more aware of its dangers than it apparently has.

The Planning Board, in itself, is at present, perhaps the least significant part of the arrangement. Its permanent and temporary employees in its Washington office, together with its professor-economist consultants and experts numbered in the spring of 1942 about 425. The amount of appropriations made to this agency has averaged about a million dollars annually, which is not much when judged by New Deal standards.

The all-important thing is the forces back of this body. These are, as we shall see, so all-embracing as to include most if not the whole economy.

The first thing to be observed is that the Planning Board is merely an instrument of the President. He refers to it as "the planning arm of my Executive Office." It is responsible to him and to no one else. In a letter transmitting and recommending to the Congress the National Resources Development Report of 1942, the President said:

> The National Resources Planning Board * * * is charged with the preparation of long-range plans for the development of our national resources and the stabilization of employment. At my direction, it is correlating plans and programs under consideration in many Federal, State, and private organizations for post-war full employment, security, and building America. In this report the Board outlines some of our major objectives in planning to win the peace.

Thus, it is clear that the National Resources Planning Board in itself is powerless; that it derives all of its authority from the President.

It is when one reflects upon the vast powers the Executive possesses over the whole economy, the availability to him of the resources of the Nation and above all, upon the fact that he himself is committed to a politically planned economy, as his record shows, and also as is shown by his approval of the Planning Board's reports, that one becomes aware of the real forces that are involved in the Planning Board's schemes. The extent and scope of economic and social planning the Board can undertake are virtually coextensive with the powers of the President.

Armed with the powers of the President, which, of course, means the Federal purse also, the National Resources Planning Board goes forth to promote the politically planned economy.

The personnel in the organizational structure of the Board are the chairman, Frederick A. Delano, an uncle of the President; the director, several assistant directors, and so forth, with offices in Washington.

Next in order are the nine regional planning commissions, with offices located at Boston, Baltimore, Richmond, Va., Atlanta, Indianapolis, Omaha, Denver, Portland, and San Francisco. Alaska comprises another planning region.

Below the regional planning units are the State planning units, then the municipal planning units. The following gives some idea of the relation of the regional planning units to State and local ones:

> Activities of the field staff have continued to develop in six main directions: (1) Stimulation and encouragement of State and local planning—

Stimulation and encouragement, keep in mind, with, among other means, Federal grants-in-aid, loans, and largess—

> (2) provision of the committee's technical consultants to regional and State planning agencies; (3) interrelating planning activity between planning agencies; (4) sponsorship of drainage basin committees for water resources planning; (5) collaboration with special committees on regional studies within their areal divisions; and (6) acting as a clearing house for information.

Under the Agriculture Department nearly all 48 States have special planning committees with 1,294 members, and 1,433 active county-planning committees with 34,494 members, all engaged in various kinds of planning schemes for the farmers—Agricultural Statistics, 1941, page 714.

THE USE OF FEDERAL AGENCIES AS MEANS FOR CARRYING OUT PLANNING

In addition to the twenty-odd construction agencies designated in the Employment Stabilization Act of 1931 for the preparation of construction plans, the President, under Executive Order 8455, added about 70 new ones—a list of which was furnished me by the Board. What is important here, however, is that he brought in an entirely new kind of agencies, namely, those which aid construction activity through grants-in-aid, loans, other forms of financial assistance, or through guaranties from the Federal Government.

This included such agencies as W. P. A., suspended but not abolished; the Federal Housing Agency; the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, which consists of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the United States Housing Corporation; the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; Rural Electrification Administration; Soil Conservation Service; Farm Security Administration; and Farm Credit Administration.

Imagine the power these lending agencies alone provide for the Planning Board to carry out its program.

But the Board is not limiting itself to the use of the ninety-odd Federal agencies listed for me by it. We know that Dr. Alvin Hansen, Harvard professor and special adviser to the Board, is working in cooperation with Chairman Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, on problems of fiscal policy in the post-defense period, with particular reference to financing of public-improvement projects.

Yet the Federal Reserve is not among the list of agencies given me by the Board. Dr. Hansen plays a leading role in the planning cult.

Indeed, there is evidence to show that the process of planning development is rapidly approaching the stage where it will embrace the use of all Federal Government agencies and elements. In this connection I should like to refer the Members to an article written by Charles E. Merriam, vice chairman of the Planning Board, in Public Administration Review, winter 1941, volume 1, No. 2, where, among other statements showing the wide connections of the Board with Federal agencies, private organizations, and so forth, he says:

> A long-time program for public works which spreads over and involves the cooperation of practically all of the agencies of the Government.

The following, taken from the 1942 progress report, should convince the Congress and country of the almost limitless powers that are already in the hands of the political planners. In speaking of their plan to relocate the industrial plants of the Nation—that is, to shift them from one region to another, they say:

> Governmental authority is adequate to the means. Taxation, tariffs, price regulation, transportation and power regulation, labor legislation, public works, credit control, and financial assistance are all potentially effective instruments which the Federal Government may wield in its efforts to promote the development of a nationally integrated locational structure.

Here we also have some forewarning as to the means that would be used to induce us to accept the ideas of the planners.

With the availability to the political planners of all the Federal powers that are involved in taxation, tariffs, price regulation, transportation, and power regulation, labor legislation, public work, credit control, and financial assistance, what is left to hinder them from doing just about what they please with our economy and lives? What is there to stop them from completing the totalitarian state?

It is to be noted that while the planners uttered this threat out of one corner of their mouths, from the other corner came this soothing promise:

> The basis of planning is not violence but reason, and the condition of most successful operation is not force but persuasion, cooperation, common participation in an effort for a common goal.

WHAT ARE THE STATED OBJECTIVES OF THE PLANNERS?

We can do no more here than give a brief outline. Under "New Objectives" they state:

> The Bill of Rights has stood unshaken 150 years. And now to the old freedoms we must add new freedoms.

And then list the following, some of which are wholly inconsistent with each other:

> Greater freedom for the American people. The right to work * * * to fair pay

* * * adequate food * * * clothing, shelter, and medical care * * * to security, with freedom from old age, want, dependency, sickness, unemployment and accident. * * * to life in a system of free enterprise, free from compulsory labor, irresponsible private power, arbitrary public authority, and unregulated monopolies. * * * to come and go, to speak or be silent, free from spyings of secret political police. * * * to equality before the law, with equal access to justice in fact * * * to education, for work, for citizenship, and for personal growth and happiness; * * * and the right to rest, recreation, and adventure; the opportunity to enjoy life and take part in advancing civilization.

Following the line of Hitler, Mussolini, and other dictators, the planners are planning to shift whole groups of the population from one place to another.

They plan to arbitrarily shift millions of farmers from their farms to cities, 3,000,000 according to their reports, and more than twice that number according to Mr. George D. Riley in his column in the Washington Times-Herald of February 3, 1942.

They plan to lift bodily, en masse, town and city dwellers from their homes and transplant them to cities and towns in other regions. They tell us—

A shift of population may be the only way of avoiding industrial misfits.

Thus, labor is truly to be handled as a physical commodity, indeed, as simple chattel.

Just as laborers and farmers are to be moved from place to place, so industrial plants, too, are to be shifted about like the tents of a circus.

They speak about "urbanization, the placing of more industry in cities"; of "ruralization, the encouragement of industrialization in small towns and farming areas"; of "suburbanization, the shifting of plants out of large cities to surrounding communities"; of "delocalization, the breaking up of high concentration of single industries in particular areas"; of "dispersion, the spreading of industrial activity throughout the country more nearly in relation to population"; of "diversification, the encouragement of varied local economic structures"; and "specialization, the concentration of an important part of local resources on the making of products for which the locality possesses superior advantages."

In making our Nation over, the planners plan to raze our cities and construct them all anew.

"We must build," they tell us, "not by the square block, but by the square mile."

The planners take in the whole world. They do not intend to be eclipsed by any total war but intend there shall be global planning also. There are, they say, "plans for the international scene * * *. Through an extension of lease-lend we shall certainly help feed the starving people of Europe," which will probably include all of them, for likely all of them will be starving by the time the war ends, "until they can get on their feet."

Then they tell us, "after Europe's needs for food, clothing, and emergency medical care have been met, perhaps then our greatest opportunity to help others economically will be found in Asia and in parts of North or South America."

Asia alone is a pretty big place and has a lot of people, a billion or so. It would take a lot of cows to furnish a bottle of milk a day for man, woman, and child on that vast continent.

There is to be "some sort of international reconstruction finance corporation set up to engage in international lending."

Imagine lending anything to Europe after the war.

Naturally the schools are invaded. Pupils are already being taught the blessings of bureaucratic planning. We read in the planners' report of a pamphlet, From the Ground Up, which, it says:

Presents a series of timely planning discussions, each limited to one page of text facing illustrations of good and bad examples.

The good examples showed, of course, the work of political planners; the bad ones that of the status quo boys. They tell us further that somewhere in New England several thousand copies of the good and bad examples pamphlets are in use in junior and senior high schools, in civics, geography, economics, and sociology courses.

Since Mrs. Roosevelt tells us in her little book, This Troubled World—page 16:

Our real and ultimate objective must be a change in human nature.

The planners boldly undertake to bring about the proper alteration.

"Children and youth," they tell us, "cannot be kept in storage." So they propose to take them out of storage, thaw them out, soften them up, and mold them to the mode of the planning cult.

Apparently we are to believe parents by and large are too immature emotionally to be trusted with the care of their offspring.

"Both the infant and the young child," they inform us, "need the affection of emotionally mature parents."

But just how the planners hope to bring parental emotions to ne plus ultra they do not venture to say. But that does not seem to bother them much. They seem to think they can do it, and that is enough.

In the attempt that is now being made by the planning cult to invade the public schools and to absorb into the Federal Government the educational functions of the States and local communities, one is reminded of the method used by Prince Bismarck. In Germany, at that time, it was the prerogative of the church to inspect public and private schools. Prince Bismarck accused the Jesuits of intriguing against the Empire. As a means to counteract their work he asked the Prussian Parliament to pass a law taking the inspection of all public and private schools out of the hands of the church and placing it entirely in the hands of the state. In connection with this episode Bismarck said:

Being convinced that we are confronted with hostile forces, our motto must be, "Principiis obsta."

Which in English means, to block the beginning. Then continuing, he said:

We do not wish, as advised by some, to cut down people, but rather to educate them in such a way as not to make it necessary for us to cut them down. (Prince Bismarck, by Charles Lowe, vol. 2, p. 277.)

The law requested by Bismarck was enacted, and from that day down to the present the German state has been using continuously more and more the schools to mold the minds of German children to its will, until we see today the end result of that policy, one of the most frightful scourges that was ever visited upon mankind, namely, nazi-ism.

The very instrument Bismarck claimed he sought to keep from cutting down his own people is now being used to slay not only them and millions more in other countries, but civilization itself.

Finally, we see the bureaucratic planners reaching the nadir in their spoliation program when we find them sneaking into the domain of sex life of our young people. Mark well this sadistic expression:

At about this period boys and girls become eager to make new friends. They look for opportunities to meet one another informally, under suitable circumstances. They begin to think vaguely about marrying and rearing families of their own. They need to be informed of the many important factors that enter into founding a successful home. They need help in working out a functioning personal philosophy of life, an attitude toward themselves, their fellow men, and the world in general. (P. 113, National Resources Development Report for 1942.)

PLANS FOR FINANCING AND FISCAL POLICY

From whence is the wherewithal to be derived for completely razing the American economy and building it anew on another pattern? From the same principal sources to which the Federal Government has resorted in the last 10 or 12 years to pay for the vast public works and relief programs it carried on during that time, namely, taxes, and Treasury deficit financing.

Also the same irrationalism, confusion, and sophistry are present in the minds of the planners as have dominated the financial policies of the New Deal bureaucracy throughout.

In substance, the planners propose to use the full taxing power and credit of the Federal Government to provide funds to guarantee full employment and adequate wage payments; freedom from want, fear of old age, dependence, sickness, unemployment, and accident; the right to education, rest, recreation, and adventure; for the razing of our cities and building them anew; for the shifting of a large part of the farm population to cities; for the shifting of workers and industrial plants en masse, from one region to another; for the building of millions of homes in the country and cities; to construct a bigger and more powerful T. V. A. and more T. V. A.'s; to revamp and greatly increase the transportation facilities; to undertake huge flood-control, power-development, land-use, and other similar projects; to promote on a large scale the absorption by Federal Government of State and local educational functions; to engage in foreign so-called lending by the billions, and in lease-lend to feed and otherwise aid more than a billion and a half of people in Europe, Africa, Asia, and other parts of the world; to give instructions in the public schools to our children and youth in the planning cult; to manage the emotions of parents; to take our children and youth out of storage and shape them to fit the bureaucratic model; to regulate the sex life of our young folks—to do all these things and many more the bureaucratic planners propose to pay for with taxes and deficit financing.

But there is one project for which the planners are planning and for which they propose to raise funds by taxation and deficit financing about which they tell us nothing in any of their reports or anywhere else. They are silent as night about that one. Yet it is the most gigantic and costly project of them all, and the one dearest to their hearts. In fact, it is the very soul of the whole planning scheme. That project is the bureaucracy to operate the planned society. It is being planned to perfection, and make no mistake about that. To plan, manage, and supervise all the schemes the planners already have on their agenda, and the new ones their fertile brains keep hatching out daily, will take an army of bureaucrats that will make the present one look small indeed. Where the members of the social group are now plagued and hounded and browbeaten with one bureaucratic restriction or order, they will be plagued and hounded and browbeaten with 10 bureaucratic restrictions or orders.

But should it not be expected that the bureaucrats' first interest would be in themselves, that they would leave no stone unturned to make themselves as strong as they could so as always to be sure to get the first helping and of the best?

It is noteworthy to observe that the bureaucratic planners, who, just a few years ago, planned and put in operation an economy of scarcity, which they promised would bring us full employment and the good life, have now abandoned that scheme and have gone to the opposite extreme, in theory, at least, and tell us the way to full employment and the good life is to be had in a program of abundance.

They tell us they have found the key to full employment in the war economy. It would appear from an examination of their scheme that they think they can lift the formula for full employment out of the war economy and make it work in a peace economy the same as it now works in the war economy. Nor need we be long, when we consider the nature of their plans and the contents of their printed matter, in sensing the true significance of this idea. They see total war bringing full employment. They see this full employment come about through a totalitarian economy. From this premise they seem to go on the assumption that if a totalitarian economy can produce full employment in wartime it can do the same in peacetime. Ipso facto, they go on the further assumption that a totalitarian economy is just as necessary and just as desirable in peace as in war.

Since this solution of the unemployment problem harmonizes fully with the fundamental nature of bureaucracy, if it does not find its wellspring in its very soul, namely, the ever present dynamic appetite to promote its own interests in acquiring power and domination over the producing group, it is but natural that the bureaucrats should embrace with loving tenderness the opportunity to impose upon us a fully developed regime of status, that is, a complete dictatorship.

When one gets right down to the meat of the proposition of the planners, that the war has provided them with a new and effective formula for ushering in the more abundant life, one finds there is nothing at all new about it. Their war formula is different from the prescription they applied to cure the depression in only one respect, namely, in that the exigencies of the war provide them with greater opportunity to impose upon us the totalitarian state than did the needs, synthetic and other, of the depression.

They propose to use precisely the same medicine to bring us Utopia after the war as they used to cure the depression, only in bigger doses.

The goal that is sought by the President through the National Resources Planning Board can no longer remain in doubt. The Planning Board, with the approval of the President, boldly speaks of modified free enterprise, and it is clear, though there is lip service enough to the contrary, that the program outlined involves nothing less than the absorption by the state of all economic functions and the complete demolition of all free enterprise.

With the loss of free enterprise would go, of course, all liberties—free speech, the right to petition, freedom of worship, and so forth.

Take just one promise alone, that of full employment. What does it connote? If the state undertakes to guarantee to every worker the right to continuous and full employment, the state must of necessity also assume full responsibility for the operation of all industry. This would involve assumption by the state of complete and unlimited control over all industry.

The state would become sole employer, would factitiously fix the value of all services, labor and goods, and working hours. It would use all the force at its command, which would be the whole police power, including the armed forces, to carry out its decrees. It would involve a dictatorship as absolute as any in the world today. Nor would the worker have any place to go to complain.

But we should not be so foolish as to think, if the state were given this absolute power, it would of necessity make good its promise of full employment, in the sense, at least, in which we conceive the term. Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin all proclaimed the right, by state law or decree, to work and promised full employment. None of them could fulfill his promise except by going to war.

But even suppose it were possible for the state to make good this promise, who wants to live under a state of abject slavery?

The Board, which is the planning arm of the President, speaks approvingly and in support of its planning scheme of "the rise of the national state with its economic programs."

Indeed, and to what countries or country do the political planners refer as having taken on that mode?

Which of the western countries, leaving Russia out, in more recent times has led the way in aggrandizing the state and dwarfing the individual, where the state became all and the individual nothing? Was it not Germany that made the pattern of "the state with its economic programs"?

Perhaps it may be apropos to mention here that Germany also set the example of providing state so-called social security. She began her social-security scheme more than half a century ago.

The state with its economic programs is nothing new. Indeed it is of most ancient origin. Egypt, many thousands of years ago, typified this kind of social organization.

Feudalism was a type of state with its economic and security programs, and all of Europe slaved under it for many hundreds of years. The Incas of Peru developed it to the *n*th degree. Aye, it was the state with its economic programs that caused all of our American ancestors to run away from Europe and come to this country and found a free people under a true government, which was characterized principally by the absence of the state with its economic programs.

The bureaucratic planners tell us the Bill of Rights has stood unshaken for 150 years and promise us additional freedom to that provided in the Constitution, when they had already, before the defense program was started, reduced our people to the abject status where they were compelled, in great measure, to appeal to Federal law to give value to their services; when they had already succeeded in reducing at least one whole industrial group, the farming community, comprising a fourth of our population, to the servile condition where its members were wholly at the mercy of Federal law to give their services value.

What mockery.

How far above the level of slavery is the producing or social group when its members, individually and collectively, are forced to look to Washington and be told by the bureaucracy how much their labor is worth, how much of the things they produce they shall be allowed to keep?

O Jefferson, how far have we strayed from your ideal:

> A wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, which shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be the time to talk of many things, including cabbages and kings. We have heard a discussion of the movement of the hands of the clock, and who shall rule the air waves, and George Washington's birthday, and the planning commission. I should like to talk with you a minute about the cabbages, using that vegetable as a symbol of the food on our tables.

On yesterday the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations which handles agricultural appropriations by a rather decisive vote declined to approve a request of the President to authorize the appropriation of $100,000,000 for incentive payments. It is my hope, Mr. Chairman, that that committee, the entire Committee on Appropriations, and this House will reconsider that action and give it more sympathetic consideration.

It does not matter now what happens, there is nothing that can be done in the next few weeks that will prevent a shortage of food in this Nation. The only question before us now is, will that shortage be so acute as to become a national disaster?

This $100,000,000 incentive payment can be termed the liniment for a tired body. After the farmer has worked his 12 hours a day, after he has done his best, it is an inducement for him to carry on another hour or another 2 hours.

The action of the committee strikes me as rather peculiar. In this House for the last 2 or 3 years, particularly on the Republican side of the House, there has been complaint that the payments to the farmers have been used and made for the purpose of reducing production. The argument has been made that they should not be used for that purpose but rather to increase production. Here we have a specific request from the Department of Agriculture and from the President of the United States to appropriate $100,000,000 to be used for the sole and single purpose of increasing the production of food necessary to feed this Nation, our armed forces, and our allies.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, up until yesterday morning, if things went wrong with the food supply the Congress could blame other agencies. We could say it was brought about by the Selective Service System in the drafting of our farm boys. We could say it was brought about by the War Production Board in not allowing sufficient farm machinery to the farmers. We could say it was brought about by the Department of Agriculture in not making adequate allowances for fertilizer. There were many things to which the Congress could point as bringing about this condition.

If the action of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations yesterday morning stands, however, then you and I unhappily have entered the breach. If that dreadful condition which I anticipate comes about this fall, millions of our own people will be without food. Then we will be in the position where the Secretary of Agriculture can lift his hands and say, "I did my best," and Mr. Nelson can lift his hands and say, "I did my best, but while the Congress was appropriating in excess of $100,000,000,000 to prosecute the war it declined to appropriate the sum of $100,000,000 in order to get sufficient food to feed the people of this Nation and our armies and allies."

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman believe the payment of $100,000,000 as a subsidy or the payment of any amount as a subsidy would actually increase production?

Mr. PACE. I am compelled to differ with the gentleman as to the term. It is not a subsidy. I feel just as the gentleman does about subsidies generally. I wish they were not necessary. But this is not a subsidy. This proposition is that after they have gone to your farm and worked over plans with you and given you a goal for every acre of land you have, even the fence corners, if you will produce the full amount and as much as 10 percent more than your goal, they will give you an allotment sufficient to pay for that extra effort and that extra labor.

Let me give the gentleman this illustration. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] one of the most distinguished and able Members of this body, told me that he had a letter from one of the farmers in his district who who had started gathering sugar beets. After he had finished the first day the farmer figured up the price of his sugar beets, and figured up the amount he had to pay the workmen to gather those beets, and out there I understand it is $5 or $6 a day. The farmer said that the price of all the sugar beets gathered that day lacked $12.50 of paying for the labor required to gather them.

I was not told, but I assume that the farmer stopped gathering sugar beets because he could not carry on with such loss. However, with this inducement payment we could go to the farmers and say, "We need those vegetables, those potatoes, and so forth. If you will carry on we will pay you an extra $10 or $15 or $20 after you have gathered 90 percent of your crop, up to 110 percent."

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. In just a moment. I first yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Of course, what the gentleman says is true to the extent that we must guarantee to the farmer that he will be able to come out whole on his production. I agree with the gentleman, but is not the method that ought to be followed one of giving him fair prices for what he produces, rather than giving him something of the character he describes, whether it is called a subsidy, or an incentive payment, or time and a half for overtime, or a dole? The proposition is to give him enough to make him whole, but does not the gentleman think that if we would do that—give him a price, give him machinery, and the labor, and the fertilizer—that no farmer will need any kind of an inducement or incentive payment? Are we not overlooking the big problem in trying to give the farmer a little miserable subsidy to take the place of our neglect in not giving him adequate machinery and labor?

Mr. PACE. Of course, that is the proper way to go about it, but at this late hour we do not have and may not have sufficient labor, machinery, and fertilizer, and this special payment is to try to urge and reward the farmers in producing without them. The workingmen of this Nation were assured last week that they would get time and a half if they would work an extra 8 hours, and your Government is today paying two prices for every pound of copper that is mined. That is an incentive payment to drive the miners longer hours, because we need that copper, but I say to you at this time that in less than 12 months we may need something to eat worse than we need copper. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, regarding the letter received by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], I would like to say in connection with the gentleman's remarks that we are still rationing sugar in America and if I understand Mr. LEA's letter, sugar beets are not being sold for enough to justify the farmer in paying the necessary labor costs to gather them.

Mr. PACE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there is quite a difference between a subsidy payment and inducement payment for extra production. I feel this way about it. You and I have voted for appropriations for defense purposes during the last 2 years in sums that are stupendous. The majority of the Members of this House could never determine, not being present in all of the hearings in committees, the justification for each item, but you and I have supported the recommendations of the committee on the ground that it is far better to appropriate too much for the defense of our Nation than too little. Those of you who know the farm conditions, those of you who know the shortage of farm labor, those of you who know that the wives must wield the hoe, and that children from 8 to 10 to 12 years of age must go to the fields, must realize that if there is not to be a critical shortage, the smart thing for this Congress to do, if, for no other reason than protect ourselves 6 months or 12 months from now, from the finger of scorn, is to make an appropriation requested by your President, and that is recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, in order that, so far as you and I are concerned, we will have done our full part to feed the people of this Nation.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. The gentleman does not contend that it is the fault of Congress for not appropriating money to pay these subsidy payments, does he?

Mr. PACE. I do most respectfully submit that in my judgment the subcommittee was in error in denying an appropriation of $100,000,000 as an incentive payment for the producer of Irish potatoes, beans, vegetables, and those things that we need so badly.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Does not the gentleman recognize that the fault lies with the Department of Agriculture and the Office of Price Administration in not clarifying matters so that they can fix maximum and minimum prices, to handle the labor question?

Mr. PACE. No man is more bitter in his feelings than I toward the policies now carried on by the Office of Price Administration. The last Stabilization Act directed the Administrator to adjust prices, in order to increase production. They have consistently refused to do so, but so far as I am concerned I do not want on my shoulders the responsibility of the people in this Nation getting no food merely because some other agency is not acting according to my opinion.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. The fault does not lie with the farmer, nor with the processors. The farmers in my district and in the State of Indiana who want to produce these vegetables are ready and willing to produce them, but the fault lies with these administrators here in Washington who will not clarify these directives and give them sufficient authority to go ahead and contract for acreage to grow vegetables. They are willing as patriotic Americans to do it, and they do not want any subsidy payment for it.

Mr. PACE. I cannot deny that confusion exists, but I do say that if the farmer, in view of the emergency, agrees to plant two or three times as much as he ever planted before and to work long hours and use old machinery, use the members of his family, then it is our duty, in view of the policy that has been followed by this Government for years, to give him an incentive and urge him on and assure him a fair return for his labor.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that personally I am sympathetic with the attitude taken by the subcommittee. For the life of me I do not see how you will increase production merely by giving the farmer more money to produce his commodities.

We have heard on the floor in the last couple of days statements by Representatives from California that after a year's effort they finally have gotten permission to use some Mexican labor. A Representative from California this afternoon exhibited here a statement from the Department of Agriculture telling the farmers of California to use these Mexican laborers, and they gave them a menu to follow. Under that menu they had to feed those laborers beef six times a week, and under the rationing program and the scarcity of meat they cannot even get beef for the farmers themselves. Now, how can you reconcile the fact that the Department of Agriculture will not clarify, along with the Manpower Commission, the question of labor, the question of farm machinery, and try to side-step the thing by handing the farmers a few extra dollars? What good will the dollars do if they cannot get the machinery and labor to produce more crops?

Mr. PACE. I do not believe anyone has devoted more time or effort than I have toward getting these things clarified. They are ridiculous and absurd. But this incentive payment is for this purpose, it is to assure the harvesting of the last 10 percent, at least, of the goal for the farm. It comes about by experience. Last fall, due to the high price of labor, which could not be obtained in some sections, and due to low prices, there were from 10 to 15 or 20 percent of the crops left in the fields. Just like this man who is gathering his sugar beets. This is an incentive payment, not only to plant it and cultivate it, but to harvest it and move it to market, so that the people may have the benefit of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Right on that point, will an incentive payment give those farmers any more labor or any more machinery or any greater ability to harvest that last 10 or 15 percent of the crop? That is what bothers me and I think it is bothering a great many other Members. The essential things that the farmer needs are machinery, labor, and fertilizer to make the crop.

Mr. PACE. Of course it is.

Mr. HOPE. I do not believe the farmer is going to be satisfied and I do not think we can feel that we have done our duty if we fail to give him those things, and then say we are going to give him a little incentive payment to see if he cannot work a little harder, do a little more than he has been doing, when, as a matter of fact, he has done everything he could do with the things we have given him to work with.

Mr. PACE. Please do not understand that I have even suggested that this is solving the farm problem.

Mr. HOPE. No. The gentleman is too well versed in the farm problem to offer any such suggestion.

Mr. PACE. I termed these incentive payments as a liniment for a tired body. After a man has worked all day, it is an inducement for him to work into the night. After the price of labor has gone so high that it is not profitable to gather his crop, it gives him a little more in order to pay more for labor, in order to insure the gathering. This is an incentive for harvesting the crop.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me say to the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Virginia that $27,000,000 of the $125,000,000 — not $100,000,000 — $100,000,000 out of the soil-conservation fund and $25,000,000 out of section 32, that is what they asked for—$27,000,000 is to be devoted to an increase in soya beans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. Twenty-seven million dollars is to be devoted to soya beans. Fifteen percent of this year's soya bean crop in the State of the Secretary of Agriculture and in my own State are still in the fields, partly because of weather and partly because of of manpower and partly because of machinery. The Secretary told us yesterday morning that he had not solved the manpower problem and he had no agreement with Mr. McNutt or anybody else, and he could not assure us that he had settled the problem of machinery with the War Production Board. So why initiate a new incentive program which later on will come back to dog us, when they will say, "You gave us $125,000,000 for eight items. Now there is a meat shortage. There is an egg shortage. There is a butter shortage. There is a cheese shortage. Give us some extra millions for these incentive payments." We will have embarked upon a program the end of which we cannot see and which we cannot be sure will work.

Mr. PACE. Whether other like requests will be made I do not know. Whether we can bring about a quick and satisfactory solution of the farm problems of manpower, machinery, fertilizer, and price by refusing to cooperate with Secretary Wickard and refusing to let this House pass upon his recommendations in a matter of this kind is very doubtful to me. But this I do know. We now face the real danger of a critical food shortage and we should do everything possible to prevent such a shortage. The Secretary had announced the programs providing these incentive payments, and I know there is today utter confusion and disappointment among the farmers.

I also know that the Congress has appropriated and will continue to appropriate billions and billions of dollars for incentive payments to every worker and contractor for the construction of every Army camp in the Nation and for the production of every ship, every plane, every tank, every gun, and every bullet used in this war. It seems strange to me that it should be regarded as such a terrible thing to do when the farmer and the production of something to eat is involved.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, we have been listening during the present day and for many weeks and months in the past to speeches with respect to shortages of many of the necessities of life. This afternoon in the time I have to discuss this matter with you I wish to call your attention again to the very desperate fuel-oil situation existing in our part of the country, namely, the New England area.

Mr. Chairman, the fuel-oil and gasoline situation, for many months, has been of vital interest to most Members of this House, and the rationing of which is affecting nearly every section of the country and bringing to our offices a deluge of criticism from an irate and confused citizenry back home. Editorials galore have been printed on this question and for a long time it has been the subject of front-page comments in all the newspapers of the Nation.

We all fully realize what brought this condition about, but a brief review is timely. Prior to the war, practically 95 percent of all the petroleum products brought into the eastern seaboard was by means of water-borne tankers that plied between the Gulf coast and the entire Atlantic seaboard. Less than 5 percent came by railroad tank cars. The year 1942, however, was a fatal one for the seagoing tankers, for early in that year and continuing through the summer, the German submarines took a terrific toll of these ships. As a consequence, for several months, practically no tank ships plied the eastern seaboard. It was obvious then that an extremely critical situation in that part of the country would develop, and that unless some substitute means of transportation were found for these tankers, the people in the eastern seaboard would suffer great hardships during the present winter.

Not only was it necessary to provide for the domestic needs but also the ever-increasing military requirements. Altogether, the situation needed immediate as well as careful attention in order to meet the estimated requirements of 1,500,000 barrels a day for this section of the country. In order to find an adequate substitute for the tankers—which today are almost nonexistent in our area—it was necessary to bring into action every possible facility available for the transportation of petroleum products. These included railroad tank cars, existing pipe lines, and barges used in the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and along the seacoast and all other facilities available. To say that those in charge had a herculean task before them would be putting it mildly.

There were many mistakes made and considerable blundering due to lack of cooperation between the authorities in charge, and even today we find an estranged feeling existing because of the lack of coordination and bickering that has taken place in the past. Whether this is owing to departmental jealousy or some other reason I do not know, but it is there. Many times in the past we have been forewarned about an imminent crisis in our fuel-oil and gasoline supplies by one department head, only to have his statement refuted by another department head the next day to the effect that we had no need for worry. Such statements naturally slowed up the conversion program from oil to coal that was under way in our section of the country.

We have been able to flounder through so far. This in a large measure was made possible by the widespread conversion program on the part of the home owners and the industries, but these late changes did not permit an inventory to be built up and used to carry us over the critical period. The result has been that so far as oil is concerned, New England, literally speaking, has been living from hand to mouth. A most rigid rationing program has been put into effect, and industrial and household users have been reduced drastically below their normal needs. The householders have cooperated well to the suggestions of the rationing boards to close many rooms in their homes, and the industries have been reduced to 60 percent of last year's requirements in order to save fuel in every way possible. Nevertheless, there has been real suffering because of the inability of some to get fuel oil. The local rationing boards, composed of public-spirited men and women serving without pay of any kind, have been on the alert and have given immediate relief to such cases when called to their attention. It has been a real battle on the home front, and even today some sections of New England are only 2 or 3 days' supply ahead of their minimum needs.

I have been informed within the last few minutes, by the Office of the Petroleum Administration for War that in the Boston area there is less than 1 day's fuel oil ahead of our needs, and in that great area less than 2 day's supply of industrial oil—this in a period when the temperature is below zero. Today I understand it is 14° below. The weather in Washington the past few days is typical of what we experience in New England during the winter period.

The next 6 weeks will be critical because of the very limited stock on hand. If we get by this period, the worst will be over as the normal needs drop off substantially as the month of April is reached. The Office of Petroleum Coordinator informs me that everything is being done in order to meet our demands and even box cars are used to transport oil in drums furnished by the War Department from Texas.

It may be interesting at this point to say that the railroads which, previous to the war brought less than 5 percent of petroleum products to the east coast, are now, with their tank cars, bringing in approximately 75 to 80 percent. The railroads have done a most remarkable job in developing their tank-car program within such a short period of time and have, in my opinion, averted a great disaster on the eastern seaboard with all of its attending suffering, privation, and death among our people. Let us hope and pray that we will be able to surmount the difficulties that will face us during the next 6 weeks, and from our bitter experience resolve that insofar as it lies in our power the people of the country will not be placed in such jeopardy again. This brings me to the main purpose of my address today.

What are we going to do about our oil needs next winter? I am in receipt of a letter from the Governor of Massachusetts, calling my attention to the fact that in his opinion the winter of 1943–44 will be far more serious than the present one.

He says:

> If there is not some improvement in the situation New England will face a worse crisis in its fuel supply next winter than it is facing at the moment. The peak of our crisis in my opinion for this winter has not yet been reached except in the supply of kerosene.

If that is so—and I believe it is—the time is now at hand when we should take immediate steps to meet that contingency. The people of the entire country are on a rationed plan so far as fuel oil and gasoline are concerned. Even the far Northwest is feeling the effects of this program, according to complaints published in the newspapers of that section.

This problem is of extreme interest to us all because it affects the very lives of our people, and some solution must be found and found immediately. A fleet of 300 tank ships that once brought in 95 percent of the oil to the east coast has been completely eliminated from that service as a result of transfers to military needs and sinkings by enemy submarines. These tankers were bringing well over a million barrels of oil a day to the eastern seaboard, but no more from that source may be expected, having in mind our growing military requirements all over the globe. What source or means can we now turn to for additional means of bringing oil to our section?

The railroad tank cars, I have stated, have taken over the greater part of the load formerly carried by the tank ships—namely, from 70 to 80 percent. These tank cars have an average age of 22 years. They were built for a low speed of 20 to 30 miles an hour, but during this emergency they have been pulling them at a speed of 50 to 60 miles an hour in order to cut delivery time of oil to the shortest possible period. In 1 month, I am told, they had a breakage of 22 percent due to this tremendous increase in speed. Having in mind this breakage, also the fact that the cars are getting older, that no new tank cars are being built to take their place, can we depend on this source of transportation to meet our minimum requirements in the long, cold winter which Governor Saltonstall says will be more critical than the present one?

The only bright spot on the clouded horizon is the completion of the 24-inch pipe line running from Longview, Tex., to Norris City, Ill., thence to New York. It is not expected, however, that this pipe line will deliver oil to the New York area before August 1. The capacity will be 300,000 barrels a day. This is less than one-fifth of our requirements on the eastern seaboard.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell us whether this pipe line that is going to be constructed will be of any use for the civilians of New England?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. We must find other means of supplementing this pipe line, because, as I said a moment ago, it will carry less than one-fifth of our requirements. It will be necessary to build more pipe lines and also take advantage of the waterways through which we can get oil quickly.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not intended to be used for military purposes only?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It is not altogether known at the present time what our military requirements will be; but it is essential to develop every available facility in order that both military and civilian needs can be met.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In other words, this is not a solution at all; we have got to do more.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It is only a part of the general program. This pipe line will bring only 300,000 barrels a day to meet a need of 1,750,000 barrels a day.

Approval has recently been given by the War Production Board for the construction of another 20-inch line from the Houston and Beaumont, Tex., refineries to Norris City, Ill., and Seymour, Ind. This pipe line will carry gasoline and kerosene and is expected to be finished July 1. This will shorten the tank-car haul by approximately 550 miles. It is, however, 800 miles to New York and it is my firm conviction that consistent with our war requirements, we should lose no time in extending this 20-inch line to the New York area.

This pipe line for the full distance has already received the unanimous approval of the Pipe Line Management Committee created by the Petroleum Administration for War and the Petroleum Industry War Council. The Petroleum Administration for War has also concurred in these recommendations. I have discussed this matter at quite some length with officials in charge, who inform me that they prefer to wait until May 1 when they will have had the benefit of winter experience with tank cars, barges, and pipe lines and added data as to military demands before they will consider recommending the extension of this 20-inch line to the New York area. They further claim that such a delay will not slow up the completion of the line to the East before the heating season next winter.

Perhaps the bitter experiences we are going through this present winter in New England have given us a pessimistic viewpoint in regard to such statements, and I do not for one moment challenge the reliability or the sincerity of those that made them, but having in mind previous statements by the same authorities in connection with the completion date of the 24-inch pipe line from Longview, Tex. to Norris City, Ill., I am compelled to doubt the estimated completion date of the 20-inch line to New York City if they wait until May to make up their mind as to whether we need it or not. We were told that the completion date of the 24-inch line to Norris City, Ill., would be December 1, 1942. It was designed to carry 300,000 barrels a day and as soon as finished would be put in operation for the above capacity, but here we are into the middle of February and only a trickle of that amount has flowed out of the Norris City end of the pipe line the past few days, and we are now informed that the full capacity will not be reached until April 1, because of unforeseen delays in getting equipment. I do not desire to be too critical of the first completion date estimate as I fully realize the many difficulties in securing material and equipment and also the further uncertainties connected with construction work of this kind, but I do want to point out these facts so that we may approach a related problem with a better perspective.

The need of this extended 20-inch line is admitted. It has the unanimous endorsement of those best qualified to judge our needs and who know what facilities we have to meet them. Why procrastinate and delay? We are further told that sufficient construction equipment is not available but it seems to me that there must be some way by which this additional equipment can be obtained, having in mind the fact that the emergency building peak has been reached and is now rapidly declining. Two or three months difference in the completion date will make a lot of difference in a problem so vital as this.

It will mean warm homes if completed before the heating season starts or it will result, as the Governor intimates, in another long, cold bleak winter and intense suffering for the people of New England if we delay. Why take a chance on a matter of such great emergency? Why does not the Petroleum Administrator for War, who has approved the extension to New York, seek the approval of the War Production Board now, and if such approval can be given, lay the ground work now, develop the plans, order the material, and get ready to do the job as soon as the material is available. If this material can be spared from our war effort, let there be no further delay on a situation so deeply affecting the welfare of our people.

You likely wish to know why I press so hard for the pipe line at this time. First, because it is the quickest known way to get oil to the east coast; secondly, because it is the cheapest way to get oil to the east coast. I repeat, there is no other means of transportation that can deliver oil to that section as cheaply as the pipe lines. For years the Rivers and Harbors Congress has been espousing the cause of river and harbor improvements, and we have spent actually hundreds of millions of dollars to widen and deepen the channels of our rivers and harbors and inland waterways in order to get the benefits of such low-cost freight rates.

These low freight rates, in all probability, do apply to general cargo, but not to the transportation of crude oil, gasoline, or kerosene. Let me emphasize the point that pipe lines are cheaper. I have given much time to this question in connection with my studies of the fuel-oil and gasoline situation, and I have in my hand—and which I will place in the RECORD—comparative figures showing the cost of transportation of oil by railroad tank cars from the Texas oil fields to the New York area, in comparison with transportation by tank ships and pipe lines.

The figures for the pipe lines have been compiled by the Office of Petroleum Administration for War. The Interstate Commerce Commission has prepared the railroad tank-car cost and the War Shipping Administration for seagoing tankers. These figures represent what the Government is paying today, either in time charter hire for the tank ships, the subsidy for the railroads to take care of the excessive cost, and the estimated cost of pumping oil through the pipe line. The pipe-line cost includes provisions to take care of ad valorem taxes in the communities through which the pipe line runs. There can be no doubt whatsoever, after reading these figures, that pipe lines are the cheapest, in addition to being the quickest and most effective, means of dealing with our vital problem.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TALBOT. The gentleman is making a great contribution to a solution of the whole oil problem. I should like to state to the gentleman that I was in New England on Sunday night, in Connecticut. It was 20° below zero. The Governor of Connecticut told me that all Connecticut cities were out of kerosene.

I wonder if the gentleman has read the most recent report to come out of the office of Mr. Davies, the Deputy Oil Coordinator, in which he stated that up until January 1 more than 75 percent of last year's oil supply had been delivered to New England.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes; I read that statement.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the gentleman agree with that statement?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I have no information on it, but there is one thing we all know, and that is that New England is without oil, and I know that the thing we ought to be interested in is what can we do to help New England and New York, where the fuel-oil reserve is so low? Less than a day's supply in the Boston area and less than a day's supply in the Albany, N. Y., area. What are we going to do about our industries that will have to close down, according to the headlines in the papers, close down because there is but a 2-day supply of industrial oil? What are we going to do about it? Whom are we to believe? Last year Mr. Ickes told us there were no tank cars available, but Mr. Pelley, of the railroads, said there were 20,000 laying idle in the freight yards of the country. Today over 65,000 tank cars are pulling oil into the eastern seaboard.

We should urge the completion in the quickest possible time of the 24-inch pipe line from Norris City, Ill., and the 20-inch pipe line from Beaumont, Tex., to New York. We will need both of them very badly next winter. I have figures in my hand which show the pipe line to be by far the cheapest means of transportation of oil. Mr. Chairman, let me tell you that we are now paying a subsidy of over $20,000,000 a month to the railroads for the transportation of fuel oil into the eastern seaboard. This is necessary because we know that railroad transportation is far more expensive than tank ships or pipe lines, and it is the only available means we have to meet our oil requirements.

I am informed by the Interstate Commerce Commission that we are paying $1.48 to $1.80 a barrel for transportation of gasoline and kerosene and fuel oil by railroad tank car. I am told by the War Shipping Administration that we are paying 40 to 50 cents a barrel to bring in gasoline and oil by tank ships. I am told by the Petroleum Administration for War Office that we will pay 38 cents a barrel for kerosene and gasoline and 31 cents for furnace oil to bring it in through the pipe lines. Charges in this cost are sufficient to amortize the entire cost of these pipe lines in 5 years, after which we shall be able to get oil and gasoline through the pipe lines for 13½ cents a barrel, based on maintenance cost.

In this same connection I read the following table showing the relative cost of transportation per barrel of petroleum products from Texas oil fields to New York:

Relative cost of transportation per barrel of petroleum products from Texas oil fields to New York

| | Railroad tank cars [1] | Tank ships [2] | 20-inch pipe line [3] | 24-inch pipe line [3] |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Gasoline and kerosene | $1.802 | $0.40 | $0.38 | |
| Heating oil | 1.558 | .42 | | $0.31 |
| Crude oil | 1.481 | .50 | | .31 |

[1] Figures prepared in Office of Interstate Commerce Commission.
[2] Figures prepared in Office of War Shipping Administration.
[3] Figures prepared in Office of Petroleum Administration for War.

NOTE.—These pipe lines are being built by Oil Emergency Pipe Lines Corporation, a Government agency under the direction of the Defense Plant Corporation, which is an agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, the thing I want to urge upon the Members of the House and all those in authority is the necessity for providing at the earliest possible time facilities and more facilities to meet our fuel-oil and gasoline requirements along the eastern seaboard.

Mr. Chairman, supplementing the table I have just referred to, and which by the way was prepared by myself, I read the following letters. These are the basis supporting the table:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, February 4, 1943.

Hon. GEORGE BATES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: In accordance with your request there is shown below the estimated railroad costs and the railroad transportation rates between Longview, Tex., and New York City, on gasoline, kerosene, residual oil No. 2, bunker C oil (heavy fuel oil), and crude oil. The costs and rates are stated on the basis of per hundred pounds, per barrel (42 gallons), and per barrel-mile. The estimated railroad costs were prepared by the cost section of the Bureau of Transport Economics and Statistics. The rates (in cents per 100 pounds) were furnished by the rate branch of the Bureau of Traffic and converted to a rate per barrel and per barrel-mile by the cost section.

Railroad full distributed costs, including 4 percent return and allowance for passenger and less-than-car-lot deficiencies

| Item | Cost per hundred-weight | Cost per barrel | Cost per barrel-mile |
|---|---|---|---|
| | Cents | Cents | Mills |
| Gasoline | 79.7 | 214.3 | 1.20 |
| Kerosene | 78.4 | 220.4 | 1.24 |
| Residual oil No. 2 | 76.2 | 223.9 | 1.26 |
| Bunker C oil (heavy fuel oil) | 71.6 | 248.4 | 1.40 |
| Crude oils | 74.2 | 233.7 | 1.31 |

The above figures are based upon 42 gallons per barrel and 216 barrels per car. The assumed weight per gallon is as follows:

| | Pounds |
|---|---|
| Gasoline | 6.4 |
| Kerosene | 6.7 |
| Residual oil No. 2 | 7.0 |
| Bunker C oil (heavy fuel oil) | 8.25 |
| Crude oil | 7.5 |

Based on 216 barrels per car and 42 gallons per barrel, this resulted in the following average loads upon which the costs were based:

| | Tons |
|---|---|
| Gasoline | 29 |
| Kerosene | 30 |
| Residual oil No. 2 | 32 |
| Bunker C oil (heavy fuel oil) | 37 |
| Crude oils | 34 |

The cost figures are based on the United States average for all territories compiled for the year 1939.

The rail rates are as shown below and include the ex parte 148 increase:

Railroad rates from Longview, Tex., to New York City

| Item | Rate in cents per 100 pounds | Rate in cents per barrel | Rate per barrel-mile (mills) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Gasoline | 67.0 | 180.2 | 1.01 |
| Kerosene | 67.0 | 188.3 | 1.06 |
| Residual oil No. 2 | 53.0 | 155.8 | .88 |
| Bunker C oil (heavy fuel oil) | 53.0 | 183.9 | 1.03 |
| Crude oils: | | | |
| New York City | 71.0 | 223.6 | 1.26 |
| Bayway, N. J. / Bayonne, N. J. | 47.0 | 148.1 | .83 |

It will be noted that the two rates are shown on crude oil. The higher rate of 71 cents applies to New York City where no storage is available. The lower rate applies to Bayway and Bayonne, N. J., where storage is available. Most crude oil moving to New York is moved there via Bayway or Bayonne at the rate shown for these points. The rate per hundred pounds was converted to a rate per barrel and a rate per barrel-mile on the basis of the pounds per gallon listed above.

Based on a comparison of the railroad rates with the railroad costs shown above, it appears that the petroleum products are being handled at a rate which is something below the fully distributed cost but at the same time above the out-of-pocket cost.

Very truly yours,

W. P. BARTEL,
Secretary.

WAR SHIPPING ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. GEORGE J. BATES,
House of Representatives,
Old House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We refer to your telephone conversation of yesterday afternoon with our Mr. McGuire, at which time you requested information as to freight rates applicable on shipments of petroleum and petroleum products in tank vessels from United States Gulf ports to New York.

There is attached for your information a copy of our rate order No. 38, listing, among others, authorized rates for shipments of the nature referred to when made in tank vessels of over 3,000 gross tons operated for account of this Administration, and effective on all cargoes moved on and after April 20, 1942. For your convenience we list hereunder the basic rates applicable from any one United States Gulf loading port to New York Harbor on the grades of petroleum and its products, in which you are particularly interested:

| | Cents per barrel |
|---|---|
| Gasoline or kerosene | 40 |
| No. 2 and No. 3 heating oils | 42 |
| Bunker C and other fuel or crude oils of 10° to 19.9° A. P. I. | 48 |
| Crude and heavy fuel oils of less than 10° A. P. I. | 50 |

As was explained to you verbally, the above-listed rates are the noncompensatory or subsidized rates that were placed in effect by this Administration during the spring of last year upon request of the Office of Price Administration as a means of maintaining maximum price ceilings for petroleum and its products. They represent rates necessary to cover an owner's normal tank-vessel operating costs, including reasonable allowance for management and profit factors, and are considered to be generally comparable to rates effective in this trade prior to outbreak of the war in Europe during September of 1939. They do not take into account any of the very heavy extra cost occasioned by operation by this Administration under wartime conditions, such as costs of war-risk insurance, crew bonuses, loss of vessel time due to convoyed or directed routings, etc., all of which costs are absorbed by this Administration, which now has under time charter all privately owned American registered tank vessels of the size to which these rates are applicable.

You also inquired as to the measure of rates effective for these tanker trades prior to the entry of this country into the war, and while we have no detailed information in this respect, we can advise generally that the demand for tanker tonnage increased after outbreak of the war in Europe late in 1939 to an extent that brought about an appreciable increase in voyage charter freight rates, with the average rate for the Port Arthur-New York service during the latter part of 1940 being, roughly, 60 cents per barrel for gasoline. After the passage by the Congress of an act approved July 14, 1941, known as the Warrants Act, giving authority for control over rates of all vessels operating under the warrants provided for in that act, the United States Maritime Commission fixed a scale of maximum time charter rates for tanker vessels which brought about a corresponding average voyage freight rate for this trade of approximately 50 cents per barrel for gasoline, with appropriate additional charges for the heavier oils. During the latter part of November 1941 this authorized basic maximum rate was reduced to 40 cents per barrel, and after the entry of this country into the war there were authorized during the early months of 1942 various and increasing surcharges designed to compensate vessel owners for the rapidly increasing extra wartime expenses. Such authorized surcharges remained effective until this Administration requisitioned the American tanker-vessel fleet and placed into effect the noncompensatory or subsidized basis of rates above outlined.

It is hoped that the above information and attached schedule of detailed tanker voyage freight rates will give you the desired data, but if anything further is needed in this connection please do not hesitate to call upon us.

Very truly yours,

J. F. McART,
Director of Freight Rates and Surcharges.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION FOR WAR,
Washington, January 30, 1943.

Hon. GEORGE J. BATES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BATES: Pursuant to your telephone conversation on January 20 with Mr. W. C. Kinsolving, Assistant Director of Transportation, we wish to give you the following facts and estimates on construction and operating costs of the 24-inch pipe line now being built and the 20-inch products line which we have recommended to be built and which were discussed in more detail in my letter to you of January 21.

In our letter to you of July 22, 1942, we pointed out that a tariff rate of 48 cents per barrel had been proposed for the operation of the war emergency 24-inch line from Longview to New York, and based upon capacity operations this tariff would pay all operating expenses and amortize the line in 5 years. In our letter to you of January 21, 1943, we stated that this line would probably not post a tariff but operate directly for the account of Defense Supplies Corporation. Based upon present labor costs, power costs, and other operating costs, we now believe that the actual operating cost per barrel based upon capacity operations will be in the order of 31 cents per barrel, including a 20-percent annual depreciation and amortization charge. Inasmuch as this project will cost approximately $95,000,000, the yearly amortization cost would be $19,000,000. Figuring a throughput of 300,000 barrels per day, this would be approximately 17½ cents per barrel; subtracting this from the 31 cents would give about 13½ cents per barrel as actual operating cost.

On the same basis, as mentioned in my letter of January 21, 1943, the 20-inch line would cost about $75,000,000, and the annual amortization cost will be $15,000,000. In a like manner, figuring the full throughput of 235,000 barrels per day, the amortization cost per barrel would be about the same, namely 17½ cents per barrel. Similarly, the operating cost of this line would be the difference between 38 cents and 17½ cents, or about 20½ cents per barrel.

It should be pointed out in the above that these costs are based upon maximum capacity for each day of the year. This, of course, cannot be physically realized, and a correction factor would have to be applied. If we assume a 90-percent throughput, these rates would, of course, be increased by 10 percent.

Just prior to the war, tanker rates varied between 40 and 50 cents a barrel from Gulf coast ports to north of Hatteras, dependent upon the product hauled; the lighter gasoline and products being at the lower rate and the heavier crudes and residual fuels being at the higher rate. It will, therefore, be seen that even with this high amortization rate for pipe lines, they compare favorably with tanker rates. It should be pointed out, however that this is only applicable to large-diameter lines of a large continuous throughput.

In our original estimate, requesting authorization of this line, to the War Production Board made on May 15, 1942, we estimated the cost of the line from Longview to Norris City at $35,000,000. In our subsequent report of October 1, 1942, requesting authorization for the extension from Norris City to the eastern seaboard, we estimated this cost at $60,000,000, making a total cost of $95,000,000 for the completed project from Longview to New York-Philadelphia.

The line from Longview to Norris City is now 95 percent complete and will be placed in initial operation far a limited throughput early in February. Based upon the best information available from the main construction office of the War Emergency Pipelines, Inc., in Little Rock, with the known expenditures to date, it is estimated by their office that the total expenditures on this first section will be well within the estimated cost of $35,000,000. We are, therefore, safe in assuming that the completed project will likewise be well within the estimated cost.

We trust that the above information will be of interest to you and we offer these facts as firm evidence that our representations to the War Production Board have been sound, not only from an actual necessity standpoint to meet the essential civilian demands and the on-shore and off-shore military requirements, but also from an economic standpoint.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. PARTEN,
Director of Transportation.

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION FOR WAR,
Washington, January 21, 1943.

Hon. GEORGE J. BATES,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BATES: Pursuant to telephone conversation you had with Mr. W. C. Kinsolving, Assistant Director of Transportation, on January 18, I am giving you the following memoranda concerning the facts on the proposed 20-inch products line which we are presenting to the War Production Board for its approval.

This proposed line will be constructed by the War Emergency Pipelines, Inc., as agent for Defense Plant Corporation in a manner similar to the procedure followed on the 24-inch line now under construction. The first leg of the line will extend from the Houston and Beaumont refineries to a point on the 24-inch line near Little Rock, Ark., and then parallel to the 24-inch line into termini at Norris City, Ill., and Seymour, Ind. The distance from Beaumont to Seymour, Ind., is approximately 836 miles, and a feeder line will run from Beaumont to Houston refineries, approximately 85 miles in length. The line will be 20 inches in diameter, with the exception of the Houston-Beaumont leg, which will be 16 inches. It will handle approximately 235,000 barrels per day of products at a pressure of approximately 750 pounds per square inch. It is estimated that this section will cost approximately $44,000,000. The total tonnage of steel needed for this leg is approximately 165,000 tons.

The second leg of this line, from Norris City and Seymour to New York-Philadelphia, will require approximately 554 miles more of 20-inch pipe and approximately 114 miles more of 16-inch pipe for feeder lines into the New York-Philadelphia area. This will require approximately 120,000 tons of additional steel and cost an additional $31,000,000. It will, of course, be for the same capacity.

As we are now presenting our proposal, we are recommending the construction of the first leg of this line to start as soon as men, equipment, and materials are available and build the line to Norris City and Seymour so that transshipment can be made to the east coast in the early fall. By the first of May, when we have reviewed our winter transportation experience and when we have further information regarding offshore petroleum demands, we will again scrutinize the situation with a view toward recommending the continuance of the line to the east coast.

While no final operating costs are available as yet, we anticipate that this line can operate on an approximate 38-cent tariff to the east coast and amortize itself in 5 years, provided full capacity of the line can be maintained. This assumes that current operating expenses would remain at substantially the levels which are now prevailing for power, labor costs, and the like.

It is probable that the line actually would be operated directly for the account of Defense Supplies Corporation without formal posting of tariffs as a carrier. Such plan of operation is being followed in the case of the 24-inch war emergency pipe line in the interest of maintaining maximum throughput at all times. The cost estimate given above would be applicable to either plan of operation.

Sincerely yours,

J. R. PARTEN,
Director of Transportation.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH].

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss in these few moments a subject in which I have been interested for a number of years and in connection with which I might refer anyone to my legislative record. I take this time to discuss the situation confronting us in connection with the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and I am motivated to do that because of the colloquy that appears in the RECORD of today and the proposed action that will be taken when the bill is read under the 5-minute rule.

It will be sought immediately to liquidate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a very salutary objective if it were practical; however, in any consideration of the forced liquidation of the Corporation at this time, the interests not only of the investing public or of mortgage and financing institutions should be considered, but the interest of the taxpayer as well as the mortgagors of the Corporation should be considered. It has been estimated that if the corporation were precipitously liquidated at this time the resulting loss to the Treasury of the United States would amount to approximately $301,000,000 and the items making up that total would be: First, the loss that the Corporation would necessarily suffer from the sale of its existing mortgage-loan accounts, the sum of $54,000,000; second, the loss from the forced sale of its present real-estate holdings, the sum of $53,000,000; and third, the loss of the net operating income of the Corporation through the next 8 fiscal years, the sum of $148,000,000. To this estimated operating loss of $255,000,000 would necessarily have to be added the additional bond interest expense that would result from any liquidation at this time. That additional expense that would flow by way of interest on outstanding Corporation bonds which are not now and will not be for some time callable is $46,000,000. In other words, an immediate liquidation of this Corporation would result in an added burden to the taxpayers of this Nation of approximately $301,000,000.

It is hard, therefore, for me or for anyone who is familiar with the operations of that Corporation to justify the further imposition upon the taxpayers of this Nation of that sum.

At the present time the Corporation holds mortgages of approximately 782,171 home owners. About 500,000 of those mortgages are in the class that might be described as prime mortgage investments. About 282,171 are those mortgages that had to be refunded under the terms of the Barry-Mead bill, and those 282,000 mortgages presently held by the Corporation, in my opinion, would be nonlegal investments for any savings and loan association or any other mortgage financing institution under the provisions of the laws of the United States or of any State in which those institutions operate.

The problem for this House to determine therefore is what would happen not only to the investment represented by those 282,000 mortgages, but over and above that what would happen to those mortgagors? The past record of these loans is such that the mortgages necessarily obtained on a bargain and discount basis would be foreclosed upon default.

The loan accounts of that Corporation may be properly divided into five groups—those in which the loans have been reduced in excess of 30 percent, those in which the reduction of the loan is 20 to 30 percent, 10 to 20 percent, 0 to 10 percent, and those which have not been reduced in any amount.

The best mortgages held by the Corporation total 500,000. These are the Corporation's loan accounts, which are presently eagerly sought after by financial institutions engaged in the mortgage investment field. These companies cannot and certainly will not take over the loans in the less favorable groups, except at large discount. If they should take over those loans, foreclosures would inevitably follow with resultant disastrous effects upon the entire real-estate market. Many of these associations are members of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, so that, even if losses should result to such associations, the Government, through the Insurance Corporation, could be called upon to make good to the shareholders up to $5,000 each.

These are the mortgagors who were sought to be benefited by the original Home Owners' Loan Act, and who are last to be able either by reason of increased income, readjustments, or otherwise to meet their mortgage obligations. Those accounts are in a state of suspense now, and I say that we should give very careful consideration before we precipitously force the liquidation of a Corporation that already has the mandate of the Congress to liquidate as quickly as possible; a Corporation that in less than 8 years since its lending operations terminated has retired its bonded indebtedness to less than 55% of its total. That Corporation, like any agency of government that has a specific job to do, wants to do that job and wants to do it as quickly and as well as it can. That Corporation, in my opinion, has done an efficient over-all job, considering the fact that the eligibility of an applicant for a mortgage from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was virtually his proving his inability to pay. Those mortgages taken over by the Corporation were on the average of 2 to 3 years in default during the lending period of 1933 to 1936 and of over a million cases this Corporation has put on a current basis upward of 500,000 such loans. That represents the justification for our having had the faith we did have in the home-owning people of this country, who, having a home, wanted to keep it and with the aid of this Corporation they were able to do so. They have now been rehabilitated to the point where upward of $700,000,000 of mortgages held by this Corporation are prime investments for any mortgage financing institution.

Certainly these financing institutions want to get them. Who would not have faith in the home-owning people of this country? Who would not want to invest his money with those decent, honest Americans who have justified the faith that we had in them? But we say, give consideration to the problem not only of those people, not only the financial institutions that are seeking to tap this fertile field for investment, but the whole over-all problem.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call to the attention of the House the fact that in the RECORD of yesterday there was inserted a letter from a savings and loan institution in Massachusetts dated February 8, 1943. I have in my hand a circular issued by the United States Savings and Loan League under date of February 3, which circular lists seven reasons why the Corporation should be liquidated. The letter inserted in the RECORD on yesterday lists seven reasons why the Corporation should be liquidated. In that letter the first six reasons are taken in haec verba from the circular of the Savings and Loan League and the seventh is the same as the seventh in the circular, but in different language.

Certainly they want to invest in that field, but that represents the type of investment that you and I knew would be good. It represents the investment this Government made in the faith and in the honesty of the American people. It represents investments that we took over, among others, to the extent of almost $1,000,000,000 from the various savings and loan associations that today want them back—the savings and loan associations that today are indebted to the Corporation in excess of $120,000,000 for advances made under the provisions of the original Home Owners' Loan Act and amendments thereto. The associations would in effect be using Government money to the extent of the $120,000,000 to buy good assets of the Government and thereby greatly increase the Government's losses and debt. They did not want these investments in 1933. They should not get them today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I feel rather reluctant to impose myself on the House at this hour of the afternoon, yet I feel somehow that there are some facts and some information about this bill that should be carried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and be made available to the Members. The only way I can get them inserted in the RECORD, since they are not in manuscript form, is to impose myself on you probably for so much as an hour.

It has been rather interesting to hear all the charges rung today—the shortage of fuel oil in Massachusetts, which would indicate some administrative dereliction in Washington, the freedom of the air, and the action of the Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations, which, by a vote of 6 to 1, consisting of three Democrats and three Republicans, rejected the request of the Secretary of Agriculture yesterday morning for a $125,000,000 allowance for the purpose of paying subsidies on eight groups of agricultural commodities together with a vast variety of subject matter which has been ably and thoroughly ventilated.

As I think of that and think of what I read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD every day, the unkind things we have to say about the administrators of the bureaus and the bureaucrats, I think we should be mindful of the fact that we, too, have a real responsibility. In fact, we have a primary responsibility in giving direction to and supervising the conduct of government. After all, every bureau in Washington and, for that matter, every bureau in the United States, exists by the sufferance of Congress. Aside from those offices that are set up in the Constitution, there would be no bureaus unless they were created by the Congress of the United States. In proportion as we are the creator, so we have a responsibility to supervise the creatures, we have a responsibility to carry through and to determine whether or not the powers that are delegated to these bureaus are being exercised efficiently and properly and within the limitations of law.

There are various ways we can supervise these creatures of Congress. The O. D. T., O. C. D., W. P. B., O. P. A., and all the rest are our concern. If they are created by Executive order, they are created only because Congress gave the Executive the authority, so it just offers another step which leads back to Congress. We have the responsibility of supervising them, and we can do it in various ways.

First of all, we can be careful in scrutinizing delegations of power. We had an illustration of it yesterday morning. You would be amazed how the solicitor of the Department of Agriculture had to strain in his interpretation of the Soil Conservation Act and the kindred acts in order to find authority for this extra $100,000,000 requested by the Secretary with which to make incentive payments over and above a 90-percent quota and on up to 110 percent. It is proposed that if a farmer's potato quota was 100 acres he would not get any bonus on the 100 acres. He would have to grow over the 100 acres before he would get a subsidy. That would be true of soybeans, potatoes, and flax, and it would be true of sorghum and of certain categories of vegetables.

The point I leave with you is that they searched everywhere like so many adventurous explorers to find the proper authority, and even referred the matter to the Attorney General. I affirm to you that I was here during the deliberations on the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and the acts before up to 1932, and I never heard anyone discuss upon the floor of Congress that we had in mind dipping into the Treasury and paying subsidies for incentive production. It was never mentioned. Thus, the experts in semantics, the artists of etymology, the legalistic folk can then take it apart, phrase by phrase, and finally put their finger right on it and say, "See, there is the power that Congress delegated," and then go further and say that that expresses the intent of Congress, when it was never discussed.

This fact is equally true of the President's order relating to the $25,000 limit on salaries. Here again is an usurpation of authority which, in my humble opinion, was in fact never delegated by Congress.

I say there is a responsibility as other legislation goes across this floor to spell out very carefully every bit of delegated authority, because it is going to rise like Banquo's ghost at the table sometime in the future to haunt us even as this strained interpretation haunted us only yesterday morning, 1, 5, 6 years after that act was submitted to the statute books.

The first thing, then, is care and caution. The second thing I would submit to you is legislative review. We passed the investigating resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], and we are authorizing a committee of this House now to examine the rules and the forms and the procedures and regulations that are issued to see whether they infringe upon the constitutional rights of the citizen, to see whether they are departures from the delegated authority. We realize that they have departed, so now we are going to investigate. We should not even bother to investigate; we should set up a legislative review committee right now, consisting of half a dozen Senators and half a dozen Members of the House and give that committee authority to request every bureau to send its regulations and rules to the Congress before they are issued, to stamp them with a time stamp, and for a period of 10 days to keep them from becoming applicable to the people of the country.

And if that committee, armed with a technical staff, would then say, "We object to some of these things," they could not become effective for at least 40 days, and when the Congress had been so advised, we would repeal the legislation under which it was done, if we were so disposed. There must be bureaucratic discipline. That is what we need today, and it must emanate from the Congress, from the people's Representatives who are elected to office to whom the people look. So, first, there must be scrutiny of delegated power and, secondly, there should be review. I am persuaded that a great many of the bungling procedures in the Office of Price Administration, a great many of the severities in the rationing program, could have been avoided if a group of legislators could sit down with a staff and examine them meticulously and straighten them out and send them back and say, "With these modifications, they are all right." So we need legislative review. I commend to your attention the concurrent resolution which I introduced to create a Joint Committee on Administrative Review which would review the regulations, rules, and forms of executive agencies and cause the elimination of injustices and impractical provisions before they are applied to the public. This would discharge its full responsibility to the people.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GWYNNE. I agree with the gentleman so far as legislative review is concerned. Does not the gentleman think we might call upon the courts?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was coming to that next.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. KEOGH. And I call attention to the existence of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, a standing committee of this House, charged as it is with codifying the general laws, and say that we could very well be implemented with technical assistance such as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I quite agree with the gentleman, and let me say to him, and to the House, what I have often wanted to say before, that I think he has done a splendid job as Chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws in keeping Members notified from time to time and supplying them with the laws, in excellent form so that they are current in every Member's office.

The next item of concern of Congress is the enactment of a measure which would provide adequate judicial review of administrative decisions. For several years the Walter-Logan bill became a household rule and was in fact passed by this House but failed in the Senate. It is hard to believe that the protection of the people which was vested in the courts has in truth and in fact been impaired and to a considerable extent nullified by delegating to bureau heads and administrators the power to make decisions which if not complied with invoke a fine or penalty or both without adequate authority in the courts to review the decision of such a bureau. The growth of administrative law can become a positive menace to representative government and the time at at hand when Congress must deal with this problem by the enactment of the Walter-Logan bill or a similar measure which will preserve in the courts the power to shield and protect the citizen against his Government.

If we follow out the things that some folks downtown want to do, after a while our whole court system, and its powers, will be nullified.

The growth of administrative power has developed a new ideology in this country which threatens to make Congress a mere adjunct of government. It has some skilled, redoubtable, and keen exponents who are scattered through the Government today who would like nothing better than to make the country definitely subservient to the executive branch. I refer particularly to Dr. Alvin Hansen, adviser to the Federal Reserve Board and as I recall adviser to the Budget Bureau. In June of 1942 he gave an interview to the Chicago press which was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 27, 1942. Dr. Hansen's language is so eloquent that it clearly speaks for itself and I shall read it for your edification.

> Congress will surrender to the administration the power to tax, keeping to itself the right only to establish the broad limits within which the administration must move. Congress will appropriate huge sums of money, will surrender its power over directing when and how the money shall be spent. Other extraordinary powers, such as for instance to effect wholesale social reforms, will be delegated to the administration, which will retain most, if not all, of its present extraordinary wartime powers. It is folly to think that we can return to normal after the war.

That is from a man high in authority. Do not try to laugh off Mr. Hansen. He has a brilliant intellect. He knows where he wants to go. He has coined the term "administrative democracy," and what he wants in effect is for Congress to pass a five-line bill which would say in substance:

> The power to tax is delegated to the Chief Executive, to be exercised according to his own discretion, and to be delegated to any agency that he may indicate.

That is what Dr. Hansen contemplates. He says, in effect, that Congress should pass a short appropriation bill. There is no use of wasting any time on the pending bill in spelling out of the things, but just a five-line bill will do:

> There is hereby appropriated for the use of the Executive, as to him shall see fit, the sum of $100,000,000.

Under Dr. Hansen's theory, there would be no need for long and arduous hearings by any appropriation subcommittee. It would be unnecessary to investigate and examine the agencies of government. Having delegated the broad authority, it would remain for the President to determine how and where the funds should be expended. Truly this is high testimony to the belief in some quarters that the legislative branch of government is a superfluous interstatement.

Dr. Hansen says the extraordinary wartime powers in control shall remain. It is a great spectacle, is it not? A great spectacle for the millions of young men who are beating out their energies on the sands of Africa, who are wrestling with malaria and disease and Japanese gunfire at Guadalcanal. Oh, what a spectacle to come back to, to come back to this beloved Republic, with another victory in their grasp, to raise their eyes like Ishmael in the wilderness, on their return and then to contemplate the language of Dr. Hansen. A republic which was circumverted and destroyed while they were fighting for freedom, a country where the very bulwarks of freedom have been casually taken over while millions of young Americans were offering their lives to bring the "four freedoms" to the ends of the earth. Great God! Is that what they are fighting for?

Indulge me a personal allusion. I served over on the other side for 17 months in the last war. I felt all the thrills of righteous idealism when I read of the great cause that carried us across submarine-infested water to fight for democracy, to make the world safe for democracy, to fight a war to end all wars. Consider the years which have intervened. Consider the fool's paradise in which we lived in the years immediately after that conflict. Consider the valley of shadows through which they have walked as we battled the main depression. Then consider that only 24 years after the war to end all wars we are again throwing every resource of the Nation into the struggle for the preservation of freedom and the expansion of democratic processes. Young men have bled and died for this great Republic. Young men have dared to fight in all corners of the earth that liberty in its full flower might be preserved. So it comes as a shock and as a distressing commentary on keen and brilliant citizens of this Republic that they would by a skillful process dismember and break down the very essence of the finest Government in all the earth.

Here is one of those gentlemen in Washington who you cannot laugh off. They frighten me. They talk now about administrative democracy and about the retention of the extraordinary wartime control. Frankly, gentlemen, we should be whipped out of Washington as the people's representatives if we ever let that happen to this great Republic. If there is ever abdication, if this great, sacred organism under which men have prospered and which has made us the greatest country in all the world is ever destroyed, the fault will be ours for having failed in our scrutiny, for having failed in our proper vigilance, for having failed to create and preserve those safeguards which assure balanced government and the authority of the elected representatives of the people to examine meticulously into its every activity and make it function and operate as they would have us do.

So we must scrutinize these delegations of power. There must be legislative review. There must be judicial review, and finally there must be careful and skillful exercise of the power of investigation, which is one of the truly great weapons of the legislative branch in dealing with bureaucracy and abuses in government.

The British have a great system, namely, the so-called royal commissions. The men who serve on royal commissions in Great Britain receive no remuneration for their services. Places on those commissions are readily sought after by the finest minds and the best talent in the Empire. They do a great work. They become royal commissions of inquiry. The Congress can follow that idea by using its investigatory power, one of the great implements of the legislative branch, to follow along in a very constructive channel and to disclose the truth, unearth abuses and incompetence, and make it the basis for legislative enactment. Sometimes we get off the course a little.

Recently I went to the trouble to do a little checking on the investigations proposed in the Seventy-sixth and Seventy-seventh Congresses. Do you know that in the Seventy-sixth Congress bills were dropped into the hopper calling for 150 investigations? There was a resolution to investigate Madam Perkins, a bill to investigate John L. Lewis, a resolution to investigate insects in onion seeds, a resolution to investigate the Board of Trade in Chicago, resolutions to investigate the Alaskan fisheries and the Alaskan merchant marine, the Florida ship canal, express highways, Passamaquoddy, the Philippines, petroleum production, working conditions in metal mines, banking and monetary policies, Government purchase of Argentine beef, need for constitutional amendments, efforts of the utilities to control public opinion, foreign loans by the United States, trading in futures, propaganda by executive agencies, radio, railroad financing, P. W. A. in Nebraska, wildlife, wool, woodpulp, the capsizing of the Normandie, social security, the sinking of the Squalus, the European situation, farm machinery prices, Puerto Rico, wire tapping, prison-made goods, silver, tobacco prices, technological unemployment, crab-meat production, foreign agents, physical education, resources, and a host of other things.

If every investigation which had been sought by the authors of these resolutions had been enacted, it would have required the entire time of every Member of Congress for the 2-year life of the Seventy-sixth Congress in making those investigations.

This is a happy commentary upon the selectiveness with which we approach this great power. If we do not guard this investigatory power and keep it on a high plane and make it a fruitful and constructive instrument its effect will be lost. So we must carefully guard it.

I have an idea that perhaps one of the good things we could do would be to set up an investigatory pool, to let the House leaders pick men on both sides and assign them to that pool as a kind of legislative commission of inquiry. Then when somebody proposed something that had merit, we would simply refer it to that investigating pool. I have to examine it somewhat but I do know that it is a powerful weapon in the hands of the legislature, and it must be carefully exercised. Let me commend to your earnest attention and your best thinking such a proposal in the hope that out of the composite thinking of the Members of this House, some such proposal may be evolved to keep the investigative on a high plane and make it a true instrumentality for the highest public good.

So I enumerate again, that we must scrutinize delegated power. There must be legislative review of administrative regulations. There must be judicial review of administrative decisions. There must be careful exercise of the investigatory power and finally, and over and above everything else, there is the power of the purse with which we deal today.

We have no true idea of what we really can do on this floor through the instrumentality of the appropriation bills. We can revamp this country. We can save it. We can save the Republic and all the glory of its structure, through the instrumentality of appropriation bills. There would not be any O. P. A. unless there were funds. There would be no Office of Defense Transportation unless there were funds. There would be no Interstate Commerce Commission, no Federal Trade Commission, no Federal Power Commission, no Bureau of Plant Entomology, no Bureau of Animal Industry, no Department of Commerce without funds. It is money bags that talk.

By skillful use of the power of the purse we can determine the size of any agency in Government. We can solve problems of personnel, overstaffing, efficiency, and economy, give direction to Government, eliminate incompetence, eradicate abuses, and improve the public service.

The framers of the Constitution appreciated that fact. What did they do in the sacred law? At that time the House was the only elective body. Senators were selected by the State legislatures. What did they do? They said, first of all, the exclusive revenue authority shall be in the most numerous branch—that is this branch of Congress—because with a 2-year term we are close to the people. If we abuse it, if we impose too much of a burden and belabor them with too much tax severity, it is only 2 years until they can take us out of office. The founders of the Republic were wise men. They had had experience with kings. They knew that the power to tax was the power to destroy. They knew it could be easily abused. So they created a safeguard. The power to initiate taxes was placed with us. If abused, they knew the remedy was at the polls. A further implication of that was the appropriating power. They therefore provided in the Constitution that no money could be taken from the Public Treasury except in consequence of appropriations made by law, and provided further that a receipt and accounting of all funds must be made.

Not a dollar can be otherwise provided. The President cannot get his pay until the Congress votes it across this floor. The humblest clerk in Government cannot be paid except as it is provided by Congress. No battleship can be built; not a single motorcar can be purchased; no soldier can be inducted, clothed, fed, armed; no administrator can be hired; no judge can ascend to the bench and dispense justice; no public building can be constructed except as the authority and the funds are provided by Congress. Do you grasp the full implication of the authority which we exercise and the power of control and direction which reposes in that authority?

So here we are this afternoon dealing with the independent offices appropriation bill, consisting of some 30 agencies, which are depending upon our action. In proportion as we use the power of the purse to discipline if necessary, to give direction if necessary, to bring the operations, the functions, the activities, the authority, and the composition of these agencies within the concept of balanced and coordinated government, so do we rise to that appraisal of the legislative branch of the Government made by President Monroe when he said that—

The whole system of the National Government may be said to rest essentially on the powers granted to this branch. They mark the limit within which, with few exceptions, all the branches must move in the discharge of their respective functions.

I seek to impress upon you that appropriating public funds is serious business. The Members who are here today ought to realize that this is serious business because this is the great instrumentality of the Congress for giving direction to the affairs of this Republic. We should be staffed for this job. We should be staffed for appropriating scientifically and intelligently, far more so than we are, and far more so, I would say, than is allowed by the resolution that was enacted not so long ago, although we have made a start, I am happy to say. I have felt so frustrated and so foolish at times, sitting across the committee table from the folks in the executive branch, when they had all the answers and we had none.

No man and no group of men can properly do a first-class job for the people of this Nation in regulating the flow of funds from the Federal Treasury, in procuring the best type of public service, in providing efficiency and economy, in eliminating extravagance and waste, in eradicating abuses and excesses, and in obtaining for the people a dollar's worth of value for every dollar expended unless an adequate, complete, and continuous examination is made of the host of Federal agencies. Such examination must be a constant function performed by experts under the direction of Congress. They must be "congressional commandos," with spirit and talent, who sally forth into the labyrinths of Government, bring forth the facts and the truth, and then sit at the elbow of congressional committees to furnish advice and recommendations. If Congress expended a million dollars for this type of service, it would result in hundreds of millions of economies. Private corporations spend vast sums to plug leaks, promote efficiency, and save waste. Why cannot this technique be adapted to and applied to the greatest business on earth—the Government of the United States?

Let me give you an illustration: The Maritime Commission to date has had almost $6,000,000,000 in authorizations; $5,250,000,000 are to be requested in a supplemental message; $570,000,000 of lease-lend funds have been made available for ship construction and $71,000,000 of lease-lend funds for facilities. This totals about $11,000,000,000 for one agency of Government—$11,000,000,000. This is four times the total annual expenditure of this Government prior to 1932. That agency will employ 6,700 people, an increase of 1,750 over the last fiscal year.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Briefly.

Mr. O'HARA. I wonder how far this country can go in the expenditure of these tremendous sums?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We can go so far as the common people, who are the bone and the sinew of the country, will not run out on us; that is the answer. Mr. Chairman, you cannot draw a dollar sign and a certain amount against an iridescent sky and say that is the debt the American people can stand whether it be $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 or $300,000,000,000 or any other figure. I do know that it is a psychological limit. When the people are filled with apprehension about the future and they begin to put the fruit of their thrift under the mattress and in the sock that is the day you are done. When that happens you will know that you have reached the limit. That fact makes every dollar important. It is a serious business, this business of nondefense expenditures. When people run out because they are apprehensive, look out. That is when the day of reckoning is at hand. That is the day that Gabriel blows the fiscal trumpet.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In a minute, if the gentleman will permit me to continue.

Now, here is the Maritime Commission with over 6,700 people and $18,000,000 for administrative expenditures.

Think of the magnitude of this operations with eleven billions of funds to be made available, a personnel of 6,700 for administrative purposes, a program calling for 1,000 ships in 1943, plus authority to pay construction and operating differentials and the further authority to sell and purchase ships and establish charter hire rates. It is so very necessary that an operation of this magnitude be circumspect, efficient, and carefully administered. Let us consider one item. Do you know—and I am speaking from the record now, all of which you will find in the hearings—that the Maritime Commission sold to the Waterman Steamship Co. 5 ships, which were built in 1920. They sold them in 1941 or 1942; they were, roughly, 21 years old. They were old ships. Do you know what they received for those ships? Waterman paid the Maritime Commission $596,000. Then the Commission turns around and buys 5 other ships, equally old, from Waterman; and how much do they pay for 5 which they purchased? As much as they bought the other ships for? No, indeed. They paid $3,374,000. They gave away about $2,800,000 of the taxpayers' money. I said to Admiral Land—and you will find it at page 741:

We gave you a policy.

I said:

We wrote it in the law. It is what we wanted you to do, and now you superimpose yourself upon Congress and you write the policy.

Then he stated himself on page 731:

I am not saying that we were right or wrong, but I believe we were right.

What a weak answer for a loss of $2,800,000 of public money. We had a memorandum from the Comptroller General on this thing. Here is an agency with an item of $18,000,000 for administrative expenses, with 6,700 people on the pay roll. They have all the lawyers and all the accountants; and on the other side of the table sit we with no counsel, no experts, no investigators, to explore this operation and ascertain the full facts. By cross-quizzing and by direct question we try to build up the story. Mr. Chairman, we cannot run this Government that way efficiently. It is our responsibility to do something about it, because we are going to have to go back home and give an accounting of our stewardship.

The subcommittee should have been provided with a wealth of expert investigators to thoroughly examine into shipbuilding operations in every section of the country if the taxpayers are to receive full value for money expended. A few years ago a special committee under the chairmanship of Senator Black of Alabama was created in the Senate to investigate the maritime industry and when its labors were completed, it developed a scandal of national proportions. I do not wish to see a recurrence of such a thing because it is devastating to public morale and weakens the faith of the people in the integrity of government. It is, therefore, far better that we exercise a close and expert supervision from day to day to prevent a situation of that kind from arising.

The Maritime Commission has also conducted a shipbuilding operation in Maine in the yards of the South Portland Ship Building Corporation. This operation has been investigated by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, and a report was filed on November 24, 1942. It was also investigated by the Truman committee of the Senate, and I present to you but a few quotes from the report of the Truman committee:

The trucking situation was ineptly handled.

Travesty of competitive bidding.

Mr. Wall, of the Maritime Commission, is not a proper or competent representative of the Maritime Commission.

The employment of Louis J. Brann, former Governor, as labor consultant, may be justified by the events, but there was nothing to indicate his particular qualification in the field of labor relations, and his retainer had unfortunate implications and political repercussions on public opinion.

The labor relations for the Todd Shipbuilding Co. being handled by Mrs. Elinor Herrick.

At one time Mrs. Herrick was in the employ of the Federal Government.

Existing management has not produced the results expected.

The contract should be renegotiated and there should be a reduction of fees to preclude the making of an exorbitant profit.

Here is an operation involving huge funds, the efficacy of which was assailed by the Truman committee and severely criticized by both the majority and minority members of a House committee to the degree to which they could devote time to this operation in the field. Then comes our subcommittee which must pass upon the estimates and appropriations requested to carry on the far-flung work of this Commission on the Pacific coast, along the Gulf coast, on the Great Lakes, and on the Atlantic seaboard, and how helpless one feels when he realizes that involved here is nearly eleven thousand million dollars of the taxpayer's money.

Time will not permit going into all the aspects of the Maritime Commission; I wish I could; but there is one thing I am going to read to you in connection with all this and that is what the Merchant Marine Committee of the House said about it. They investigated it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 15 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Even the majority report of this committee states:

SOUTH PORTLAND SHIP'S POSSIBLE PROFIT

The fees paid to South Portland Ship as of October 31, 1942, amounted to $450,000. These fees are, for all practical purposes, net earnings of South Portland Ship. Its total investment is $250,000. All costs and expenses incurred by it, including salaries of officers, even $6,575 of the $10,000 salary paid to Mr. Newell, are being reimbursed to it by the Maritime Commission. It has already received a return on its investment of almost 200 percent. Under its contracts with the Commission it is to build 84 ships. Judging by its performance to date, its fees will not exceed $60,000 per ship, as on the ships built so far the penalties imposed for bad performance keep the fees at the minimum figure. Even at the minimum figure, however, its total fees will amount to $5,040,000, or a return of 2,000 percent on investment. This high return on investment must be considered in the light of the fact that South Portland Ship incurs no risk. Up to the present time it has financed its operations by short-term bank loans, a simple matter when one is enabled to borrow on the security of a Government contract. Incidentally, even the interest expense incurred on such loans is reimbursable.

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATION

The question presented is whether or not the performance by South Portland Ship has been such as to warrant the payment of fees of not less than $5,040,000. To summarize the relevant facts in the light of which an answer to this question must be framed, South Portland Ship contributed substantially nothing to the performance of the facilities contracts other than the lay-out of the yard and the lay-out is bad. It delegated the performance of the facilities contracts to the architect and the general contractors. Until the original facilities were nearly complete, it supplied no experienced or able supervision over the work of either the architect or the general contractors. The original management was removed at the insistence of the Maritime Commission. Were it not for the Maritime Commission's insistence at that time, to wit, the spring of this year, there is no indication but that the then existing management would have been continued and the yard would be in even worse shape than it is today. Since the appointment of Mr. Klitgaard in May 1942, and the granting to him of complete authority without any control by either the officers or directors of South Portland Ship, it has delegated to him the performance of the ship construction contracts. For long periods of time and until very recently it followed a policy of not paying any bills rendered to it until those bills were first approved by the Maritime Commission auditors in the yard, thus assuring it that the items paid would be reimbursed. Its investment of $250,000 is insignificant when compared with the moneys necessary even to meet the pay rolls in a yard employing some 13,000 men, and now with the addition of the Todd-Bath facilities, some 25,000 men. It has delegated to banks the task of supplying the necessary funds for the financing of its work without cost to it since the interest expense incurred is paid by the Maritime Commission.

The inevitable conclusion is that South Portland Ship is receiving a fee for the trouble of incorporating a company, choosing a name for that company, holding an occasional directors meeting and delegating the performance of its contract duties.

Your committee conceives that it would not be doing its full duty if it merely reported the above facts and did not suggest a remedy. It is clear to your committee that to continue in force the existing contract with South Portland Ship would be to throw away millions of dollars needlessly. As indicated above, South Portland Ship has already received fees representing almost 200 percent of its invested capital. The contracts may be summarily canceled upon payment of fees earned to the date of cancelation. In the alternative the contracts may be terminated at any time without payment of fees when the contractor has failed to exercise due diligence. South Portland Ship has already received more than enough. There is ample cause, as recited above, for the termination of its contracts.

In a hearing held about a month ago, your committee suggested to the representatives of the Maritime Commission, including two of the members of the Commission, that the contracts be terminated immediately because of the failure of South Portland Ship to exercise due diligence in their performance. While the Commission members conceded freely that they were not satisfied with conditions at the yard, they demurred to the suggestion that the contracts be terminated giving as an excuse that there is bad management in other yards also.

The record of South Portland Ship is the worst of any company engaged in the construction of Liberty ships. Your committee is unable to subscribe to the principle that South Portland Ship should be paid $5,000,000 for its incompetence, inefficiency, and obvious inability to perform its contract duties solely because other yards furnish examples of bad management. There is no room for incompetence, inefficiency, and incapacity, the only effect of which is a hampering of our war effort. In the opinion of your committee, the proposition that the contracts enjoyed by South Portland Ship should be terminated immediately is so clear that it admits of no debate. The other yards which, it is said, furnish examples of bad management will be very carefully examined, if your committee is authorized to continue its investigation.

One other reason was suggested by the members of the Maritime Commission for their reluctance to terminate the contract of South Portland Ship, to wit, that there is a dearth of available managerial skill. Your committee believes to the contrary. In this connection it must be stressed that the job at South Portland is not a technical shipbuilding job but a construction job. Experience in other yards has demonstrated that the chief executive need not possess shipbuilding experience.

The specific suggestion of your committee is that the contracts with South Portland Ship should be terminated immediately and that the existing top management should be replaced by a single qualified executive who, with the existing staff of superintendents and foremen, can carry out the task of constructing the remaining ships. Under such an arrangement millions of dollars would be saved and there is every reason to believe that ships would be coming off the ways and out of the basins with ever-increasing speed.

You ought to read that report, because it is a great document.

And then our good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] wrote the minority views in which he states:

MINORITY VIEWS

I concur in the recommendation contained in the report to terminate the contract of the South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation with the Maritime Commission, but believe it should go further for the following reasons:

1. The report indicates that the Maritime Commission has been fully aware of the condition existing at the South Portland Shipbuilding Corporation yard from its inception and it has been the responsibility of the Maritime Commission to eliminate the conditions existing without congressional investigation or action. The Maritime Commission has been derelict in its duty in not terminating this contract many months ago.

2. Members of the Maritime Commission have testified to the Commission's incompetency as set forth in the following language on page 38 of the typewritten report:

"In a hearing held about a month ago, your committee suggested to the representatives of the Maritime Commission, including two of the members of the Commission, that the contracts be terminated immediately because of the failure of South Portland Ship to exercise due diligence in their performance. While the Commission members conceded freely that they were not satisfied with conditions at the yard, they demurred to the suggestion that the contracts be terminated giving as an excuse that there is bad management in other yards also."

RICHARD J. WELCH,

I want to refer to one more item, and this is in a letter from our good friend, Lindsay Warren, at one time a Member of this House, and one of the most brilliant Members who ever sat in this House. I write him every once in a while in his capacity as Comptroller General about various things. Here is a current letter, dated February 11, 1943. The Comptroller's letter refers to the purchase by the United States Maritime Commission of the steamship President Roosevelt from the United States Lines, in which the Comptroller takes the position that the Commission paid an excessive amount for this vessel. In his letter the Comptroller states:

Since then I have transmitted to Congress a special report dealing with the acquisition by the United States Maritime Commission of the steamship President Roosevelt from the United States Lines, and that report, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for January 22, page 328, was referred to the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

What is the story about this ship-purchase item? The Comptroller alleges that in 1931 the United States Lines acquired this vessel from the United States Shipping Board for the sum of $262,500. By the formula which the Commission itself uses in estimating the depreciation of a ship, its value in October 1940 should properly have been only $178,531. Notwithstanding this formula the Commission has itself devised and purchased this ship from the United States Lines in October 1940 for about $600,000 with a resulting loss to the taxpayers of this country in excess of $400,000. The Comptroller also points out that when this vessel was operated by the United States Lines, the Government absorbed a loss of about $3,000,000 in the operation of this ship for a period of seven years. Up to this time I have seen no valid reason to support this transaction and it constitutes a fruitful field in which the Appropriations Committee can function in the interest of complete integrity and efficient supervision of executive operations.

The law which Congress wrote in 1936 specifically provides in section 902 (a) that during any national emergency "declared by proclamation of the President it shall be lawful for the Commission to purchase any vessel or other water craft owned by citizens of the United States or under construction within the United States or for any period during such emergency to requisition or charter the use of any such property. The termination of any emergency so declared shall be announced by a further proclamation of the President. When any such property or the use thereof is so requisitioned, the owner thereof shall be paid just compensation for the property taken or for the use of such property but in no case shall the value of the property taken be deemed enhanced by the causes necessitating the taking or use." Note the last clause in that sentence to the effect that in no case shall the value of the property taken or used be deemed enhanced by the causes necessitating the taking or use.

That language is so clear and so unequivocal that it cannot be misinterpreted. Yet in the light of that language does it not appear that the Commission has purchased vessels and permitted their enhancement in value because of the emergency and clearly made a purchase which is in contravention of the law?

Perhaps I should observe at this point that a definite effort was made to secure a revision of that provision of the law. When the repeal measure reached the Senate, it became the subject of inquiry, and so it failed, but the effort to secure its repeal has gone steadily forward and you will find from the hearings that the Chairman of the Maritime Commission has in recent weeks addressed a letter to the Comptroller General of the United States in which he seeks to obtain a reinterpretation of section 902 of the act of 1936. That request will be found on page 733 of the hearings. In addition to all this you will find in the hearings on page 795 a report made by the Comptroller General on alleged irregularities in the construction of certain vessels by the Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. and in the sale of those vessels to the Navy Department. All of which was done under contract with the Maritime Commission.

In recent days you may have observed from the press that an investigation is also going forward with respect to the contracts for the construction of concrete barges.

Here, then, is the unpleasant sequence of charges and allegations which involve huge sums of public funds, and it is the solemn responsibility of the Congress, as the guardian of the Public Treasury, to leave no stone unturned in ascertaining full facts with reference to this matter. It is a time for heroic action irrespective of who might be hurt thereby, and I shall continue to press for a thorough investigation of the whole shipbuilding program.

Here is the power of the purse. We must exercise it intelligently and skillfully so that we can make a proper accounting to the people. How are you going to do it when so many dollars are involved and there are so many experts on the other side of the table? One is like a lawyer trying a lawsuit when you have neither witnesses or evidence. That is not a very happy commentary upon Congress' own dereliction in staffing itself the better to do this job.

Now a few words about the National Resources Planning Board, which has been discussed rather freely here. You may have observed that the subcommittee struck out the appropriation for that agency. I heard someone observe that he proposed to restore this appropriation if he could, but I am afraid he cannot. If I remember correctly, it is subject to a point of order, and I shall make the point of order if an amendment is offered to that effect.

Let me tell you why I think the committee took this action. I speak for myself, and I believe also for my colleagues. We are getting a little bewildered about this planning business. It has so many ramifications one cannot tell where it is going. There are 157 activities of government making an allowance for duplications that are in the planning business today. Almost every State has a planning authority, almost every metropolitan center has a planning authority, and I have listed here all the planning agencies in the Federal Government today.

Many bills have been introduced on this subject. There is one by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], one by myself, one by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], one by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], one by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], and one by Senator PEPPER. I think Senator GEORGE is about to introduce a bill on this subject of planning, also. You can develop a mountain of literature on the subject and it seems that it has neither end nor beginning, it has neither rhyme nor reason. I am anxious that we strike this thing and compel some action on the part of the Congress. It is our solemn duty now to set up some kind of a committee and implement it with a staff. If we do not, you know what is going to happen. The planning is going to be done by the same people who spend the money and that is going to be a very unhappy and unsalutary situation when it finally arrives. Do you recall the unhappy expression of Mr. Hopkins some years ago when he said "We will tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect"? That sort of thing must never happen again. I have a ton of literature right here before me, including the latest publication of the National Resources Planning Board that we struck out of the bill, dated June 1942. This tells us what is going on in various States. It is amazing how this planning idea has gotten into the consciousness of everybody everywhere. We will have to deal with the problem. I am very much interested in it, but I want to see the Congress deal with it because we are going to have to appropriate the money and we ought to have something to say about the planning.

I do not want them building any more four-story hen houses in the District of Columbia; I do not want them building any more monkey cages around the country; I do not want to see them develop any other rat-catching program as they did down in New Orleans that cost $2.97 a rat; I do not want them building another race track that was turned over to Bing Crosby's brother out at Delmar, Calif., where we have a million dollars of the taxpayers' money invested. You will find these facts in the hearings of the investigating committee of the Appropriations Committee several years ago. If we are going to escape that, if we are going to give the people a show for their money and the hard-earned dollars that we are going to sweat out of them, then it is time that we get busy on this planning business. The National Resources Planning Board conducts a sort of general staff operation. It picks up all of the planning that is done by all the other people in the country and brings it together. It is a coordinating agency. When they get through they will have coordinated so much that we will have to build a building as big as the new Census Building if we are going to hold all of these plans.

I am informed that in the Federal Works Agency there are over 30,000 projects scheduled right now. Some of the old timers are still there. Is it not time that we take a look at all this thing and see that the authority is up here, that we do a little bit of this planning? If we do not, I do not know what the ultimate implication is going to be. The subcommittee is unanimous in its belief that there must be post-war planning. It is also unanimous in its belief that this is the prime responsibility of those who are keepers of the public purse and it is to be hoped that Congress will take action in the very near future. In fact Congress should make general financial provision for such a planning operation within the legislative branch. The executive agencies are not niggardly about looking after this planning and research business in the executive branch of the Government. I had the Library of Congress go through every agency of the Government and find out how much money is being expended for research, and have it tabulated. Do you know how much is being spent for research of all kinds? One hundred and sixty-four million dollars a year! Do you not think we could spend a couple of million dollars on ourselves to set up a planning and reconstruction service with engineers and experts to give it guidance? We are going to save hundreds of millions of dollars for the people if we do. Here is $164,000,000 for all kinds of research and it is about time we take a cue from the executive branch and lavish a little research money upon ourselves. Until we do I am not willing to see this item restored. I want to do anything I can to compel some action on the part of this body.

I do not know how effective my humble efforts may be in compelling legislative action on a planning proposal, but I shall persist in that effort until something has been accomplished because Congress has the responsibility for the funds which must be appropriated, and so it must also assume the responsibility for the way and manner in which those appropriations are expended. So I will resist any restoration of the National Resources Planning Board until the Congress sets up some kind of a staff of its own.

Look at today's issue of the Washington Daily News. It contains an editorial about a half column long, which states that Senator GEORGE is proposing now the creation of some kind of a joint committee and a planning staff. Thank goodness that the Senator has done that. If we cannot initiate it over on this side, I hope perhaps it can be initiated over on the other side and we will get this thing going.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In that regard, may I say that the resolution introduced by Senator GEORGE does not provide for a joint committee but a separate Senate committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is all right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I may say to the gentleman that yesterday I introduced a verbatim copy of that resolution, except that it sets up a House committee. May I ask the gentleman if he can tell the House how much money is being spent by the various agencies for planning?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I just gave the figure, $164,000,000. It has been brought up to date. So that is something that must be done.

I do not have time for everything. I wish I had 2 or 3 hours to just visit about this bill, but I must be content to hit the high spots.

There is, for instance, the Securities and Exchange Commission. I want to tell you something about them. We struck out $750,000 from the Budget estimate. We should have cut their appropriation half in two, but I propose to defend the action of the subcommittee. I will tell you why I think we could cut their appropriation in two.

It is my humble opinion that they are manufacturing business down there. The procedures for securities regulation and exchange regulation, investment adviser regulation, broker-dealer regulation, and the operations under section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act have all been pretty well patterned now, and surely there ought to be some retraction from the high ground they have reached. They ought to be able to save some money and still do the business they ought to do without serving to harass the industry of the country.

Let me illustrate. There was a bill pending in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to prevent the S. E. C. from putting into effect these newly proposed proxy rules. I do not know whether or not there was an arrangement of some kind, but in any event they waited until most of the Members of Congress left town to go home for the Christmas recess and then they imposed these proxy regulations. Businessmen are smarting. They find themselves in the midst of a war effort harassed by a change of rules which was wholly unnecessary and seemingly quite capricious. It imposed upon business an unnecessary and an unwarranted burden. They have to hire extra help. The war industries are the ones that are most affected thereby. The Securities and Exchange Commission would pick out a time like this to load up business with proxy, consent, and authorization requirements of one kind and another until it becomes a truly menacing burden.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman could explain what that proxy circular means. It means that stockholders in various parts of the country who are being asked for their proxy do not under the present set-up know anything that is going to transpire at the meetings. The idea of this is to place in the circular a description of the matters on which the stockholders are going to vote and on which they are requested to send in their proxies. I think every stockholder in the United States ought to know for what he is signing his proxy.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, how my friend deludes himself. The volume of material they are going to have to send to the average stockholder would take him a long time to read and, after he read it, he would wonder about the technical terms that are used. Then the lawyers and the crackpots will have their field day and they will be dictating to a good many of the corporations in the country. Examine every financial journal in the country and there you can find quotes galore as to what this thing is doing. Many businessmen have come to town on this matter, hoping that perhaps they could get sufficient relief so they could go ahead with their war operations and not have to detach a good many of their best minds for the purpose of dealing with this problem. It is a terrific thing.

I recognize that Ganson Purcell, the Chairman down there, is a fine young fellow. He has been with the Commission since 1934. But I see now from the public statements he has been making from time to time that he has developed a punitive complex toward business. In an extension of remarks in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A349, inserted by Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY, of New York, Mr. Purcell, the Chairman of the Commission, is quoted as having said:

> Management feathering its nest at the expense of its stockholders as well as that of the Government. We see more and more today.

It is high time that somebody stands up in the Well of this House and has a kind word to say for business. Business is the backbone of the country. It is the place to which we are going to go for the taxes. It will furnish the bone and sinew for the growth of this country. I, for one, will not stand idly by and see a Federal administrator, no matter how brilliant he is, seek to castigate and punish the business of the country that has made us truly great and has provided the employment for the far-flung millions from one ocean to the other.

The statement made by Mr. Purcell shows a definite reflection upon business, as if he does not trust them, as if there is no integrity in the businessmen. We know better than that. Yes; and we are not going along with that kind of philosophy.

I have examined many editorials and news accounts of the effect of the new proxy rules. One journal discusses it under the title of "Proxy Rules Seen Causing Disputes Between Management and Stockholders." Another discusses it under the title "S. E. C.'s Proxy Rules an Example of Reform in Reverse." Still another discusses it under the title "New S. E. C.'s Proxy Rules Held Burdensome to Listed Corporations."

I am also advised that this action was taken on the basis of only a few letters received by S. E. C. from various parts of the country and no real justification has been advanced or shown for imposing this extra burden upon a war-burdened industry at a time when there is a manpower shortage in the country and when industry is expected to provide the guns, the tanks, and the other weapons for the young American warriors, who fight upon the far-flung combat fronts of the world today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry I cannot submit it in this bill, because of the rule against legislation in an appropriation bill, but one of these days I am going to make a proposal that we liquidate the Securities and Exchange Commission as an independent agency of Government and put it in the Department of Commerce. I am willing to see some young fellow who has a good head and some business judgment give direction to it, but it needs stability. We have entrusted to the Department of Commerce lots of component agencies and lots of activities of the Government, and they can stand another. If we put this agency there, we will not get quite the treatment that business is getting at the present time, when the Securities and Exchange Commission undertakes to make it so difficult for business to do business.

In any event, we have the satisfaction of cutting them back $750,000, and I trust that it is but the beginning of a bit of directive discipline to show them that after all the Congress is the law-making body of the country, that the Securities and Exchange Commission is, after all, only a creature of Congress, and that we propose to have something to say about the preservation of that source from which the revenues of the country must come if we are going to stave off the evil day that lies ahead. The pattern of securities' regulations has been established. It must be fair. It must not be capricious. It must be just, but I doubt that it will be sensibly administered so long as it lies in the hands of those who seek to tie up the regulation of business with a social modification. There has been this tendency of using every weapon of government to develop social reform to the point where we approach the day when we kill the goose which lays the golden egg. Here again Congress can assert its proper authority.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Having in mind particularly Douglas and Henderson who once guided the affairs of the S. E. C., I am wondering if the gentleman, having weighed the good and the evil, would say which overbalances the other.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not so sure but that the evil overbalances the good in its destructive effect.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have spoken on this many times, and I am positive that the wrecking business carried on by that agency has far exceeded the good that has come out of it. I wonder if the gentleman would agree with me on that. I have felt very strongly about it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think I agree.

Mr. GIFFORD. They do not wait for the aggrieved party; they want more power. Have the committee voted that reduction?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, yes. It was quite unanimous on that $750,000. Now, let me say a word about the Civil Service Commission. A bit of history might be appropriate. You may be interested in knowing that in 1789 we had 300 employees in the Federal Government. The State Department had 4; the Treasury Department had 315; the War Department, 23; the Post Office Department, 3.

By 1816—which was 27 years later—it had risen to 6,327. When Abraham Lincoln took this country into the Civil War, or, rather, when Congress took it into the Civil War, in 1861, we had 49,200 people on the pay roll. In 1881 it had risen to 107,000. What will it be as of July 1, 1943, projected? Mr. Flemming, of the Civil Service Commission, tells us——

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. Of those 1,800 the gentleman spoke of, how many were Republicans?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to my amiable friend from Kentucky that I do not know; but if I were selfish, I would certainly wish all were. I know from the direction the Government is taking that only a few could be Republicans, because we know Republicans could do an infinitely better administration job; but here is the figure: July 1, 1943, immediately ahead, 2,972,000. They are going to ask for 600,000 new positions in the fiscal year 1944. Think of it. Six hundred thousand new hopeful citizens, young and old, who will be recruited from the highways and byways of the country, to come in and find a job with Uncle Sam.

But that is not the whole story. In addition to the new positions there will be 840,000 turn-overs—people who left because they can make more money elsewhere, who retire or resign, who die, or who migrate. And so they must go out now and find 840,000 to take care of the turn-over in a single fiscal year. Thus there will be 1,540,000 new faces show up on the Federal pay roll in the next 365 days, beginning July 1, 1943.

We have 1,594 agencies scattered all over the country that have more than 100 people in their employ. From this you get some idea of the magnitude of this thing. There will be more people on the pay roll than the population of the city of Chicago, the second largest city in the land. It is an amazing thing. I do not know where it is going to stop. As a matter of fact Mr. Flemming said to us he expected it might be 3,500,000 in view of what has been happening in the last few months. Think of the size of these agencies. For instance there is the War Production Board with 20,343 employees. Mr. Nelson ought to be able to do a good job I think with those, and he ought to have had this rubber problem solved a long time ago, with enough people to make up two infantry regiments. Then there is the O. P. A. with 37,817. They have more than 4,800 in Washington, and are moving it up to higher personnel levels. The Veterans' Administration has over 44,000, the Agriculture Department 75,613, and that does not count the field committeemen.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nor the county agents.

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. Then the Federal Security has 65,349. I thought you would be interested in the figures. They need no interpretation on my part. You do not have to dramatize those figures. They speak for themselves. I thought you might be interested in the ultimate personnel objective which the Civil Service Commission contemplates and with which it is charged to recruit and employ at a cost, I think, of $4.99 a head. How are we going to meet it? So long as these people go on, there will be new functions, a digging in of a bureaucracy to find new work, and a constant growth in Government personnel. It is only fair to say, however, that this is not the fault of the Commission, nor should we penalize the Civil Service Commission. We give them a job to do and say, you do this job, and then we take away $1,600,000. But I did not want to do it at first, but we have to do it, we have to stop these functions and streamline this Government, otherwise the Civil Service Commission will go for larger and larger amounts. Of course, they will be without blame, because we are putting a job in their laps which springs from the demands by other Federal agencies. The remedy lies in a thorough investigation of the operations of Government to prevent overstaffing and incompetency, the elimination of unnecessary activities and the development of efficient techniques in Government.

Mr. ARENDS. Could not Mr. McNutt use any of these fellows and give them a job in the Army or the Navy, those between 18 and 37?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know. I had hoped somewhere that they would solve this farm problem, but they have not done it, and may I allude to the fact that when we were charged with dereliction for having refused to give the Secretary of Agriculture those additional $125,000,000, I said to Mr. Wickard, "Have you solved the farm labor problem?" No. "Have you solved the manpower problem or the farm machinery problem?" No. Then I ask him whether he had effected an understanding with the Army, Navy, and War Manpower Commission. No. Then, "Have you made formal representations to the Army and the Navy to see about keeping some of these experienced young farmers on the farm?" And the answer was that he had not, and that no agreement had been reached. Mr. Chairman, I for one will not vote them any more money until I can see ahead and see some possibility that we are going to succeed in the program. The other thing is that it is something of a reflection upon our farmers. I do not believe you have to give a farmer an extra $15 per acre to produce soybeans, in order to get him to go out and work a couple of hours longer.

He is not that kind of an American. Out in our country those folks who beat the soil, who work early and late, are real patriots. I said to Mr. Wickard, "Have you canvassed opinion? Have you gone around and asked some of the farmers, just man to man or over the radio, 'Won't you please raise more soybeans, more sorghum, more flax, more peanuts, more vegetables, more sweetpotatoes, and more Irish potatoes?'" There is no indication that such representation was made to the farmers or that they were asked to come in as a patriotic effort to do it. That is the whole story.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I would like to ask my distinguished colleague from Illinois this question: Do you believe that the farmer, ought to be asked to go out and produce food for the civilians of this Nation and for our armed forces and for our allies, at a loss?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, definitely not.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Then you do agree that we must do something to get the farmer adequate pay for the materials we are asking him to go out and slave for, 10 or 12 or 14 hours a day, if necessary?

Mr. DIRKSEN. All you have to do is to get him some help and get him some machinery. You have got machinery down to the point where 30 percent as much machinery will be manufactured this year as in the base year of 1940. What is he going to do when his binder rusts out? What is he going to do when he cannot get a corn picker? How is he going to milk a lot of cows when he has no milker? He has to be mechanized, and they have not solved it. Give the farmer a fair price for his products and permit him to obtain labor, machinery, seed, tires, and such equipment as is necessary to produce and market and he will do the rest.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. In the Tenth District of Missouri a million bushels of soya beans are rotting in the fields because we cannot get combines allocated to the farmers to harvest those soya beans.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Surely. We raised 51 percent of the soya-bean crop in the State of Illinois last year and 15 percent of last year's beans are still in the field.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KLEBERG. A short time ago you mentioned 37,000 people employed by the Office of Price Administration. I am wondering if the farmers might not be helped a little by having somebody in the O. P. A. who knew something about what it cost to produce a given commodity on the farm, in the fixing of prices. It is not a proposition of giving hand-outs. It is a question of letting the farmer attend to his own business and get a reasonable price for his produce.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely so.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the lady from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. What gets me is they are always arguing whether the farmer is an American or not. Take the industrialist, if you want more products they will pay a higher price. If they want the farmer to produce more they say that he ought to work because he is a good American. Do they not think that the farmer works with the profit motive?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, definitely.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. And is that not a part of Americanism?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely so. I do not like the idea that you have to go to a farmer and say, "Now, Mr. Jones, cannot you boost your soya beans 5 acres? If you do we will give you $15."

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. It is not quite that simple. The farmer will have more money. The farmer can go into town and say to the druggist who is a good, big husky fellow, "You come out and help me. You are a big, husky fellow." But he cannot do that if he does not have the money, can he?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, indeed.

Mr. Chairman, I doubt whether there is time to discuss fully one other matter that is important, and that is the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I think I shall forego it at this time and discuss it tomorrow at greater length.

However, I do want to give you the figures on the emergency funds that we have provided the President. From June 30, 1940, to October 6, 1942, we passed 13 separate acts in this Congress in which we carried emergency funds. Have you any adequate idea how much we gave him? Here is the figure: $631,533,000. It is a huge sum. It is the blank check provided to the President to be allocated and expended at his discretion. I can see good reason for some emergency funds, but it looks to me like many of those agencies who have gotten money out of the emergency fund could come up and lay their cards on the table before the Congress and justify their expenditures. Why should not the Office of Censorship come up here? Why should not the item for the alteration of the Public Health Bureau come up here? Why should not funds to transfer employees in the Treasury come here? Why should not the Board of Economic Warfare, that received $10,000,000 for confidential purposes, come up here? Can they not trust at least one committee of Congress? Can they not as much as trust one subcommittee with a dozen honorable House Members to examine into the purposes for which funds are requested? Yet here is $10,000,000 for confidential purposes for the Board of Economic Warfare out of the emergency fund. In addition, they got $216,000 for salaries and $337,000 for travel in foreign countries. It is all out of the Federal Treasury. Do you not think we ought to examine into those items and justify them?

Here is Mr. Rockefeller's office for the establishment of an insurance fund for the Inter-American Navigation Corporation requiring $1,000,000. Here is the Office of War Information, Mr. Davis' office, which for the establishment of the office, received $1,699,000. Perhaps if we had had a better look at it when it first started and let it be created a little more slowly and develop a little more slowly it would have been a better agency and more efficiently operated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired and the gentleman has consumed 1 hour.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding the rule, to extend my time for 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have been trying all afternoon to get 5 minutes and have been unable to do so. I will not object provided the gentleman's side will give me 5 minutes. I cannot get it on this side.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] has control of the time. I will be glad to speak to him rather confidentially.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is within the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard to the request for an extension of the rule.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I express my regret. Tomorrow, however, there will be a number of amendments as we read the bill; some will be extremely important, including an amendment to bring about the progressive liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to which I shall devote myself at considerable length. I am grateful for your gracious indulgence.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, if it were not for the fact that the gentleman from Virginia, the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, is ill and therefore cannot be here today I would not take the floor. Numerous Members on yesterday and today have spoken in criticism of specific matters in relation to the shipbuilding program and the activities of the Maritime Commission.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to enter into any controversy with those who have spoken or particularly to take issue with the sentiments they have expressed, although I do not agree with everything they have said here on the floor.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] referred to Liberty ships and criticized their speed. He did incidentally mention the fact that propulsion machinery was hard to get and I think he knows that is the solution. I think that is the reason we are building slow ships. He referred to the Higgins contract and criticized the action of the Commission in canceling the Higgins contract. A subcommittee of the Merchant Marine Committee investigated the matter most thoroughly and came to the conclusion by unanimous vote, as I recall it—if I am mistaken about that, anyway by a majority vote—that there was not enough steel to operate the plant Higgins was constructing at Government expense and at the same time supply the steel being used by shipyards already in existence. It would therefore have been foolish to have continued the expenditure of Government funds to complete that plant.

Mention has been made of the Waterman Steamship Corporation construction. Extensive hearings on the transactions involved in the Comptroller General's report have been held by the Merchant Marine Committee. Witnesses for the Waterman Steamship Corporation, representatives of the General Accounting Office, and the Chairman of the Maritime Commission were heard. The Merchant Marine Committee has not completed its examination of this record.

In the South Portland Shipbuilding case hearings were also conducted by the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Truman Committee of the Senate and reports issued by both committees. The Merchant Marine Committee, after an exhaustive investigation, recommended the cancelation of that contract. The Senate committee took a little different position about it. The Commission has so far declined to cancel the contract but has given the company 60 days, as I understand, in which to straighten out their situation, and they have put a new manager in there in the hope that that may be done.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Illinois was discussing these appropriations a while ago. During the course of his remarks he said he sought some remedy. It seems to me if they were concerned about the Maritime Commission they should have asked some members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to appear before the Appropriations Subcommittee and tell them what they had found and what could be done to bring about a solution.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman has made a strong suggestion. With reference to the question of acquiring ships under section 902 of the Merchant Marine Act:

The chairman of the Merchant Marine Committee has announced his intion of examining fully into the differences of opinion between the Comptroller Genera' and the War Shipping Administration as to the proper meaning and application of the requisition authority contained in section 902.

The decision rendered by the Comptroller General in November 1942 is not concerned with values payable for ships on which construction-differential subsidies have been paid. Such subsidized vessels have been acquired (for title or use) in accordance with the formula prescribed by section 802 of the 1936 act directing valuation upon the basis of the depreciation cost to the owner.

Within the last few months the Comptroller General has submitted to Congress three reports of alleged irregularities on the part of the Maritime Commission, and rendered a decision pertaining to the meaning and application of the requisition authority contained in the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, challenging the interpretation placed on the statute by the War Shipping Administration.

The controversy over the requisition authority, which is the basis of two of the Comptroller's reports, involves the interpretation of the so-called enhancement clause, which was intended to prevent a repetition of the Government's experience with fantastic ship prices in the First World War.

The question in this controversy is not the objective, but how to attain it.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives has conducted hearings on the transactions involved in the Comptroller's report on the Tampa Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. and the Waterman Steamship Corporation, and has asked the Maritime Commission for its comment on the more recent report pertaining to the purchase of a vessel from the United States Lines, Inc.

The chairman of the committee has expressed his intention to conduct full hearings on the controversy relating to the requisition authority. It is anticipated that these hearings will get under way as soon as Judge Bland is able to return to his office.

The facts with respect to all of the differences between the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration on the one hand, and the Comptroller General on the other, will therefore be fully developed by the House committee that is resonsible for merchant-marine legislation.

The House authorized that investigation, and I feel that in the interest of orderly procedure and getting all the facts, that it is wise for Members of the House not to form too certain opinions about the conduct of the Maritime Commission until these investigations have been completed and reports made to the House. I am not here to defend the Maritime Commission; I do not agree with everything they have done. I simply ask the membership of the House to withhold its judgment on these comments and criticisms that have been made here on the floor until the proper legislative committee which has been authorized by this House to do so can complete its investigation and make its report to this body, at which time there will be facts available upon which to form an intelligent opinion.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] said he had lost confidence in the Maritime Commission. I was sorry to hear him make that statement. I hold no brief for members of that Commission, but I may say in passing that Admiral Land had been retired from the Navy on good retirement pay but came back to one of the toughest jobs in this whole war set-up when he could have taken life easy without worrying about this situation.

The shipbuilding record made by the Maritime Commission in the past few months is without parallel in the history of the world. May I call your attention to the fact that in the last war, although we spent approximately $3,000,000,000 constructing ships, so far as I am informed not one single vessel ever sailed across the seas before the 11th day of November 1918? Many of them were unserviceable when they were finished after the war was over. Last year alone we built more ships under this program conducted by the Maritime Commission than any country ever built in a like period in the history of the world and while they are not as fast as we would like to have them, they are carrying the goods and the equipment to our boys in the far-flung battle lines throughout the world. The Maritime Commission on the whole has done a most excellent job under many difficulties.

When we started this program we had practically no shipyards in operation in this country. We had built practically no cargo vessels for many, many years, yet we turned out last year more than 700 ships with a total tonnage of over 8,000,000. Ships are being delivered today for cargo service at the average rate of 4 per day. So in spite of all the mistakes the Commission has made, in spite of the faults that have been developed in their program, I think it is fair to say that on the whole Admiral Land and his associates on the Commission have done one job in this war effort that has exceeded the expectations and hopes of everybody who knew anything about it when it was started. I hope therefore the Members will reserve judgment on those criticisms.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, for the past 60 days I have been at meetings of both the Office of Price Administration and the Agricultural Department having to do with meat, meat problems and food. Hourly, various members in those departments are figuring up new red-tape ideas to strangle more every day the production of the American farmer.

In my State of California I happen to represent the richest agricultural Congressional district in the United States and my people have come to the point that if the O. P. A. and the Agriculture Department cannot divorce themselves from the red tape that hourly, as I stated, is being placed upon the American farmers not only in my State but the rest of the States of the Union, we are going to awaken and not too far in the future find ourselves hungry people. The responsibility must be placed in the departments which are bringing that about. My people have not been able to have meat for as long as 3 or 4 weeks at a time and these people include those engaged in manufacturing ships as well as airplanes and other things. Our farmers have bee: unable to secure meat, eggs, and butter in some localities, yet the Farm Security Administration in California has come out with new rules and regulations governing the feeding of Mexican nationals that will be brought into the State of California to work.

In this program they are asking that the Mexicans be fed meat 6 days out of every week when the farmers in my State and men working in the shipbuilding yards and airplane manufacturing plants have not had a speck of meat on their own table for as long as 3 or 4 weeks. Yet the departments down here have not worked anything out to correct the meat situation. They have refused a committee, of which I have been serving as chairman, representing the entire California delegation, any kind of a solution. Now they come out with this sort of a program:

STANDARDIZATION FOR MEXICAN EXTRA GANG LABORERS

Butter is to be served at each meal.

Bacon squares or meat in some form for breakfast six times per week and ham one time per week.

Eggs should be served every morning, and no limit placed on the number consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 2 additional minutes. The gentleman is reading a statement from the Farm Security Administration of California?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes. It is a menu sent to me which the Farm Security Administration is requiring the agricultural employers in California to use in feeding the Mexican nationals brought in as agricultural workers.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In which they are imposing conditions on the California farmers that they have got to feed the Mexicans according to the menu which the gentleman is reading, is that correct?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Go on, read some more of it. It sounds pretty good.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Thanks. I want to read it.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to hear it read. It is fine that the Mexicans may get it even if we cannot get it.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Chairman, here are some more provisions:

Milk should be diluted with one part water and placed on the table for all meals.

Beef should be No. 1 grade cow. If quarters are used, shanks and plates should be taken off. Smaller cuts of beef should be consisted of rounds and chucks, preferably boned round and chucks.

Pork should be served about once every week or 10 days.

No veal is to be served.

Mr. Chairman, the farmer is glad to eat veal if he can get the veal, but he cannot get but very little veal under the program at the present time.

I read on:

Other kinds of meat should consist of bologna, tripe, beef hearts, pig's feet, beef or hog liver, frankfurters, hamburger.

Mr. BENDER. Is that agency going to serve the American tripe and boloney?

Mr. ELLIOTT. How many of you know what tripe is? Does the gentleman know?

That is what they are asking the farmers to serve the Mexicans. It is good meat.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Did the gentleman overlook the idea of giving them butter every day?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No; I did not overlook it. I read about butter.

Here is the rest of the program:

GENERAL POINTS CONCERNING MEXICAN EXTRA GANGS

(a) Seasoning of food: It is recommended that you find out how the Mexicans prefer to have their food prepared and seasoned. If consistent, have your cooks prepare it in the manner most palatable to same.

(b) Quality and amount: These laborers should receive good wholesome food and plenty of it.

(c) Elimination of fancy types of dishes: The fancy, expensive dishes should be eliminated since the Mexican laborers do not particularly enjoy them.

SUGGESTED MENUS FOR LOW BOARD RATES

Breakfasts

Oatmeal, bacon squares, fried pinto beans, fried potatoes, syrup, hot biscuits, coffee, eggs.

Oatmeal, bacon squares, hot cakes, syrup, hashed brown potatoes, hot biscuits, coffee, eggs.

Oatmeal, beef hash and potatoes, syrup, hot biscuits, coffee, eggs.

Dinners

Roast beef, pinto beans, Spanish macaroni, stewed fruit, hot corn bread, tea or coffee, potatoes.

Tripe, pinto beans, Spanish rice, pudding, hot corn bread, tea or coffee, potatoes.

Spanish hearts, pinto beans, spaghetti, boiled rice, potatoes, stewed fruit, tea or coffee.

Suppers

Beef hash, pinto beans, macaroni, cake or stewed fruit, white bread, corn bread, potatoes, tea or coffee.

Irish stew, pinto beans, rice or spaghetti, stewed fruit or pudding, white bread, corn bread, potatoes, tea or coffee.

Chili con carne, pinto beans, spaghetti, rice pudding, potatoes, white bread, corn bread, tea or coffee.

NOTES ON THE MENUS

Serve cooked cereals only, not corn flakes.

Always give sweetpotatoes at dinner and supper when they are reasonable since the Mexicans like them.

The type of pudding should be cornstarch, bread, or rice.

Potatoes should be served at dinner and supper.

Usually try to have only corn bread at dinner; biscuits and white bread at supper. Sometimes white bread is required at dipner and supper as well.

In the winter specialize in hot cakes.

In the summer, iced tea or root beer should be served.

Use plenty of seasoning in preparing the food.

Inexpensive fresh vegetables can also be worked into the above menus. A proper amount of fresh vegetables should be used in all camps to insure variety and the resultant saving over the use of canned vegetables. This economy and increased satisfaction holds true if there is no waste from a surplus of same.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Does that specify whether the beef should come from the male or female steer?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Take a glance at the menu for breakfast, dinner, and supper and tell me where meals of this quantity and quality can be found in the homes of our farmers who are producing the food for the war effort. When American farmers are themselves working 15 to 18 hours per day with shortages of all kinds of food and earning much less than 30 cents per hour, an agency of the United States Government has the audacity to attempt to establish minimum wages, hours of work, and collective bargaining principles upon the American farmer contrary to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the National Labor Relations Act, and is requiring them to be fed in a style which is impossible for the farmer himself under the food regulations laid down by the Department of Agriculture.

Add to this the fact that when they request the right to purchase more meat to feed these Mexican workers the Department tells us nothing can be done about it, and the farmers are having to use food with which they would normally feed their families to feed the Mexicans in a style in which the American himself cannot live. It certainly must be far above that to which the Mexicans have been accustomed in their own country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, is agriculture a war industry? The answer to this seems to depend upon whether one refers to talk or action. If we go by talk, the farmer is a very important man in this country, and the American farm is a great defense plant.

Last November Secretary Wickard expressed this idea when he said:

We know that food is as essential to the winning of victory as tanks and planes and guns. We also know that with the victory won, food will be essential in the building of peace.

On January 12 farmers were asked to attend county mobilization meetings to discuss food goals for 1943. In connection with this mobilization there was a Nation-wide radio broadcast at which Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes read a message from the President and speeches were made by the Secretary of Agriculture; Lord Woolton, British Food Minister; Maxim Litvinov, Russian Ambassador to the United States; Admiral William Brent Young, Chief of the Navy's Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; and others. The President, in his message, said:

Food is a weapon in total war—fully as important in its way as guns or planes or tanks.

He further said:

We are using food to earn the friendship of people in liberated areas and to serve as a promise and an encouragement to people who are not yet free.

Lord Woolton said, among other things, that Britain is depending upon the farmers of this country "not to fail, so that we can go on fighting and producing planes and tanks and ships as we have for the past 3 years."

Ambassador Litvinov said that food for the Soviet Armies was helping to "reinforce the common front" and that American contributions—have played no small part in making it possible for the Soviet troops, with that courage, determination, and spirit of self-sacrifice which characterize them, to deal mighty blows at the Fascist troops when they were attacking, and now to go over to the attack themselves, to destroy Nazis by the hundred thousands and drive them back.

Admiral Young said:

It may seem far from a farm to a beachhead in the Solomons, but actually a direct life line reaches from every farm in America to every American battle zone in the world.

Sentiments similar to the above from men of prominence in official, military, and business life could be quoted by the page. The question is, Does this oratory mean anything when it comes to giving the farmer the labor, machinery, and equipment with which to work? If agriculture is a war industry, then it should be treated like one. We do not draft men out of munitions plants or airplane factories unless there are trained replacements to take their places. Yet, in the past 2 years governmental policies have resulted in 3,000,000 men going from the farms to industrial plants or to the Army without any trained replacements to take their places. In most cases it is not even possible to train people to take the places of those who have left. In the main, farmers are expected to fill the ranks of those who have gone with people who cannot secure employment elsewhere. Women and children, Mexican labor and the lame, the halt, and the blind are expected to take the places of the skilled workers who have left the farm.

The direct responsibility of the Federal Government for this critical situation cannot be denied. Selective Service has taken hundreds of thousands into the Army. Others have volunteered, knowing that as far as the Federal Government was concerned, agriculture was not considered an essential industry except for conversational purposes. Other hundreds of thousands have been lured away from the farm by the wage policies of this administration and a large number of them actually recruited from the farms by the United States Employment Service.

Even now, with the possibility of hunger staring us in the face within the next few months, men are being taken off our farms and into the armed service. The proportion has slowed down somewhat but it is still going on. All this in spite of legislation passed by Congress providing for the reclassification and deferment of every registrant found by a local board "to be necessary to and regularly engaged in an agricultural occupation or agricultural endeavor essential to the war effort."

Next to manpower, our greatest need for agricultural production is increased supplies of machinery. As manpower declines machinery becomes even more necessary. Yet, last October, the War Production Board issued an order covering the period from November 1, 1942, to October 31, 1943, limiting farm equipment production to 20 percent of the average for 1940–41, and the production of repair parts to 130 percent of the average for 1940–41. Later, the percentage going to repair parts was increased to 160 percent of the 1940–41 average and allowance for equipment production has been increased to what is said to be approximately 40 percent of 1940. In percentages, this means that considerably less than 1 percent of our total steel production for 1943 has been allocated for new farm machinery and equipment and repair parts. Furthermore, a part of this goes for exports. All of this while agriculture is being proclaimed as a great war industry—a great war industry and yet receiving only a small proportion of the equipment and machinery which it actually used in 1940, when production was much less and labor was plentiful.

What about fertilizer? What about farm transportation? Are we handling those problems as if agriculture were a war industry? You know how gasoline rationing hit the farmer. Efforts are being made to undo the chaos created by the admitted incompetent rationing of gasoline to every farmer in this country from the office in Detroit, Mich. But how does the farmer know that next week or next month some equally ridiculous regulation will not be put into effect by some other of the numerous agencies attempting to regulate his affairs?

Farm operations must be planned months in advance. Farmers must know what they can depend upon in the way of labor, machinery, fertilizer, and fuel. What greater folly could there be than to plant crops with no assurance of labor or machinery to harvest them?

Is agriculture a war industry? Listen, war industries get priorities on material. They get machinery. They get labor. Every agency of the Government is directed to see that their requirements are met. Would we expect the Boeing Aircraft Co. to increase its production with fewer men, less machinery, and less material? When we expand the operations of an Army do we give it less material and fewer men? Yet, the administration is telling the farmers of this country today to produce more than they ever have before, lest the country go hungry, lest our armed forces lack vital supplies, lest we fail to meet our commitments to feed the hungry in occupied countries. Yes; to produce 25 percent more than they did in 1940 with 30 percent less labor, 60 percent less machinery, less fertilizer, less fuel, less of everything except hampering Government regulations and red tape.

Thank God, the farmer is no quitter. He is going ahead. He will perform miracles. Even miracles, however, will not enable him to produce what we must have if we are to avoid disaster on the food front. It isn't a farm question. It is a national question. It can be solved only by treating agriculture as a war industry. This means, among other things, a minimum program to embrace the following:

First. Stop the induction of farmers into the armed forces.

Second. Return to the farm large numbers of experienced farmers already inducted or enlisted.

Third. Allocate machinery and supplies adequate to do the job.

Fourth. A price level which will enable farmers to procure and retain help in competition with other industries.

Fifth. Assurance that in all things agriculture will have the status of other war industries.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

THE FOOD PROBLEM

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the necessity of producing more food to win the war is becoming more apparent each day. The following table from the January issue of the Agricultural Situation, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows the food and fiber goals of 1942, the production attainments of 1942, and the goals for 1943:

What does an analysis of this table show? You will note that in connection with many food products the acreage goals were not attained, but due to a most favorable season the production goals were obtained rather satisfactorily. For example, you will note the wheat acreage, the corn acreage, the peanut acreage, the dry-bean acreage, the potato acreage, the sweetpotato acreage, the hogs for slaughter, the lard goal, and the milk goals were not attained.

In 1943 we have the increased problems of food production. These not only include transportation, manpower, lack of high-protein feeds but many other factors. It is surely fair to ask if we should not face these production problems in the light of their importance. One fact is important. Our Federal political agriculturalists should devote every minute and every energy to the farm crops of 1943. They should not be found devoting too much time and energy to the vote crop of 1944.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] absolutely misrepresented Mr. Hoover's statement to the Senate committee when he said Mr. Hoover advocated a negotiated peace. On the contrary, Mr. Hoover published a book last June which has had an enormous circulation, and in the very introduction of which he states flatly that a lasting peace can be based only on a victory for the Allies. He states:

> There are certain fundamentals upon which peace must be based. First, that a satisfactory, endurable peace must be founded on victory. Many of its essentials would crumble with compromise.

The whole discussion of the book is based upon that thesis. Mr. Hoover has reiterated this statement many times since and as late as in an address on December 17 in Chicago.

Mr. Hoover's presentation before the Senate Committee was that we must maintain our food, mineral, and oil production if we are to win the war; that we are taking too many men from these industries and endangering these supplies; that the submarine has made a bottleneck on the transportation of troops which limits the number of men we can send abroad in 1943 and 1944; and that therefore we do not need to raise the full strength of the Army all at once. He did not question the ultimate need for the full military strength demanded by our military leaders. He was discussing the best possible use to be gotten out of our manpower to attain complete victory. He proposed that in view of the grave situation in these particular industries the Army does not need in 1943 to draft more men from them. His views have been adopted by General Hershey, who now says agriculture will be exempted.

When Mr. Hoover stated that time ran in our favor he was talking from the book. Every writer and everyone familiar with the degeneration in food and other supplies in Germany and Italy, together with the enormous losses of their troops, knows that they are getting weaker and weaker. In the meantime, we and the British are gaining in strength. His final conclusion was the absolute necessity to maintain food and mineral production, and that the bottleneck and the fact that Germany is getting weaker made it possible to assign more manpower to the home front and thereby make sure of ultimate victory.

The gentleman's remarks are an entire distortion of Mr. Hoover's statement.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand Form MR20 from the United States Department of Agriculture, November 1942. It is entitled "Application for Purchase Certificate for New Farm Machinery and Equipment," all to be filled in and to be presented to the county farm rationing committee. This application has on it 13 questions. I hope you will note carefully the thirteenth question, because I hope it is an ill omen for the gentleman or persons devising such a devilish contract.

There are 12 more questions which with 3 subdivisions makes a total of 25 questions the farmer must answer before he has his application filled out properly.

On the opposite side of the page you will find an agreement between the farmer purchasing the equipment and the county farm rationing committee. The one redeeming feature of this form is that they do use two sides of the paper, which shows some realization of a shortage in paper supply.

Not satisfied in having a very simple agreement for this farmer to sign, the farmer must take an oath that everything he said in filling out the questionnaire is nothing but the truth, the whole truth, so help him—the Federal bureaucrats in Washington notwithstanding.

Now after the farmer has affixed his signature to the contract, it says:

> Any person who makes a false statement or representation on this application is subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not more than 10 years or both, under the provisions of section 35–A of the United States Criminal Code 18–USC–80.

All of this is followed by a blank part II called Action by county farm rationing committees, and provides spaces for them to (a) approve; (b) disapprove; (c) approve in part; the serial number of the certificate; the county farm rationing committee name; and then the committee member approving it. Notice, it says "member" and not "members," so I assume the contract means that one member of the county committee is all that is necessary to approve the contract. Then the instructions for filling in the form follow, which, you see, is about one-half the back of the page.

There are 14 separate and distinct instructions, but we are not through after we have read the instructions. When the farmer appears at the business firm in the little town or village wherein he usually buys his equipment, he must walk up to the counter and sign the contract with the dealer selling him the farm equipment. I want you to listen carefully while I read this dangerously un-American contract:

> Every purchaser of a new piece of farm machinery must sign the following: I hereby agree—

Remember, this is the farmer talking—> in consideration of the transfer for value of said new farm machinery and equipment and for other good and valuable consideration, that all my right, title and interest in and to the afore-mentioned new farm machinery and equipment shall immediately vest in the United States upon the happening of the following conditions, namely:

> 1. (a) That there has been determination by the county farm rationing committee, in writing, that I am not complying with or conforming to or have failed to comply with or conform to the uses to which I stated in my application, that I would put said new farm machinery and equipment, or to the agreement which I signed in said application, or to any other statement set forth by me in said application.

Now, remember, that is the first and (a) under the first.

Here is (b) under the first:

> That there has been a determination by the county farm-rationing committee in writing that I made a false statement in preparing said application, or that I did not make in good faith any statement or agreement signed by me in said application.

No. 2:

> That there has been a determination by the State board in writing that such vesting is necessary to protect the best interest of the United States.

I hope you noted that this was the State board, so the farmer in truth is signing two contracts in one. The first part of the contract has to do with the county farm rationing committee, and this part has to do with the State board. He is hitched up, as the farmer would say, in double harness.

To finish:

The county farm rationing committee referred to in these agreements means the county farm rationing committee or the State board which issued this purchase certificate.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is the supreme effort in bureaucratic domination of any industry. This is State socialism, this is communism, this is everything that goes with a communistically and socialistically planned agriculture. Nothing is omitted, not even the title to the farm machinery.

Mr. Chairman, what does this mean? Have the leaders of this administration no confidence whatsoever in the honesty and integrity of the agricultural population of this great Nation? From the questions asked, the details required, and the penalty inflicted, there is but one conclusion that may be deduced from this type of questionnaire; and that is that these simple-minded souls, sounding off over the radio, in the press, and otherwise throughout our country, who would be our directors and leaders, have fully concluded in their own minds that our farm folks are not to be trusted and are held in no regard for the truth or the respecting of their signatures to notes, contracts, and public instruments.

Evidently, these leaders think the farmers are selfish, unneighborly, and unwilling to assist one another in this hour of need. Consequently, they presume to write an iron-bound contract to curb these treacherous creatures of the far-flung agricultural frontiers and to show them and direct them how to attend to the most intimate affairs of their own farm and their communities.

Mr. Chairman, listen closely while I quote:

That all right, title, and interest in and to the aforementioned new farm machinery and equipment shall immediately vest in the United States upon the determination in writing by the county rationing committee.

Mr. Chairman, who is this county rationing committee that can sit in judgment without a trial, without any evidence, without any jurors, and determine to move into a farmer's lot and hitch onto his new machinery and carry it away and turn it over to another farmer some 10, 15, 20 miles away, and after the farmer had paid his good money, traded in his old machinery? There he would be, with his crop half tended and partially cultivated, without equipment. Now I submit to you, that is no regulation; that is confiscation without due process of law.

But that is not all. Let us consider the content of subdivision No. 2. It states that the county rationing committee, by writing, may determine that a false statement has been made by the farmer as to the use he was going to put this machinery. Then they have the right to walk in and say to the farmer: "According to your statement you did not make this contract in good faith." Who are they to question a man's faith? Why, my friends, this whole great Nation of ours has been built on the faith that men have with one another. That is the base of all our business relations. I have faith that when I ship a consignment of goods to a dealer he will pay me; therefore, I ship the goods, not with the bill of lading attached but open shipment. Our firm, a hardware store in the city of Fort Collins, has been in continuous business since 1907, and I venture that more than 98 percent of all the goods that had ever been sent to that store had come in open shipment. Now we have come to a place in the life of our business and industrial relations when the faith of our people in the communities throughout our country are questioned by a group of dreamy-eyed, swivel-chair economists in Washington.

This, my friends, would be ludicrous if it were not so serious and bordered so close to tragedy. Consider the precarious position of a farmer who bought a piece of equipment to plant barley or oats and then found that the seed he intended to use was not obtainable or that the seed was not fertile and could not be planted. Ordinarily he would use this equipment not in early spring, but late in August to plant millet and other late types of crops so as to complete his regular farming operations.

Now, my friends, according to that clause I have just read you, that farmer would be subject to a $10,000 fine and 10 years in the penitentiary or both. Ridiculous, my friends, and impossible of execution.

Mr. Chairman, every farmer, every farm family who reads and understands the English language should refuse to be a party to any such vicious contract, regardless of the character of the county rationing committee, who should not consider enforcing the provisions contained in this scrap of paper.

I think the agricultural population of our country would be justified in tearing this sheet of paper to pieces, rolling it in a wad and stuffing it down the throats of these would-be economists who think they can force the agriculturalists of this country to become serfs and slaves directed by bureaucrats here in Washington.

Mr. Chairman, there are no more patriotic citizens in America than the farm population. In the last war they gave their sons, they gave of their time, they gave of their effort, they gave everything that this Government demanded of them fully and freely in the prosecution of World War No. 1. In World War No. 2 the farmers have proven conclusively their wholehearted love for their country by equaling and surpassing the record of World War No. 1.

Mr. Chairman, in this present crisis the farmers have given their sons, their daughters, the hired help, and now we have left to care for the farm only the old, the lame, the sick, and the afflicted. So dangerous has it become that some of our leaders tell us that we face a dangerous food shortage.

The farmers do not whimper, but quietly and determinedly go about their everlasting task to produce the milk, the meat, the vegetables, the fruit, the oils, the cotton, the wool, and the grain so necessary to save our Nation in its time of crisis. Yet these men in Federal agencies would tie them up to such contracts as only men would ask of a slave, a serf, or an irresponsible incompetent.

I am fully convinced that it is high time for the Congress to take some definite action to stop the issuance of such regulations by the various bureaucratic agencies of the Federal Government. Not a single man in this Congress believes that this contract is necessary or required in dealing with the farmers of America. If I did not have the actual evidence before me, I could not believe that such a schoolboyish, dictatorial method could emanate from the Department of Agriculture. How red must be the faces of the real men in that Department, whom I know and have worked with, and whom I realize have worked and slaved for the Department in season and out of season to bring about a better agricultural program for these United States.

I would like to have the history of this contract; indeed, I would like to know the very inside of the man who concocted this wild, wierd brain child, this un-American contract. Where did it spring from, or, should I say, where did it sprout? Regardless of the condition of his old machinery, no good and true American farmer should ever stoop so low as to sign such an unconscionable contract. No, my friends, he should let his ground stand idle and the city folk of this country do without food before he becomes a party to any such contract. No red-blooded county agricultural agent—no matter how steeped in New Deal regulations and red tape he may be—should think of asking his farm taxpayer, who provides his salary and his expense account, to sign such a Fascist article.

It would be an easy matter for the Committee on Agriculture, the Appropriations Committee, and the Department of Agriculture to meet and evolve an agricultural program the American way—our way, if you please, the patriotic way, the way civilized men should deal with one another—honorable and forthright.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I listened to the gentleman's reading of the contract. I just want to be sure that I heard aright. May I ask the gentleman if I am correct in my understanding that when the farmer signs this contract he agrees that a local agency, a county board, shall have the right to determine whether or not he has violated the provisions of the contract, that that board is to be the prosecutor, judge, and jury, and that if that board finds that he has violated the contract he must turn over the machinery he has purchased to the Federal Government without any compensation or any further determination of his rights in the matter?

Mr. HILL. That is exactly right, and, furthermore, that county board could order that piece of machinery taken 5, 10, or 15 miles away from the farmer that bought it, and as far as I am able to discover, not one word in this contract says anything about repaying the farmer for the machinery. With the permission of the House, I shall include the contract in my remarks. Another thing about the contract, on the opposite page there is a contract that the farmer makes with the dealer when he purchases the new equipment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. Is the gentleman putting the agreement and the contract which he read into the RECORD as a part of his remarks?

Mr. HILL. That is my intention.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to obtain that permission in the House. He may revise and extend his remarks made in Committee of the Whole.

APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE CERTIFICATE FOR NEW FARM MACHINERY AND EQUIPMENT

(This Information To Be Filled in by County Farm Rationing Committee)

Application No._____ Farm Serial No._____ Date received_____

PART I. INFORMATION TO BE SUPPLIED BY APPLICANT

A separate application must be filed for each type of farm machinery and equipment

1. Applicant's name_____
2. Applicant's address_____
(Street or R. F. D.) (City) (State) (Telephone)
3. Description of farm machinery and equipment for which this application is made_____
4. When is this farm machinery and equipment needed?_____
5. The farm on which this farm machinery and equipment will be used contains_____ acres, and is located in_____ Township_____ County.
6. Is this farm machinery and equipment to replace similar worn-out farm machinery and equipment?_____
   A. Can your old farm machinery and equipment be repaired?_____
   B. If repaired, to what extent will it meet your need?_____
   C. Will you turn in your worn-out farm machinery and equipment if you are allowed to purchase new farm machinery and equipment?_____ If not, explain_____
7. Could your need for this farm machinery and equipment be satisfied by—
   A. Purchasing or renting used farm machinery and equipment?_____
   B. Custom work by others?_____
   C. Exchange of work of farm machinery and equipment with others?_____
8. If you are allowed to purchase this farm machinery and equipment, would you be willing to—
   A. Rent it to others?_____ } If not, explain_____
   B. Do custom work?_____ }
   C. Do cooperative or exchange work?_____ }
9. If you are applying for farm machinery and equipment because you are changing from farm machinery and equipment suitable for horses or mules to mechanical power equipment, give complete reasons for change_____
10. If you are applying for farm machinery and equipment to replace hand labor, state why you wish to make the change and what efforts you have made to obtain hired labor_____
11. Give the number, size, and description of similar usable farm machinery and equipment which you now have_____
12. This farm machinery and equipment and that described in item 11, above, are to be used during the current crop year in connection with the following acreage of crops (or number of livestock or poultry, or quantity of meat, dairy, and poultry products).
   A. My own operation_____
   B. Custom work_____
   C. Cooperative work_____
13. Give any other reasons why you need this farm machinery and equipment_____

If this application is granted in whole or in part, I agree to turn in to the dealer from whom I purchase farm machinery and equipment pursuant to this application or to whomever the County Farm Rationing Committee may designate, for rebuilding or for the salvage of all usable parts, or for scrap, the farm machinery and equipment, if any, being replaced. I agree to carry out the foregoing unless I establish to the satisfaction of the County Farm Rationing Committee that some other disposition of my old farm machinery and equipment would better serve the national interest or that it is impossible so to dispose of my old farm machinery and equipment or parts.

I also agree to rent, or do custom work with, or let others use, such new farm machinery and equipment as I shall purchase, on such terms and conditions as the county farm rationing committee may deem necessary.

I also agree to use the new farm machinery and equipment purchased by me in accordance with the agreements and statements made in this application; and I further agree that, if the county farm rationing committee determines after a hearing that I have failed, without regard to the existence of fault on my part, to comply with or conform to said agreements and statements, or that I have made a false statement in preparing my application for new farm machinery and equipment, or that I have not made in good faith any statement or agreement signed by me in said application, (1) I will not object to the entry of a judgment ordering and directing me to comply with and conform to such agreements and statements, and (2) I will rent or sell the new farm machinery and equipment to such person or persons as the county farm rationing committee may designate, upon such terms and at such rental or sales price as I shall agree upon with the county farm rationing committee, or in case of disagreement, at such rental or sales price as may be agreed upon by a majority of arbiters, one to be appointed by me, one to be appointed by the county farm rationing committee, and one to be appointed by such arbiters. I agree to abide by the decision of the arbiter appointed by the county farm rationing committee if I fail to appoint an arbiter as agreed upon above.

The county farm rationing committee referred to in these agreements means the county farm rationing committee or the State board which issues a purchase certificate pursuant to this application.

---

I CERTIFY that the information furnished by me and included in this application is true and correct; that I have not submitted an application for this farm machinery and equipment with any other county farm rationing committee; and that I will not transfer the certificate of purchase if one is issued to me.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR FILLING IN FORM MR-20

GENERAL

A separate application must be made for each type of machinery and equipment. However, one application may cover a machine and the attachments that are generally sold with such a machine. One application may cover more than one machine of the same type.

If more space is needed, use an extra sheet of paper. Number the answers to correspond to the items on Form MR-20.

INFORMATION TO BE SUPPLIED BY APPLICANT

1. Applicant's name:
   (a) An individual shall state his name as he customarily signs business documents.
   (b) A partnership shall enter the name of the partnership.
   (c) A corporation shall enter the name of the corporation.
   (d) A State or political subdivision thereof shall state its name: For example, South Dakota Rural Credit Board, Missouri State College, etc.
   (e) A fiduciary should state his own name, his official capacity, and the name of the principal.
2. Applicant's address.—Enter the local address of the applicant. If the applicant has his home address outside the county and this application is made by a local representative of the applicant, enter the address of the local representative.
3. Description of machinery and equipment.—Give a full and complete description of the machinery and equipment for which this application is made. This description should indicate the type of machinery and equipment, the size or capacity, and all other essential details necessary to identify the machinery and equipment.
4. In answering question 4, enter the date that the applicant expects to start using this machinery and equipment.
5. Give the total acres in the farm, the township, beat, ward, or other local designation, and the county in which the farm is located. If the machinery and equipment is to be used on more than one farm, write the information for the other farms on the margin or on a separate sheet of paper.
6. In answering question 6A, answer "Yes" if it is possible to repair the old equipment so that it can continue to be in service. Answer "Yes" even though the cost of the repairs would ordinarily be considered uneconomical. The answer to 6B may be given in percent, such as 25, or 75 percent. If the answer to 6C is "No," state the reason.
7. The answers to parts A, B, and C may be either "Yes" or "No." You may write an explanation of the answer, if you so desire.
8. The answers to parts A, B, and C may be either "Yes" or "No"; however, you may give details on a separate sheet of paper, if space provided for explanation is insufficient.
9. State complete reasons for changing from horse or mule power to motor power.
10. Explain your reasons.
11. In answering question 11, indicate the number of machines you now have which are similar to the one that you are applying for. For example, if you need a grain drill, give the number and size of the grain drills that you now own. If the new machine is a combine, give the number and size of combines, grain binders, headers, and reapers that you now own.
12. In reply to question 12, give the total amount of work which the new machine and others like it which you now have will be expected to do. If the new machine is a grain drill, indicate the total acres to be planted by all grain drills which you own, including the one to be purchased. If the new machine is a combine, include the acres of grain to be harvested by binders, headers, reapers, and combines, including the new combine to be purchased.
13. The applicant may add any other information not included in items 1 through 12.
14. The applicant shall affix his signature in accordance with the method provided in ACP-16.

Every purchaser of a new piece of farm machinery must sign the following:

"I hereby agree, in consideration of the transfer for value of said new farm machinery and equipment, and for other good and valuable consideration, that all my right, title, and interest in and to the aforementioned new farm machinery and equipment shall immediately vest in the United States upon the happening of the following conditions, namely:

"(i) (A) That there has been determination by the county farm rationing committee in writing that I am not complying with or conforming to, or have failed to comply with or conform to, the uses to which I stated in my application that I would put said new farm machinery and equipment, or to the agreement which I signed in said application, or to any other statements set forth by me in said application; or

"(B) That there has been a determination by the county farm rationing committee in writing that I made a false statement in preparing said application, or that I did not make in good faith any statement or agreement signed by me in said application; and

"(ii) That there has been a determination by the State board in writing that such vesting is necessary to protect the best interests of the United States."

The county farm rationing committee referred to in these agreements means the county farm rationing committee or the State board which issued this purchase certificate.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct your attention to a recent order of the Office of War Information. It requires that other departments and agencies will be expected to channel their interviews, their news and information through the O. W. I. before it is given to the press and the public. I call specific attention to a direction made to Mr. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, a few days ago. Mr. Wickard was informed that statements made by him concerning the problem of food production should first be passed upon by this Executive agency, before the people could have it. If the O. W. I. thinks it is all right, then it may be published. The O. W. I., however, can work it over or prevent its release.

We all understand that information of value to the Axis Powers must not be given publicity. No one disputes that at all. But, Mr. Chairman, when it is required by this executive agency that practically all information and statements from the other agencies must pass through and be edited by an agency, created by Executive authority, the matter bears pretty careful scrutiny. The Secretary of Agriculture, as well as other department heads, are not going to disclose information helpful to the enemy. If we cannot trust our own officials in high places in this respect, then whom can we trust, I ask you?

Mr. Chairman, I do not challenge the good intention of the Office of War Information. Our Government must be careful in the dissemination of information that may be of use to the Axis Powers. But, Mr. Chairman, after all we live in a democracy. The American people are entitled to have all the news and information whether it is good news or not. All they want is the uncolored, untarnished facts. Americans are not children and do not want to be treated as such. Under other forms of government the situation might be different—but not here.

Mr. Chairman, the Office of War Information is a powerful agency. It employs approximately 3,000 full-time, and almost that many part-time employees. It takes millions of dollars to support it.

In this great democracy, where we have always stood for free speech, and for freedom of the press—let us make sure in these critical times that those rights are most carefully guarded and preserved. Of course the American will accept censorship, along with other restrictions—but they do expect and demand that their Government and its Representatives protect the right of free press, and that they have the untarnished news and information concerning the affairs of their country and their Government, with one reservation only that such information shall in no way impede or interfere with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in hearing about the kind of food being furnished the Mexican laborers in California, consisting of tripe, frankfurters, and bologna. Some Member asked what bologna and tripe were. I hold in my hand a magazine I consider to be both tripe and baloney. It is entitled "The Negroes and the War." To the new Members in the House who did not know the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] it is their loss, as well as that of the House that he is no longer here, because if any useless expenditure of this sort came up he arose on his hind feet in the Well of the House and asked the question "Where are you going to get the money?" That is what I would like to know. Where are we going to get the money to send out this inane political propaganda volume of 36 pages, and only the last 6 pages have anything to do with the Negroes and the war, which is the title of this New Deal publicity?

I ask again, Where are you going to get the money? Of course, the answer is that you will get it from the Congress and from the taxpayers, but the taxpayers do not know that the money goes for this kind of needless and stupid propaganda. They are being squeezed dry, and their taxes are being used to send out this type of bureaucratic New Deal propaganda, in the midst of the greatest war in our history. Do not these New Deal bureaucrats know that a war is going on instead of playing politics as usual? Certainly it is not in the interest of the Negroes and the war, because in the first paragraph it contains a gratuitous insult to all Negroes, which reads in this way:

> Some Negro Americans say that it makes no difference who wins the war; they say things could not be any worse under Hitler.

That is a dastardly reflection and a slander and a libel upon 13,000,000 American Negroes. It is malicious to start this political propaganda off with a sentence of that kind, questioning the patriotism, the loyalty, and the Americanism of the Negro.

I think the Committee on Appropriations ought to look into it and find out who wrote it, and who is responsible for it, and how many are being mailed out. I have no knowledge myself whether they are sending out a million copies or a hundred thousand copies. I know it is being mailed, broadcast extensively, to Negroes around Washington and in the State of Virginia. Of course, I admit I could not object to that portion of the propaganda which refers to the regiment in which I happened to serve in the last war, along with the gentleman from Connecticut, Representative RANULF COMPTON, who represents the New Haven district. It has this to say about that particular regiment:

Among the regiments famous for gallantry in combat were the Eighth Illinois, which became the Three Hundred and Seventieth Infantry and fought as part of the French Blue Devil Division, and the Fifteenth New York, which became the Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth Infantry, and fought as part of the French Red End Division.

The Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth was the New York regiment to which I refer, in which the gentleman from Connecticut, Major COMPTON, and I served.

The record of the Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth itself is one to inspire all Americans. It was under fire 191 days in France, suffered casualties in killed and wounded of 1,500 men, never lost a prisoner, never lost a foot of ground in defensive operations, and took every objective except one in offense operations. At that time there was a lack of artillery support. Some record. Some regiment.

I do not mind having the record of that regiment boosted, as it deserves it, but as long as it refers to a colored regiment in the last war, I would like to raise this issue. Does the War Department propose to use any colored combat troops in this war? Are there any colored infantry regiments either in Africa or in the far Pacific at the present time? In the last war after we had been in the war 1 year the regiment about which I just read, the Three Hundred Sixty-ninth, or the Fifteenth New York, was in front-line trenches and had suffered casualties. We declared war 14 months ago, and as far as I know not a single colored infantry regiment is in a combat zone, in Africa or the far Pacific. Nor do I believe there is a colored artillery regiment in any war zone today except antiaircraft. What I want to know is what does the War Department propose to do? What is its policy? Are colored soldiers to be kept out of combat zones? Do we propose to draw any color line among the soldiers wearing the uniforms of our country? I have written a letter to Mr. Truman Gibson, who is in charge of the colored troops under the Assistant Secretary of War. I wrote it on February 13 and I thought this would be a good time to put it into the RECORD and wait for an answer, when I will discuss the matter further. I offered the amendment which was adopted in the Selective Service Act to permit colored selectees to serve in all branches of our Army. I am interested in finding out if the purpose of this amendment is being carried out.

The letter is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1943.

TRUMAN GIBSON, Esq.,
Department of War,
Pentagon Building, Arlington, Va.

DEAR MR. GIBSON: In accordance with our conversation over the telephone today, I am writing to ask if you will kindly furnish me with the following information:

(a) How many colored troops are there now in the Army of the United States;

(b) How many colored troops are now in Africa and in the far Pacific;

(c) If there are now any Infantry, Artillery, or Air units either in Africa or in the far Pacific; and

(d) Has a policy been determined by the War Department as to the use of colored infantry and artillery and armored units and air forces in fighting missions on the same basis as the use of white combat troops as they were in the last war?

I would like also to know the number of colored citizens in our combat units, such as Infantry, Artillery, and Air—omitting the Engineers.

Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH.

Mr. Chairman, that raises the whole question, and 13,000,000 colored people are entitled to know the answer. They are entitled to know all the facts, and so are all other Americans, whether we propose to discriminate against those colored troops or whether we are going to use them in battle.

As one who served with them and saw them sacrifice their lives just the same as any other Americans, I would deplore it if it is the intention of the War Department in any way to keep colored combat troops out of battle zones and war missions. I mean using colored Infantry, Artillery, tanks, and air squadrons in combat areas, taking the same risk and making the same sacrifices as any other outfits. I do not believe that this is the intent of the War Department, but I am told that up to the present time, after 14 months, no Infantry, no Artillery, no tank units, and no air outfits composed of colored soldiers are in the war zones outside of some antiaircraft artillery on islands far from the actual fighting.

Mr. Chairman, I will take care of the latter proposition that I have been speaking about, but I cannot do anything about preventing the circulation of this kind of costly and useless propaganda. I believe it is the duty of the Congress to protect the American people, the taxpayers, when we are asking them for every dollar we can get, and to safeguard our paper supply when there is already a shortage for the legitimate use of established American newspapers. The only committee that can stop it is the Committee on Appropriations. Probably we cannot do it on this bill, but certainly the Committee on Appropriations now has the power, vested in them by the Congress, to call those who are responsible in the Office of War Information to appear before them and give them the reasons why this type of fourth-term propaganda is being sent out and why our people's money is being spent, in the midst of war, for the distribution of this type of New Deal propaganda.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Clerk may read.

The Clerk read down to and including line 5, page 2.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1762, the independent offices appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business in order on Calendar Wednesday, tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to make the announcement that Mme. Chiang Kai-Shek will be in the Senate Chamber on Thursday at 12:15 o'clock, and in the House Chamber between 12:30 and 12:45 o'clock.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and to include some excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] that he may extend his own remarks and include therein an editorial from the Milwaukee Sentinel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by including therein a speech delivered by the minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] at Columbus, Ohio, on Lincoln's Birthday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES] may include several letters in the remarks he made this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on two different subjects.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] may extend his own remarks and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks twice in the RECORD and include some extraneous matter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in Committee of the Whole this afternoon and to include therein certain data.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made this afternoon and include a table from the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURGIN (at the request of Mr. BULWINKLE), for 7 days, on account of a death in his family.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] is recognized.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, instances are multiplying in which the executive and administrative departments and bureaus are either usurping the functions and prerogatives of the Congress or are issuing regulations having the force and effect of law in defiance of the expressed will of the Congress.

At a time when our chief concern is the winning of the war, these instances of bureaucratic usurpation of congressional functions and defiance of congressional authority render a great disservice to the Nation and cause the people to be gravely uneasy. However well intended these acts may be, I think there is no question but that they will seriously and adversely affect the morale of the Nation and in that way may well contribute to delaying the winning of the war.

One instance which has attracted less attention than some others, because it is much more subtle and less dramatic, is to be found in the new proxy rules promulgated by the Securities and Exchange Commission on December 18, 1942. These new proxy rules were issued purportedly pursuant to authority granted by section 14 (A) of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934. It has been represented by those instrumental in devising and promulgating these new regulations that they would eliminate many of the objectionable features of the rules issued in August of last year. A careful analysis of the new requirements governing solicitation of proxies clearly indicate, however, that there are several burdensome and onerous stipulations contained in these regulations—stipulations requiring additional labor on the part of hard-pressed corporate organizations which are trying to devote their full energies to winning the war, and involving such waste of manpower, such additional activity, as to amount to a delay in the prosecution of the war effort.

Mr. Speaker, I would be the last person in this House to try to detract from the praiseworthy work of the Securities and Exchange Commission. I do not even challenge their aims. My observations are prompted by the fact that the new proxy rules do not accomplish their intended purpose but will tend to confuse the stockholders, rather than to clarify their knowledge of corporate affairs. At the same time, they impose a serious and objectionable burden upon industrial management, which is working top speed 7 days and several nights a week, trying to meet the military demands on the industrial production front. Anything which interferes needlessly with our industrial production on the home front can be as serious as something which would interfere with military strategy or operation on the battle fronts. This modern and awful war in which we are involved is in reality two wars. It is conflict of arms on the fighting lines, and a struggle behind the lines on the home production front to provide continuous quantities of machines, munitions, and supplies of war to our fighting forces and those of our allies. At the same time we have taken on an enormous task of helping to feed other peoples of the world.

I have not the time to go into the details of these new regulations issued by the Securities and Exchange Commission. I am informed that they were devised and worked out by legal counsel of the Commission under direction of a Mr. Milton V. Freeman. I have not talked with Mr. Freeman or with any member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, therefore, I am assuming—and I think properly so—that no doubt Mr. Freeman's intentions and those of the Commission are wholly praiseworthy, but I believe their efforts are misdirected.

[Here an interruption by Mr. MASON, of Illinois, member of the Dies committee, to advise Mr. BOREN as to information the Dies committee has regarding Mr. Freeman.]

I am informed by those who have studied these regulations very carefully that it appears the Commission has considerably exceeded the scope of authority intended to be granted to it by the Congress in the act. Such power may be included in the act, but I am sure Congress did not intend to delegate such authority.

I am also informed that the objectives sought by the Commission might better be attained by the Congress with due deliberation rather than by an emergency ruling by the Commission at a time when such additional obligations and duties on corporations can serve only to impede the war effort. The war effort would be definitely impeded because of the very complicated procedures set up by the Securities and Exchange Commission for carrying out these new regulations. I am sure that could not have been the intention of the Commission. Neither do I believe it was their intention to exceed the bounds of their authority as outlined by the Congress in the Securities and Exchange Act.

In order that my colleagues may get a little better picture of this situation, I would like to discuss some aspects of these new proxy rules and attempt in my humble way to estimate their probable effects.

As I understand these new regulations, they would require the inclusion in the proxy statement of any corporation any proposal submitted by any security owner for action at the stockholders' meeting. Furthermore, under the Commission's new ruling, it would be mandatory upon the corporation to include a 100-word statement prepared by anyone submitting a proposal explaining that proposal.

This ruling has attracted little public attention because so few people except those immediately concerned are familiar with the amount of work involved in getting out proxy statements. Those familiar with corporate affairs readily recognize, of course, the very burdensome aspect of such a requirement. Any stockholder taking what might be termed a distinct position may demand space for a resolution of any length, in addition to his statement of 100 words. We can see, of course, particularly in view of the valuable information the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has contributed that this might be used as a device by professional trouble makers to indulge their pet schemes or philosophy of life, using "whereas clauses" to expound their personal views and requiring industrial management to present their position on any subject.

Obviously such a situation would be welcomed and could be utilized as "a soapbox" by many disgruntled individuals who might seek notoriety, or who might be hostile to our American free enterprise system. This situation could be exploited as an outlet by impractical stockholders for visionary ideas. As a matter of fact, strange as this may seem, these rules actually could be utilized for the purpose of overburdening management if someone desired to do that.

It is startling when we stop to realize there is no limit fixed on the number of statements any one stockholder may submit for inclusion in a proxy statement. Nor is any means provided for excluding statements which might be misleading, untrue, scurrilous, libelous, or abusive. This latter oversight is in itself a most serious one. It runs directly counter to one of the original and fundamental purposes of the Securities Exchange Act, namely, the prohibition of misleading or untrue statements to security holders.

Not only would this aim of the Commission be defeated if irresponsible stockholders were allowed to express themselves promiscuously through the proxy statement, but there are no rules which would subject the individual making an untrue or libelous statement to the penalties of the act. On the other hand, it would permit libel action to be brought against the management or corporation as the publisher of statements over which it had no control.

Certainly no corporation could object to printing the statement of a conscientious stockholder sincerely interested in improving the operation of his company. But I believe opportunity was provided for this in the previous regulations which were construed as requiring the inclusion of a proposal by a stockholder but not an additional 100-word statement.

There is a further objection to this new regulation, as well as to others, which necessitate inclusion in proxy statements of a greatly expanded amount of material. This objection is based on the valid grounds, it seems to me, that the resultant statement would be a lengthy, confusing, and bulky document taxing both the patience and comprehension of the stockholders, and imposing an unreasonable burden on the management personnel of industry.

I think we will all agree that such a consequence would be unfortunate. It certainly would be contrary to the Commission's avowed intention of simplifying the procedure so the stockholders would have a complete, but concise account of operations; informing them, but not compelling them, to wade through a mass of detail, a dismaying amount of technicalities, or an avalanche of irrelevant issues.

Under these new rulings, corporations now attempting to draft proxy statements to comply with the Securities and Exchange Commission's order of December 18 estimate, I am informed, that their proxy statements will be at least three times as long as would have been required if the prior rules had continued in effect, and industrial managements find that the work and expense involved have been multiplied many times.

For instance, there is the requirement under the new rules that the corporation must describe, and I quote:

> Any interest, direct or indirect, of each person who has acted as a director of the issuer during the past year and each person nominated for election as a director and any associates of such director or nominee in any transaction during the past year or in any proposed transaction to which the issuer or any subsidiary was or is to be a part.

An important bearing on this is found in the greatly enlarged definition of the term "associate." I understand that this term is now interpreted as meaning any corporation of which a director is an officer, or any partnership in which he is a partner, or any trust in which he is interested. It would appear that as a result of this regulation it will be necessary for a corporation to include in its proxy statement a mass of information, and a voluminous review of transactions, which would be of no interest or aid to the stockholders.

It becomes perfectly clear, as one examines into the additional work imposed by these new rules, that the inclusion of all this material will impose an arduous task upon the corporation at a time when their experienced personnel has been depleted by military demands. Under our present conditions demands should give way to the supreme primary task of winning the war instead of further involving industry in red tape and the task of assembling additional needless reports. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, since the ultimate responsibility for such statements rests with the executive officers of the corporations, these new demands appear to constitute additional and unnecessary drains on the time and energy of the very key administrators of the Nation's war production program whose efforts are most vitally needed in that production program.

From the standpoint of the shareholder, thus confronted with a confusing and voluminous proxy statement, it would seem clear that the effect will be to increase his reluctance to try to digest such a mass of material. It will make more difficult the securing of quorums necessary to hold annual meetings of corporations to transact necessary business.

Further examination of these new regulations reveals that the annual report of the corporations must be included as a part of the proxy soliciting material.

The practical result of this maneuver on the part of the Securities and Exchange Commission is to make every director and officer responsible under the stringent criminal and injunctive provisions, and possibly under the civil provisions, of the Securities Exchange Act for every word contained in the annual report.

As we get further into the situation, we find there may very well be a double consequence. In the first place, in addition to unduly hastening the considerable amount of work necessary in preparing the annual report, and placing a severe burden on the accounting personnel, the regulation probably will reduce the annual reports to little more than financial statements, or transform them into legalistic documents which would be largely unintelligible to the average stockholder. Certainly this result would be regrettable in view of the recent attempt of corporations to make their annual reports more readable and more readily understandable.

These new regulations, it would appear, are bound to increase the difficulties now being experienced by corporations in obtaining competent directors. Potential nominees are hardly to be expected to serve with eager willingness when they are subjected to additional severe penalties and held responsible for statements not heretofore legally required as a part of the material included in the proxy solicitation.

Finally, and, in my opinion, possibly one of the most serious objections to these new regulations is the provision covering procedure for obtaining authority from shareholders for future issuance of stock or other securities in accordance with the laws of the State of incorporation.

In the past corporations obtained prior stockholder consent for such transactions in order that the sale of securities could take place promptly when the corporation needed funds without the delay involved in holding a stockholders' meeting. The detailed facts in respect to the transaction in which the securities would be issued cannot be known at the time the stockholder action is requested.

These revised Commission rules make the past procedure impossible. Now a stockholder's consent to an increase in authorized securities can be obtained only after furnishing the stockholders with the complete details of the transaction in which the securities will be issued. It seems improbable that the Commission would have taken such a step if it had fully realized the consequences. The only explanation I find is that the members of the Securities and Exchange Commission failed to anticipate the practical results of their regulation.

Such a requirement very seriously impedes prompt financing by corporations engaged in the war effort, and in many cases the need for funds might be imperative. The delays and difficulties involved in operating under this particular provision of the new rules certainly cannot be viewed as being consistent with the fundamental needs for Government and industry to expedite war production in every way possible.

Here again is an example of the Securities and Exchange Commission's tendency to exceed the power that Congress intended to grant. It would seem to me that the Congress might well undertake to clarify all the powers of the Securities and Exchange Commission and define the limits of its authority because the Commission's action governing future financing radically restricts corporations in a sphere of substantive law heretofore subject only to the jurisdiction of the States.

AMENDMENT OF RULES 10 AND 11 OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following report on the resolution (H. Res. 23) to amend rules 10 and 11 of the House of Representatives (Rept. No. 131), which was read and referred to the House Calendar, and ordered printed:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1943

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord God, in the citadel of our souls we would hear the quiet footfall of our Master as we tarry at the altar of prayer. As Thy holy nature is manifested in humanity, so may wisdom be justified of her children and the justice of Sinai be in our minds and the compassion of Calvary in our hearts. Such a state is kingly and glorifies the ways of truth and peace and fills the days with tender toil and patriotic ministry.

O God, we pray that this pauperized world may be an open book of Thy most gracious Providence, the King eternal leading on in the toilsome way until freedom wears a crown of glory the world over. We pray that an unconquerable faith may ever be our anchor and our strength; there is no other wealth nor power that will bring us to the summit of our aspirations. Oh, arm us all with conviction without bigotry, self-respect without vanity and with humility without cowardice. Heavenly Father, there is dire need everywhere; put the spirit of the Good Samaritan in all hearts that the poor may not suffer or become cynically destructive. We beseech Thee to break the chains which bind us to selfish things and give us helping hands that may lead the paths of pain to the overflowing cup of Thy merciful goodness. For the sake of our Saviour and in His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests: first, that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by Frederick E. Hasler, president of the Pan-American Society, at the thirty-first anniversary of the founding of the society, celebrated at a luncheon at the Bankers Club, February 15, 1943; and, second, a radio address delivered by Capt. William J. Pedrick, collector of internal revenue, second New York district, over station WOR, on Wednesday, February 3, 1943; and, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this is the first district in the country that has collected over $1,000,000,000 during the past calendar year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KENNEDY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUNDSTROM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a letter received by me from Gill Robb Wilson, State director of aviation for the State of New Jersey, in reference to a standing committee on aviation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUNDSTROM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I expect to make in the Committee of the Whole today and include some tables that I have had prepared on the power question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial published in El Mundo, leading daily newspaper of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1762, with Mr. ZIMMERMAN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Salaries and expenses: For all expenses necessary for the work of the Bureau of the Budget, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, contract stenographic reporting services, traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings when necessary in furthering the work of the Bureau of the Budget, lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals and newspapers, maintenance, repair, and operation of three passenger-carrying automobiles for official use, and not to exceed $25,000 for temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, $1,835,000.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: On page 3, after line 22, and after the word "amended", strike out "$1,835,000" and insert "$1,655,000."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to reduce the over-all request of the Bureau of the Budget by $180,000. This is, in my judgment, a conservative proposal, and I will tell you why.

From the record it appears that the Bureau of the Budget has been concerning itself not only with its normal activities but with other activities included among which are work on the problem of manpower, work on the development of a program for the Food Administration, work on a plan for handling insurance premiums for the Veterans' Administration and the War Department, work in the field of taxation, rationing, prices, wages, credit, subsidies and the like, work in the field of Federal-State fiscal relationships, and so on.

You will note that the Budget request is divided into three items. There is a request for national defense activities of $825,000. Every single dollar of that would remain available if my amendment is adopted. There is a request for $52,000 for printing and binding. Every cent of that would remain available if this amendment is adopted. There is a request for $1,835,000 for regular activities which compares with the current appropriation of $1,450,000, an increase of $385,000. My amendment would reduce this figure by $180,000 stopping at that point in order to allow $205,000 for four offices in the field which the agency requests.

The over-all request for this agency is about 300 percent of what was allowed for this fiscal year, 1941. The average salary for those on its pay rolls is as high as $3,500. I think the Bureau can easily stand this reduction without anything being hurt. I hope the House will approve of the amendment suggested.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. In the town from which I come there is a practice of some lady coming in and staying at one of the leading hotels for 4 or 5 days to get the recapitulation and sum total of figures concerning the fiscal conditions of the city. That is available in the State auditor's report at a moment's notice. Am I to understand that this is the Department that has these different persons out in the country doing that work?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is that a Federal official?

Mr. ROWE. Yes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I assume it must be. I cannot speak with certainty, but the record does indicate that the Bureau of the Budget has been concerning itself with matters of Federal-State fiscal relationships. I should guess that the matter referred to is included.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is an effort to save $180,000. The Bureau of the Budget was created by the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, designed to save money. The Budget at this time is serving every function except that of trying to reduce the expenditures of the Government. They have a tremendous staff. They send in here Budget estimates that require cutting all the way down the line in almost every bill. We must cut every single item or we are not going to keep the departments in any kind of shape on their nondefense activities. But worse than anything else, the Budget has begun to reach out. If a Congressman asks for information from a department and it involves the giving of any information that relates in any way to another organization than the department that is being questioned, they must submit the letter and the proposed answer to the Budget. That is the condition to which the Congress has shrunk at this time with bureaucrats going out and telling the departments what they can say to a Congressman and what they cannot say. It is about time that such performances of the Budget are stopped.

This cut is not near enough. It is not near enough to get them down to the work of supervising and cutting down the expenditures. That is what they should be doing, but they are not doing it. The adoption of this amendment will indicate that this Congress insists upon its right to get information from the departments.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I have information before the Committee on Education that, in addition to the things the gentleman from Massachusetts has cited as being done by the Bureau of the Budget, the Budget has concerned itself with the writing of legislation now before our committee.

Mr. TABER. That is correct. It is about time that we begin to say to this agency they must comply with what they were authorized to do by the Budget and Accounting Act. Let us adopt this amendment and put them in some kind of shape under the law.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot think of any more unwise action this Congress can take than to adopt the amendment which has been suggested. It would be a colossal illustration of being penny wise and pound foolish. Day after day in the well of this House Members have called upon the Government to economize, to investigate appropriations, to know what they are doing, and not to act blindly, yet the first amendment offered on this bill is an amendment which seeks to cut out funds and personnel for the only agency we now have which undertakes to reduce requests for appropriations before they come before the Congress for consideration. We will appropriate over $26,000,000 in this bill for the General Accounting Office to audit the expenditures of the Government. The Bureau of the Budget, which is the agency representing the President that has to investigate these matters and report to him and to the Congress, has less than $3,000,000.

The gentleman from New York is mistaken in his statement that the Bureau of the Budget requires submission to it for approval of every letter addressed by the departments to a Member of Congress. No such order has been entered.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, I have had experience in that connection myself.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. If the gentleman has had such an experience, I would assume that he has written a letter asking something about some legislation. If that is a fact, the response to such an inquiry is supposed to go through the Budget.

Mr. TABER. It was with reference to the employment of certain persons.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. An order was issued by the Budget on June 1, 1942, to the different departments that when inquiries are made respecting legislation, if they involve expenditures of funds, they should go through the Budget.

In all honesty and candor, Mr. Chairman, we have taken out of this bill the National Resources Planning Board, an agency of the President—an agency in which the President is very much interested, but it was taken out of this bill entirely—and the only other agency the Chief Executive has in these turbulent days to give him confidential information and advice is the Bureau of the Budget. There is not in Washington today a more conscientious, sincere, and hard-working public servant than Harold Smith, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Go through these appropriation bills from cover to cover and you will see where the Bureau of the Budget has cut down substantially expenditures asked for by the different departments. Certainly they have had to go out and investigate matters. We have a spending program of $104,000,000,000.

The President of the United States has no information on those matters unless someone gets it for him. Under the very terms of the General Accounting Act, the President of the United States calls upon the Bureau of the Budget to give him information and to go out and investigate this program and the procedure calling for the expenditure of funds. The Bureau of the Budget is his personal representative, and when they make a recommendation to the Congress, they are making it for the President of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I have only a moment. Do not let us come here in one breath and do away with a part of its functions, and seek to throttle an agency that is doing a grand job. Part of these funds are for the setting up of four field offices, which should have been set up a long time ago. My complaint about it is that they have not enough personnel to go out and examine this estimate which is in excess of $100,000,000,000, and make a proper report, which not only the President but the Congress expects them to make. Time after time the Appropriations Committee has asked the Budget Bureau to give us information, and we have the report filed here. They have worked day and night, overtime, Sundays, and in every other way in a conscientious effort to serve the Congress. Even my distinguished friend from Illinois, a member of the committee, said to the Director of the Budget as follows, which will be found on page 1211 of the hearings:

> Mr. DIRKSEN. I think that is all, Mr. Chairman.
> Mr. Smith, I like to be very unsparing in criticism, but on the other hand I like to be very unsparing in commendation also. I note with real interest and pleasure the results of your work in investigation and coordination.

Gentlemen, I ask you to seriously consider this matter. I am willing to go along with you when you want economies, but this is not an economy. It is an effort to strike down this agency, and the business people of the country and your constituents would not regard it as a saving. I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 84, noes 36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEPENDENT ESTABLISHMENTS

AMERICAN BATTLE MONUMENTS COMMISSION

For all expenses necessary for the work of the American Battle Monuments Commission authorized by the act of March 4, 1923 (36 U. S. C. 121-138), and by Executive Order No. 6614 of February 26, 1934, including the acquisition of land or interest in land in foreign countries for carrying out the purposes of said act and Executive order without submission to the Attorney General of the United States under the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes (34 U. S. C. 520; 40 U. S. C. 255); employment of personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; including not to exceed $3,000 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a); purchase and repair of uniforms for caretakers of national cemeteries and monuments in Europe at a cost not exceeding $500; travel expenses; rent of office and garage space in foreign countries which may be paid for in advance; the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles which may be furnished to the Commission by other departments of the Government or acquired by purchase; printing, binding, engraving, lithographing, photographing, and typewriting, including the publication of information concerning the American activities, battlefields, memorials, and cemeteries in Europe; transfer of household goods and effects as provided by the act of October 10, 1940, and regulations promulgated thereunder, and, when ordered or approved by the Commission, expenses of travel of dependents of employees when transferred from one official station to another, and the temporary transfer of employees by the Commission between places in foreign countries or between foreign countries and the United States, including transfers incident thereto, or, in the case of new appointments, transfer from place of appointment, may, if ordered or approved by the Commission, be regarded as a transfer from one official station to another for permanent duty for the purpose of authorizing the payment of travel of dependents and for the purposes of said act of October 10, 1940, and regulations promulgated thereunder; and the purchase of maps, textbooks, newspapers and periodicals; $45,530: Provided, That notwithstanding the requirements of existing laws or regulations, and under such terms and conditions as the Commission may in its discretion deem necessary and proper, the Commission may contract for work, supplies, materials, and equipment in Europe and engage, by contract or otherwise, the services of architects, firms of architects, and other technical and professional personnel: Provided further, That when traveling on business of the Commission, officers of the Army serving as members or as secretary of the Commission may be reimbursed for expenses as provided for civilian members of the Commission: And provided further, That the Commission may delegate to its chairman, secretary, or officials in charge of either its Washington or Paris offices, under such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, such of its authority as it may deem necessary and proper.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to supplement the observations I made yesterday with respect to the National Resources Planning Board, which was stricken from this bill by action of the subcommittee. I notice in the press this morning that the President took occasion to comment on the action of the committee. I quote from the press in its report of the conference with the President:

His eyes twinkled when he referred to himself as a Treasury watchdog—a role of his which he said had not been given sufficient publicity—but his smile disappeared when he began defending the National Resources Planning Board.

I have a keen appreciation of why the President did not smile when he was discussing the Board. It may be that he prefers that there be 150 activities in the Government that concern themselves with this matter of planning. It may be that the President is more interested in having the spenders doing the planning at the same time.

If gentlemen will examine the hearings of the National Resources Planning Board they will find that it has been devoting some of its energies to economic and industrial trends, to public works programming, to security and services including security, health and nutrition, youth and education, science roster and miscellaneous. It also includes functional plans for water and land, urban conservation and development area studies, and post-war agenda and reserve. They have been duplicating efforts which have been making a study in synthetic rubber, in fuel, oil, and food, notwithstanding the fact that we have a Rubber Director, a Petroleum Conservator, and the Department of Agriculture to look after food, which is really a terrific thing. I call attention to their own bulletin, issued November 1942. There is a very interesting statement about four items, and there is a post-war agenda of the National Resources Planning Board. Take No. 9 of this post-war classification:

Plans for international collaboration, the maintenance of world peace and promotion of higher world standards of living.

They ask these questions:

What part will the United States play in the relief of destitution in war-devastated areas; what will be the role of the United States in promoting better world-wide utilization of resources and world advancement in living standards; what influences will the domestic program of the United States have upon world relations; what repercussions upon domestic policy will result from the United States tariff, currency, lending, commodity stabilization and other foreign policies; what institutions of international government are required?

Mr. Chairman, that is not the business of the Planning Board. I do not know why they should be interested in a W. P. A. for China at the present time, when we have problems of our own. I know of no reason why they should be planning all over the world, when their business is really to give some concern to the economic maelstrom in which we may find ourselves when the present conflict is over. Yet they have a department and a planning general staff for the very things indicated, and I am of the opinion that it is necessary for the Congress to give direction to this activity. I stated yesterday that the Washington News remarked editorially:

POST-WAR PLANNING BY CONGRESS

Senator GEORGE's proposal of a special joint congressional committee to study post-war economic problems is another sign that the legislative branch is stirring from its long lethargy.

Many of the administrative agencies are formulating such plans. So are many industrial, labor, and academic organizations, and lobbyists. Now Congress at last is showing interest in this job.

Next to the war itself, many Americans are worried most by "executive dictatorship." That cussword exaggerates the fact. Certainly there is an unhealthy trend, accelerated by war necessities, to center government in the White House and the bureaus. But critics who harp only on executive usurpation seem to us to miss a point: the frequency with which Congress has defaulted its powers and responsibilities.

Whatever the post-war plans for the domestic economy may turn out to be, Congress must pass the laws and appropriate the funds. If it lacks the initiative and intelligence to study the problems and offer solutions, it demotes itself to the role of either rubber stamping or obstructing the plans of a foresighted Executive. Under our governmental system of coordinate branches, the legislative and executive should pool their facts and judgments for the final joint action.

Such cooperation should begin at home—with a joint House and Senate committee, welcoming suggestions from public groups as well as from Government administrative experts.

The problem of post-war planning in foreign affairs is related, but differs from that in the overlapping domestic field. In domestic legislation Congress has the primary responsibility, and the President has a veto power. In treaties and foreign relations generally the roles are reversed, with the President having direct responsibility, and Congress (chiefly the Senate) a veto power.

But in both cases the final responsibility is joint. It would be as absurd for the Senate to neglect to inform itself in advance on post-war international problems as for the Executive to take no thought of domestic planning.

Americans are particularly concerned about the relation between the President and the Senate in planning peace because of the disastrous absence of such cooperation during and after World War No. 1. President Roosevelt at least has the tragic experience of President Wilson to warn him. Unless the Senate is part of the peace planning, and of the peacemaking, it probably will balk when the time comes for ratification.

Now is the time to prevent that. Mutual recriminations after the war will not avail. The interests of the President and of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are the same American interests. How futile to talk of nations with conflicting interests working together in the solution of world problems, if two coordinate branches of our own Government cannot mature America's peace plans together.

We have nearly 150 planning activities today in the Government. They deal with administrative problems, agricultural planning, city and county planning, commercial policy, consumers' spending, education, employment, fiscal policies, health and welfare, housing, immigration, income distribution, industrial policies, investment, nutrition, population, public power, production and productivity, and a great many others. It is just about time that the elected Representatives of the people take a good look at this thing and eliminate all of the duplication, and bring some order out of chaos.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This is just a pro forma amendment.

Mr. CASE. I wish to talk on the National Resources Planning Board for a few minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes following the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I said yesterday that in my judgment this job of preparing for the future was a job that should center in Congress. I believe it should. But I do not agree with the implications of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] that the National Resources Planning Board has been a bad thing. I think it is doing a good job. I think the committee made a mistake in eliminating it. An amendment to put it back is subject to a point of order by any one Member of the House and, therefore, could not succeed, but I cannot refrain from saying one or two things about these matters.

In the first place, we have heard repeatedly in this House, particularly in recent months, speeches made which, in effect, seem to me to deprecate any attempt to apply intelligence to the problems of this country. We have problems that cannot be solved except by the application of intelligence; neither can they be solved by a lot of specific work by individual industries, individual labor organizations, individual groups of business people, or individual Government agencies which work in a particular field. The more important job is for us to marshal the agreement of the great middle-of-the-road opinion of America behind four or five or six avenues of broad general policy which can give us the foundation of a generally prosperous condition over a period of time in this country after this war shall have been won. That is a job which I thoroughly agree should center in the Congress. I do not believe, however, that the detailed work can or should be done by congressional committees. I think such a group has to draw upon the specific work being done by other groups and sift it before the bar of public opinion to see whether it is good or whether it is not good. Frankly, I have felt that the National Resources Planning Board, as an agency of the executive department to gather together a lot of work being done specifically by a lot of particular agencies, public and private, was a good thing and served a useful purpose. The Congress inevitably is going to have the disposal of whatever is done or whatever is proposed. It can pass or refuse to pass any suggestions that are made to it.

I would only like to amend what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] said about the joint congressional committee by saying that this is a job broader than government. It is a job even broader than the work Congress can do. It is a job that has to enlist the earnest and patriotic thought and effort of all groups of this population, and they have to approach it not from the standpoint of their demands but from the standpoint of working out together that which can serve the general public interest. Over and above all things else, let us not strain at the gnat of some big words that may have been used by a governmental agency and then swallow the camel of failure to prepare against the day when men are coming back from this war, when they will be entitled to real jobs and opportunity. Our first duty is to provide the sinews of this war. Our second duty is to go forward along the lines laid down by the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] yesterday and lay the groundwork for a just and lasting peace. The third duty is to see to it that when this war is over our people will not face a situation of economic concern and distress and confusion, but will be able to carry forward freedom in America on the basis of assurance of the full employment of all willing workers and a full market for the products of agriculture and industry in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I may not take the full 5 minutes, but I want to talk for a moment or two, to make clear, if I can, the position of some of us on the Republican side.

The remarks of some of the speakers might be interpreted to indicate that the Republican or minority position is one opposed to post-war planning. I think that would be a misinterpretation of our position. In the subcommittee I supported a proposal that would have made a very modest appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board, with the understanding that its function then would be limited strictly to what was contemplated in the original Federal Employment Stabilization Board created by an act of Congress. But the difficulties that have developed for the National Resources Planning Board rest upon a feeling in some quarters that it has become too much of a superreview board, setting up a superengineering agency, setting up a superplanning organization, with veto power over the responsibilities of the regularly created executive departments.

It has never seemed to me that when the Corps of Engineers, for example, passes upon the engineering features of a particular improvement project, it should be necessary for the National Resources Planning Board to have a superengineering body to give superengineering review to that which has been passed upon by the Corps of Engineers. But there is a definite field—and I think that is the conviction of the Members on my side of the aisle, as well as Members on the other side of the aisle—for the coordination of public works, and there is a definite field for an orderly approach to it.

Some of us believe that can be accomplished by the creation of a committee of representatives from the various executive agencies on the executive side of the picture and a coordination of the planning activities of the regular legislative committees of the Congress on the legislative side of the picture. For this purpose it would not be necessary to have as large a body as the present National Resources Planning Board. For myself, I hope that legislation is passed to create and finance a proper committee to coordinate post-war planning of public works.

While I am on my feet I want to call attention to another agency for which no appropriation is made in the pending item for the Civil Service Commission, and that is the Board of Legal Examiners. Some of you may recall that last year we had a great deal of discussion on the appropriation for the Board of Legal Examiners and in the conference finally agreed to an appropriation for it, with the understanding that they would get legislative authority for their existence before an appropriation was made this time. The legislative authority has not been given up to this time; consequently there is no appropriation in the civil-service item for the Board of Legal Examiners. I think it is fair to state, however, that the members of the subcommittee thought that on the whole the Board of Legal Examiners was doing a pretty good job; at least it was improving the situation. I am not a lawyer, but many Members of this body are. All of us are interested in the method of selection for lawyers who enter the Federal service.

Last year I placed in the RECORD a table showing the geographical location and institutions from which lawyers in the Federal service were coming. You will recall that it showed preponderantly that lawyers in the Federal service were coming from Harvard, Yale, and a few special institutions. This year I asked that the hearings carry a table showing the changes that had come, giving the exact facts of the origin of these lawyers. In this connection I call your attention to the tables you will find on pages 916–919 in the hearings. You will also find there the committees of examiners as named in each committee. They will be of interest to every Member of the body.

Let me just say this in summary: That of the 2,082 lawyers who were appointed between July 1941 and July 1942, before the time the Board of Legal Examiners was operating under the appropriation we gave them last year, 861—that is 41 percent—came from 12 institutions. Out of 2,127 lawyers appointed in the 6 months following the appropriation to set up the Board with State committees, only 453 came from those 12 institutions, reducing their percentage to 22 and representing a much better distribution of lawyers throughout the country. The record shows a definite improvement and warrants consideration of the necessary legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this is not the beginning of a drive to stop the development of public power. If so I want to warn you now that you are sitting down on a live wire again. As I said you were doing in 1938, when you went on a "sit down strike" against rural electrification, you got so badly scorched that many could not sit down in a congressional seat for the next 2 years.

If you are starting in to kill this program of public power I want you to remember that you are attacking the greatest development that has ever taken place for the economic improvement of this country. It is about the only thing that has ever been done for your farmers that really helped more than it hurt them. You have done a good deal to the farmers in the last 40 years, but very little for them. The greatest thing that has been done for the farmers of this country has been the development of our waterpower resources and the distribution of it to the farmers at rates they could afford to pay.

I am more or less prejudiced in favor of the Army engineers, as I am the T. V. A. and the Power Division of the Department of the Interior. In their realm I think the Army engineers are without equal; but there are fields they do not invade, and the distribution of public power to the farmers is one of them.

There are 230,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours of hydroelectric power a year going to waste in our navigable streams and their tributaries. When this war is over we are going to have to find employment for all these men who come back from the war.

One of the greatest things we could do would be to pass the bill which I have introduced for eight regional authorities to develop this hydroelectric power and distribute it to the American people at rates they can afford to pay. I expect to show you before the day is over that your people were overcharged last year more than a billion dollars for the electricity they are now using. The household or domestic consumers paid more than $900,000,000 for electricity that should have cost them around $250,000,000—almost four times what they should have paid.

If you had worked out some kind of program for the distribution throughout that area before Boulder Dam was finished and before the southern California Edison outfit got in to paralyze the greater part of its distribution; if you had had some kind of program similar to that of the Tennessee Valley Authority to put into operation on the Columbia River, think what it would have meant; and remember that when you cluttered up the Ohio River, you men from Ohio, you men from West Virginia, you men from that section of the country——

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, I make the point of order that the House is not in order.

Mr. RANKIN. You cannot get order amongst a certain element in this House when a Member talks about supplying the people their own electricity at what it is worth.

I want to call your attention to the fact that they cluttered up the Ohio River, one of the greatest streams in all the world, with low dams under the pretense that that river was fit only for navigation, and the people along that great stream, from Pittsburgh down to its mouth, have been deprived of this great wealth of hydroelectric power that would go to enrich every home and every business establishment within a radius of 250 or 300 miles of that river.

That is what I am protesting against. If you want to commit political suicide just continue to try to outlaw public power development in this country, which means rural electrification, because the American people have radios in their homes now and they know what is going on. They are not going to stand for their Members of Congress coming down here and keeping the "word of promise to their ear but breaking it to their hope." They are expecting and demanding that the natural resources of this nation be developed and used for their benefit.

I am not in favor of all these plans to reorganize human nature; but I am in favor of developing the great natural resources of this country.

I received a letter from a man in New Jersey yesterday, who ought to freeze, appealing to me to kill the Florida barge canal. If we had the Florida Canal today we would have all the oil and gasoline on the Atlantic seaboard the people need. Then they would not be shivering in this cold, as they are doing now. It just shows how those selfish interests that are more interested in their own affairs than in the welfare of the country are trying to destroy every development that would make America a richer and a better place in which to live.

Mr. RIVERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RIVERS. What does the gentleman think about the construction of a pipe line from the Tinsley field to the east coast?

Mr. RANKIN. That pipe line would be of great service and I have advocated it; but a pipe line will not carry the other necessary articles that must be transported through this canal.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, national defense: For all necessary expenses of the Civil Service Commission in connection with the recruitment and placement of civilian personnel required in connection with emergencies affecting the national security and defense, including personal services in the District of Columbia, traveling expenses not to exceed $820,818; and other items otherwise properly chargeable to appropriations of the Civil Service Commission for salaries and expenses and printing and binding, $10,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 10, line 2, strike out period, insert a colon, and the following: "Provided, That upon the expiration of 60 days after the cessation of hostilities between the United States and the principal enemy powers or after the date of an armistice between the United States and the principal enemy powers, this appropriation shall cease to be available for obligations unless Congress shall otherwise provide by law."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the Committee of the Whole that the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission is roughly divided into two parts, the first for the regular establishment for salaries and expenses and necessary expenditures incident to that work; then, in addition, we have set up a special item for national defense, on page 9 of the bill, reading:

Salaries and expenses, national defense: For all necessary expenses of the Civil Service Commission in connection with the recruitment and placement of civilian personnel required in connection with emergencies affecting the national security and defense.

And so forth.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment. I understand it means 60 days after cessation of hostilities none of these funds shall be available. If they can stop the war in 60 days, I would be willing to cut it all out.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would be, too. I am trying to develop a little pattern now.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I just want to say to the gentleman that I have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am grateful to the gentleman from Virginia. We are going to have to deal with this problem and impound this money sometime. They have nearly 4,800 people who are engaged in this recruitment work. My notion is that when hostilities stop, these defense expenditures for personnel ought to stop also. If there are any subsequent expenditures, the Congress can take care of them at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I recommend this amendment to the favorable consideration of the Members.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, national defense: For all expenses necessary to enable the Federal Communications Commission, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, to perform its functions related to national defense, including radio monitoring and foreign broadcast analysis, including all of the items of expenditure for which the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Federal Communications Commission," is available and not to exceed $9,000 for salary of Director of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service; not to exceed 56 passenger-carrying automobiles; not to exceed $50,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, without regard to the civil service and classification laws and, in the case of language or other experts, without regard to any requirements of this act with respect to citizenship, where citizens qualified to perform such work are not available; allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light (not exceeding $1,700 for any one person), as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a); and printing and binding, $5,590,314.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE: Page 11, line 3, after the words "disability fund", strike out the balance of page 11 and all of page 12 and lines 1 to 4, inclusive, of page 13.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. We have passed that paragraph.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. In what respect?

Mr. CASE. I will shorten it.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman was on his feet.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. You have got to do more than get up on your feet to offer an amendment.

Mr. CASE. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the Clerk had passed reading the current paragraph that the gentleman seeks to strike out.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Passed several paragraphs beyond that.

Mr. CASE. My amendment is to strike out the entire section dealing with the Federal Communications Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that he will have to offer his amendment at the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph that he proposes to strike out. As the Chair understands it, the gentleman's amendment embraces the paragraph beginning line 3, page 11, and extends down to and including line 4, page 13.

Mr. CASE. My amendment as offered was to strike out the entire section, from page 11 to the end of the section on page 13.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We are reading by paragraphs, and such an amendment would have to be offered to each paragraph as read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order that the amendment is not to the paragraph under consideration?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BENDER. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENDER. Where is the Clerk reading?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk had concluded the reading of line 4 on page 13.

Mr. TABER. The Clerk had not read line 10 on page 12. I was watching that.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the recollection of the Chair, and that recollection is confirmed by the Clerk, that the Clerk had read line 4 on page 13.

Mr. CASE. I should like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I understand the Chair has already ruled on the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has made a point of order. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I shall insist that the Clerk read every word if these steam-roller tactics are in order when amendments are offered. I am against the gentleman's amendment, but I insist that he be heard. He asked for recognition and was in order. The Clerk was reading the paragraph in question when the gentleman offered his amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the paragraphs beginning on page 11, line 3, have not been read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, because the paragraph under consideration begins on line 10 on page 12.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the Clerk has not read beginning with line 3 on page 11. Does the Chair care to hear me on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Reading one word and the total amount is not reading the bill. If the Chair cares to make a ruling the other way, I intend to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that the Clerk has not read beyond page 11, line 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York and to the Committee that the Chair understood that while the Clerk was reading fast he had read line 4 on page 13. However, in order to be fair to the Members who were undertaking to listen, and inasmuch as there was not good order in the Chamber, without objection, the Clerk will again read the title beginning on page 11, line 3.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses of the Federal Communications Commission in performing the duties imposed by the Communications Act of 1934, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1064), the Ship Act of 1910, approved June 24, 1910, as amended (46 U. S. C. 484–487), the International Radiotelegraphic Convention (45 Stat., pt. 2, p. 2760), Executive Order No. 3513, dated July 9, 1921, as amended under date of June 30, 1934, relating to applications for submarine cable licenses, and the radiotelegraphy provisions of the Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, ratified by the President July 7, 1936, including personal services, contract stenographic reporting services, rental of quarters, newspapers, periodicals, reference books, lawbooks, special counsel fees, supplies and equipment, improvement and care of grounds and repairs to buildings, not to exceed $5,000, purchase and exchange (not to exceed 8), maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in the field, travel expenses, including not exceeding $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings which in the discretion of the Commission are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities, reimbursement to ships of the United States for charges incurred by such ships in transmitting information in compliance with section 357 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, $2,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,218,260 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, including compensation of employees of the Interdepartment Radio Advisory Committee.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE: On page 11, strike out lines 4 to 25, on page 11, and lines 1 to 7, on page 12.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, with two succeeding amendments which I propose to offer, would leave the title "Federal Communications Commission" in line 3 but strike out the appropriations relating to the Federal Communications Commission and defer their consideration until later. I had expected to offer the amendments together in the thought that that would save some time. However, this will accomplish the same result.

The purpose in offering this amendment is to permit an intelligent appropriation to be made. The House has adopted a resolution authorizing a select committee to investigate the Federal Communications Commission. In view of the action already taken by the House it would be nonsensical for us now to attempt to appropriate for the Federal Communications Commission for the fiscal year that begins after July 1. How can we appropriate intelligently in this bill when there is pending a detailed investigation of the activities of the Commission? Some of us believe we cannot so appropriate at this time. Consequently, we believe this appropriation should be deferred.

This does not mean we expect the Federal Communications Commission to be abolished or its activities to be ended. I, for one, would be opposed to that, and so would the other Members of the House. We are acquainted with the work the Federal Communications Commission is doing, in a large way. Most of it should be continued; possibly some of it should not. Of course, the Deficiency Committee is meeting regularly, and it can handle appropriations for this Commission; or if the special committee makes its report before the appropriation is considered in the Senate it can be handled there.

There are reasons for raising some question about this appropriation. We asked the Commission for its figures on the draft deferments it had asked for its employees, and found that the Commission had asked for 442 deferments, receiving 391. It is true that the Federal Trade Commission has to have some highly trained technical men. It is probably true that those men in the service of the Federal Communications Commission can do just as effective work as they could if they were in uniform. However, until the select committee is satisfied that these deferments, for example, are justified, we ought not to make appropriations to carry on activities which we may not approve.

Not only that, but there was evidence before the committee that the Commission was doing some work the Army and Navy have the personnel to do. We asked direct questions on that point about some of the inspections and some of the examinations the Federal Communications Commission was making.

It was testified they were doing this at the request of the War and Navy Departments, but upon pursuing the question, it was apparent that the Army and the Navy had the personnel to do these same things. If there is a shortage of manpower, why should we be deferring men to put them in the Federal Communications Commission in jobs that the Army and the Navy have personnel to do? Not only that, but there was some questioning of the promotions made in this agency during 1942. They totaled 1,800, at a total cost of $145,000. Doubtless some of them were necessary to hold personnel but they should be examined in detail. They should be gone into more fully, and the House has already provided for that. Then, why should we make this appropriation, based upon activities, some of which we may want to abandon after the committee has made its report?

There is another reason. Three or four of the men who are on the list about which there has been a great deal of debate are some of the employees of the Federal Communications Commission. If we were to get into a debate upon the entire appropriation, I have been told those names would come up, and until they have been investigated either by the select committee or the special committee of the Committee on Appropriations which have been authorized to hear these people, we could not appropriate intelligently. I for one do not want to pass judgment on them until they have been heard. It seems to me that we would save time and appropriate more intelligently, if we wait until we have a report from the special committee.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. Yes.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Is not the same logic applicable also to the Army and the Navy and the appropriations for those Departments?

Mr. CASE. They are not under specific investigation by select committees of the House. Their appropriations are not before us yet and we hope the regular committees will keep the subcommittees currently informed of matters that come to their attention. Remember that I am not striking out this activity. The amendment does not strike out the title in line 3. And as I have already stated there will be ample time to appropriate for this agency before July 1. Of course, if the select committee has not reported by July 1, then we will have to appropriate for Federal Communications as best we can. And the gentleman knows we will appropriate for the Army and the Navy in due course when their estimates come before us.

Mr. RAMSPECK. And the same thing is true about all of them.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I was not on the floor yesterday when the very able floor leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], made his speech attacking Herbert Hoover, who in the minds of a great many people is the greatest living American. He made the direct charge that Mr. Hoover had opposed recommendations to prepare our country for defense, and then went on to cast a long line of suspicion about Mr. Hoover being for appeasement. I want to dismiss it by using the words of the gentleman himself that he used on a recent occasion:

> Any such thought is without foundation, and if the gentleman had the courage to make the direct accusation within the rules, I would say that he is making a complete misstatement of the facts. Outside of the House anyone making such statements, I would say, tells a deliberate lie.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am astonished that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] takes the position he does in this matter. He is generally a very level-headed member of this subcommittee, but the proposal he makes today seems to me to be absurd. He bases his amendment upon the theory that we should not appropriate money for this agency, which was created by this Congress, because we have authorized an investigation under the leadership of my colleague from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. If his reason is sound and logical, then we should not bring in any appropriation for the Army or the Navy or practically any other agency of the Government until these investigating committees report. We have also authorized the Smith committee to look into the actions of all of the agencies of the Government practically, to see whether they are operating in accordance with the acts of Congress. It seems to me that this type of legislation that is contained in the amendment which we are to vote on here this morning is a type of action that brings Congress into disrepute in the eyes of the country. It is demagoguery, and while I do not impute any motive of that sort to the gentleman from South Dakota, I do say that the critics of Congress will look upon it in that way, and to me I think that criticism will be justified. It is our duty as Members of Congress to finance the agencies that Congress sets up. We have a splendid gentleman from my own State who is going to investigate the operations of this Commission.

He is going to do a good job, and if there is anything wrong with this Commission I am sure that the gentleman from Georgia will find out about it, and Congress then can take such action as the facts justify, but this is not the proper method of legislation, it is not in keeping with the dignity and the importance of a legislative body, for us to say that we are not going to appropriate any money for an agency we created, an agency that is doing important war work. If the subcommittee could not get the information it desired in the usual manner it could have resorted to the subpena power recently given to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CASE. The committee did not have that power when this bill was prepared.

Mr. RAMSPECK. We have a committee appointed, headed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], that has the power of subpena and all the power of this Congress with it, and that is the orderly way to act. That is the orderly way to do it. The gentleman did not take the same position the other day about William Pickens. Did we not vote to investigate first before we took him off the pay roll? Are you going to take all these men off the pay roll who are monitoring war messages from across the seas? No; that is not the way to legislate.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CASE. Does not the gentleman feel that the Congress would be in a more ridiculous position if it appropriated money for this independent agency and then the special committee set up by the House came in and said, "Here is something that should have been cut out" and the money has already been appropriated?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I certainly do not. I think that is the orderly way to proceed. We have a committee to investigate them and we should not usurp their functions through an appropriation bill.

Mr. CASE. We are not usurping their functions; we are simply withholding action until the full story is before us. The gentleman knows, of course, that this does not touch a dollar of their current appropriation.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. CASE. And there is plenty of time to appropriate for next year between now and July 1 after the special committee has a chance to report.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes, and there is plenty of time to cut off their appropriation after the committee makes its report, if we should so desire.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. If it is abolished between now and July 1 the appropriation will not be necessary.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman is correct. If as a result of this investigation the Congress decides to abolish the Commission or change its function or its personnel, then the appropriation would not be effective.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Is this not about equivalent to convicting a man in advance without an investigation?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Well, that is true, too. It is an interference with the prerogatives of the investigating committee headed by my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] has expired.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], I welcome one of the first opportunities that I have had to cast my vote against the rising tide of bureaucracy that is daily encroaching upon the prerogatives and powers of the people's Congress. I welcome this opportunity, and I hope I will have many more occasions to cast my vote against these bureaucrats who are day by day destroying the people's rights with the excuse that they are justified in so doing because they are doing it to win the war. I question very much whether using iron-handed tactics such as the Federal Communications Commission has used over individual and separate radio stations, in choking off free expression as they have done on numerous occasions, is contributing very much to winning the war.

In my locality, just as in every other section of the country, there is a radio station that I believe is serving the community in a patriotic manner. It has opened its air waves to every call of the Government. It has functioned just as the Federal Government would have it function, and it has given wide expression to wishes of the Government in helping put on War bond sales, in making announcements for the Army and the Navy, in giving out uncensored information of all kinds. I submit today that this same radio station of which I speak has every right to conduct its business in a private and individual way. I maintain that the Government has no right to step in and question its patriotism, its right to proceed in an orderly, patriotic manner.

Therefore, I welcome the opportunity today to cast my vote for this amendment. I will welcome any other such opportunities. I hope this is but the beginning of an attempt to place the power where the people originally intended it to be placed, to bring prestige back to the House and the Senate. Heaven knows within the past 2 years, due to the encroachments of these bureaucrats, we have lost plenty, at least with the folks back home, and they are the ones who count.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I yield.

Mr. HARE. Assuming that the statement of the gentleman is correct, what would happen in case this amendment were adopted and the war would continue beyond July 1 of this year and the communications systems of the world would be free to communicate any message to inform our enemies? Does not the gentleman think there would be chaos in our war program and in our war effort?

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I am informed by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] that nothing will happen before July 1, as far as the continuation of this Commission goes. Furthermore, I would be the first to raise my voice in indignation against the insinuation of any Government bureau that the people in the radio station in my community would be guilty of any unpatriotic act or of disseminating any propaganda over the radio that would in any way obstruct the war effort.

I pledge my vote to this amendment and I welcome the chance to cast it this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I know there are those of you who think I am sometimes too severe, and yet I speak the truth when I say to you that there is not one of you to whom I would not give the coat off my back did I think you were cold.

My position on this amendment is not an easy one. You know that I happen to be a member of a special committee that has been set up to investigate this agency of the Government. For that reason I am not going to appeal to my friends to support the amendment. That is a matter that they will have to determine for themselves without any appeal on my part. I will not under the circumstances vote on this amendment.

I have no brother nor son—no kinsman—who holds a job with the Federal Communications Commission whose continuance in service is dependent upon my support. On the other hand, I have been maligned, blackmailed, and criminally misrepresented by this agency of the Government.

I have expressed my views heretofore and you know what they are. Exception was taken to an observation I made on the floor that the Chairman of this Commission was in the hair of everybody in Washington, and particularly the Army and the Navy. I would have liked it better had the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] made his statement before I submitted these remarks to you. I think I know that he is this morning armed with a statement furnished by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy negativing the statement that I made the other day. I am wondering if the gentleman from Virginia on Monday, after the colloquy we had on the floor, communicated over the telephone with Mr. Fly with respect to this matter and if he knows that Mr. Fly appealed to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy for the statements which I think he holds. And I am wondering too if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] happens to know that this Uriah Heep of the Commission brought political pressure to bear upon the Secretary of the Navy and forced into retirement the man who knew more about communications than any other man connected with the Navy, Admiral Hooper?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not urging that you take one position or the other; I will say, however, that I do not consider this motion to strike as being a piece of demagogery.

You will remember that at the beginning of this session we talked about the use of the appropriating power of this Congress as a means of repressing the bureaucrats who are governing America at this time. Now, I know this statement is disappointing to some of my friends, and I regret to make it, but I would feel ashamed of myself if I did not manifest sufficient courage and sufficient decency to say something on this subject. I could say more; I could say much more if the proprieties of the moment made it permissible; but I will say this to you: That I am not the only Member of this House who has been criminally maligned and falsely represented by this Commission; there are others I could name, and I could name them now; and if challenged I might do so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to inform the gentleman that debate on this amendment has been limited and time allocated. The Chair feels constrained to recognize the gentleman from Virginia. If time remains after the gentleman from Virginia has concluded, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] is recognized.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it may be that because of the great disparity of numbers, that one who tries to defend the action of this subcommittee is crying in the wilderness.

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. O'KONSKI. Where are the Members on the gentleman's side?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is what I should like to know. If the gentleman could inform me where they are, I should like to know; certainly they are not helping me very much today, I will say to the gentleman.

On a strictly political division of the House awhile ago, strictly political, every Member on the Republican side stood up in support of a motion and every Member on the Democratic side stood up; and there were 84 Republicans and 36 Democrats, I think. I feel that the people should know that, I feel that the Democrats of the country should know that.

But I have got a little bit of a job to do here and I am going to try to do it. First I should like to try to relieve my dear friend from Georgia, because he has been worried as to what I might have said to the Chairman of the Communications Commission and what he might have said to somebody else. Well, I did not call the Chairman of the Communications Commission; I had a clerk call him and tell him that it had been stated on the floor of the House that his agency was a detriment to the war effort; and to tell him that if that was so I could not defend it. Mr. Fly replied that he had already gone to the War and the Navy Departments some time ago when the charge was made and that he did not like to annoy them again but that he would enclose me copies of the letters they had written. This he did, and the gentleman from Georgia is already familiar with them.

I have here, though, Mr. Chairman, a little folder which he sent me, about 12 or 15 sheets. I cannot read them; I cannot put them in the RECORD. Their nature is so highly confidential, so vitally concerned with the heart of the war effort—they are from high-ranking Army and Navy officers, and State Department officials showing the vital, critical work this Federal Communications Commission is doing. I will be delighted, if any Member interested wants to come to my office, to lay them before him and let him read them; and I think he will agree when he sees them that they could not be made public because of their confidential nature.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. It would be possible for the investigating committee to proceed with its efforts and make a report promptly and to have whatever appropriation might be needed for the Commission provided before the first of July. In this way the Appropriations Subcommittee could have the benefit of the work the investigating committee does.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; I do not think that position is tenable at all.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virigina. Not for a few minutes; I have but limited time and several very important things I want to say.

Our committee felt there was some duplication in certain of the activities of the Federal Communications Commission and we cut the appropriation over $400,000 because of the suggestions made by the gentleman from South Dakota, and brought out in the hearings, which showed that some of the work the Communications Commission was doing the Army was doing and had the personnel to do it. We made that cut in the appropriations.

Here is the core of the whole business. If you want to take the responsibility you may do so. The Federal Communications Commission in its monitoring work, in its control of the airways, has to have highly technically skilled, trained personnel, mostly young people, and that is the reason for the high number of deferments in that branch. They have had the greatest difficulty in keeping their people. They have had to get young people, train them, start them at the bottom and work them on up, hence the great number of promotions. They have had great difficulty in keeping this personnel. They are jittery anyway.

Let the Congress today strike out this appropriation and those twelve or fifteen hundred people, who want to work, who want to eat, and who want to serve, not knowing where they are going to be, or when their jobs are going to be cut off, or whether they will have a job after July 1, and, I say to you, you have demoralized that agency, you have thrown confusion into the work of this vital, critical agency, and I do not believe any Member of this House ought to be willing to take the responsibility for doing that.

We have an investigating committee, with full powers, a zealous investigating committee, if you please. You and I may rest with the greatest feeling and security that speedily and thoroughly everything about the Communications Commission will be brought to us and the Congress may then take action.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I think I have a right to speak on this amendment because I happened to be the chairman of the committee that reported the bill to set up the Communications Commission and was the author of the bill. Before that time there was chaos in communications throughout the length and breadth of the land. The telegraph and telephone business had hardly been touched by the agencies that were supposed to handle them, the Interstate Commission. The old Radio Commission was devoting a little time to broadcasting and to broadcasting only. It was thought at that time that all communications should come under one commission of the Government. This was done back in 1934.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota should be brushed aside as sheer demagogy, that would be one thing. If the begging of the question by the gentleman from New York that if the investigating committee reported between now and the first of July were convincing, that would be another thing. I do not appeal to your prejudices or to your passions, and I do not accuse people of demagogy, but I do want to counsel with your reason—with your reason, I repeat, with all the earnestness I can command. A great war is on, the world is aflame and the air is full of propaganda from every conceivable portion of the earth. There is only one agency in the United States of America, let me say to you, that has any control whatsoever over the air of the United States. Do you by your vote at this time want to strike down that only agency?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CASE) there were—ayes 87, noes 162.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair say at this time, that it is only fair to advise the Members that the Clerk, in the absence of any amendments on the desk and in the absence of any objection from members of the committee, was pursuing the course heretofore followed in the reading of bills.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses, national defense: For all expenses necessary to enable the Federal Communications Commission, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, to perform its functions related to national defense, including radio monitoring and foreign broadcast analysis, including all of the items of expenditure for which the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Federal Communications Commission," is available and not to exceed $9,000 for salary of Director of the Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service; not to exceed 56 passenger-carrying automobiles; not to exceed $50,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, without regard to the civil service and classification laws and, in the case of language or other experts, without regard to any requirements of this act with respect to citizenship, where citizens qualified to perform such work are not available; allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light (not exceeding $1,700 for any one person), as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a); and printing and binding, $5,590,314.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 13, line 14, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That upon the expiration of 60 days after the cessation of hostilities between the United States and the principal enemy powers or after the date of an armistice between the United States and the principal enemy powers, this appropriation shall cease to be available for obligations unless Congress shall otherwise provide by law."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DWORSHAK: Page 13, line 4, strike out "$5,590,314" and insert "$5,384,154."

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply proposes to eliminate $206,160 which has been provided in the bill for the use of the War

Problems Division of the Law Department of the Federal Communications Commission. Unlike the amendment which has just been disposed of, I do not believe there will be much opposition or controversy over this proposed amendment. I believe the subcommittee which has considered this bill probably will be inclined to support my amendment. In proof of that assertion I quote one paragraph of the committee's report:

The committee calls attention to the provisions in the bill providing $206,160 for a war-problems division under the law department. The committee has not eliminated these funds, because they are requested as a national defense measure, but it does regard the value of such projects with some skepticism and recommends that the Commission carefully consider the desirability of discontinuing them.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is our responsibility, not that of the Federal Communications Commission, to determine whether this particular division shall be continued or discontinued.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Was any attempt made by an official of the Commission to justify this appropriation?

Mr. DWORSHAK. Yes. The officials pointed out in the hearings that this new War Problems Division was created early in 1942 to take care of the peculiar problems arising because of our participation in the war. However, the normal functions of the Law Department certainly can be carried on and expanded in wartime. The hearings disclosed that normally the Law Department employs 56 attorneys. The War Problems Division has 15 attorneys and 8 other employees.

I call attention to the fact that while it has been said that the proposed funds for this Commission have been cut by $479,686, that is only reduced from the Budget request; and even with the adoption of my amendment this bill carries more than the amount provided during the current year for the operation of this Commission.

May I stress the point that for the regular activities of this Commission $2,000,000 is provided, and that under the heading of national defense activities more than $5,000,000 is provided, so that with the adoption of my amendment no effort will be made to interfere with or frustrate the work of the Commission insofar as the war program is concerned.

Much has been said about duplication; that it is time to eliminate 1,000,000 Federal employees of the 3,000,000 now on the pay roll. The only way we can retrench is to retrench. It seems to me this is an evidence of the good faith of Congress in serving notice upon these commissions that existing peacetime personnel should be readjusted and utilized to the fullest extent, so that the emergency activities arising from our participation in the war can be carried on successfully and efficiently.

I do not want to interfere with the operation of this Commission, but I believe it is time to consider the serious aspects of the manpower problem now confronting our country.

I ask the Committee at this time to support this amendment, which eliminates only $206,160 for a War Problems Division. Let us serve notice that the regular Law Department of the Federal Communications Commission should carry on effectively.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I direct the attention of the Committee especially to the fact that this is a part of the national-defense program of the Federal Communications Commission, a particular appropriation for that purpose, not a part of their regular activities.

The War Problems Division, a very small unit, with a small amount of money involved, was set up by the Federal Communications Commission at the request of the Board of War Communications, which is composed of representatives of the Army, the Navy, the State Department, the Marine Corps, and the other agencies interested in communications. It has to deal and it is the only agency having to deal with the broad subject of international communications, the priority of war communications, the sufficiency of telegraph and telephone communications, and the various and sundry complicated legal questions that arise.

When we are establishing and maintaining this intensive network of international communications which are brought about by this war effort, as our committee says, we felt and we suggested that the Federal Communications Commission ought to survey it carefully to see whether it is necessary. They say it is necessary. The War Communications Board say it is necessary. The Army and the Navy say it is necessary. It is a small item, and I believe we ought not now to delete it and deprive them of the functions of that activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DWORSHAK) there were—ayes 76, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

National defense activities: For all necessary expenses (except printing and binding) to enable the Federal Power Commission to perform additional activities in connection with the national security and defense, including activities under the provisions of the Federal Power Act, activities under Executive Order No. 9165, dated May 19, 1942, and activities for the protection of the electric power supply against hostile acts, such expenses to include all items of expenditure for which the appropriations under the heading "Salaries and expenses, Federal Power Commission," are available, $519,255: Provided, That the Commission may make expenditures in addition to the foregoing, for duties connected with the national security and defense, from other appropriations available to it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 14, line 21, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That upon the expiration of 60 days after the cessation of hostilities between the United States and the principal enemy powers or after the date of an armistice between the United States and the principal enemy powers, this appropriation shall cease to be available for obligations unless Congress shall otherwise provide by law."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

Office of the Administrator

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses in the Office of the Administrator in the District of Columbia, including the salary of a General Counsel at $10,000 per annum; printing and binding (not to exceed $4,000); actual transportation and other expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence to persons serving, while away from their homes without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Administrator; purchase (including exchange), of lawbooks and other books of reference, purchase of newspapers and periodicals (not to exceed $150); preparation, shipment and installation of photographic displays, exhibits, and other descriptive materials; travel expenses; not to exceed $1,500 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings or conventions relating to the work of the Agency; not to exceed $6,000 for the employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise, for special services determined by the Administrator to be necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and classification laws, $300,000: Provided, That the Federal Works Administrator may, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe, authorize the Commissioner of Public Roads and the Commissioner of Public Buildings to make appointments of personnel for such administrations.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WIGGLESWORTH: Page 16, line 17, after the words "classification laws", strike out "$300,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is simply to make a further, and I think a moderate, cut in the funds available to the office of the Administrator of the Federal Works Agency.

The Administrator, as you know, is supposed to supervise the work of four other agencies—the Public Buildings Administration, the Public Roads Administration, the Public Works Administration, and the Work Projects Administration.

We are told that the Work Projects Administration is folding up and will not be in existence after June 30 next. We are also told that the Public Works Administration is winding up and will be liquidated during the course of the fiscal year 1944. So the Administrator's primary function will be that of supervising two agencies instead of four.

The Administrator requested $386,000, as compared with $350,000 for the current year, and advised us that he anticipates $245,000 from the constituent agencies, or a total, if his request had been granted, of $632,000, or thereabouts, primarily for the overseeing of these two agencies. For the current year the total was about $595,000. The record shows 15 people on the rolls of the Administrator with salaries between $6,400 and $12,000. It shows all told on the rolls 192 people with an average salary of $3,200.

The committee reduced the request from $386,000 to $300,000. This amendment, if adopted, would cut another $100,000, leaving a total for the Administrator, including funds from the constituent agencies, amounting to $445,000. I think that is ample for the reduced work by which he is confronted. I hope the House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. I should like to inquire, in view of his statement that certain funds are to be transferred from constituent agencies, whether there is anything in the law or practice that would prevent the making up of $600,000 from one of the subordinate agencies that comes under the Federal Works Administrator?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the answer is no, but, of course, to the extent that a transfer is made, it would reduce the funds available to the constituent agencies.

Mr. DIRKSEN. When the language came to us there was provision whereby funds could be transferred from component agencies to the Administrator, but we left the language out of the bill.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I understand it is not possible to make the transfer from constituent agencies to the Administrator?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is correct in view of the action referred to.

Mr. TABER. The total that this outfit has under its jurisdiction in all departments will be reduced, as compared to last year, by upward of $800,000,000 when the W. P. A. goes out. Is not that correct? The appropriation for the W. P. A. is $800,000,000 for this year, and that is not proposed to be carried for the next fiscal year. Therefore there is a cut in the total activities of three-quarters, and this only gives them $186,000 below the current year budget.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. That is true. And, of course, the P. W. A. is only asking for $27,000 next year, as compared with $168,000 in the current year, so there is a material cut there also.

Mr. TABER. And with a quarter of their activities a cut of only $86,000 has been made, so that when you add this cut of $100,000 you are only getting down to where you are giving more than they had this year.

Mr. HINSHAW rose.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. I just want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a couple of questions.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make that 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the way budgetary matters have been handled, and that interest has been aroused through discussion with gentlemen from several of the departments downtown. Apparently whenever they run out of money in one department they can transfer it from some other source into that department, and in that way the very able work of the gentleman's committee can certainly be avoided. I wonder if there is going to be any provision in law or whether there is such provision which will make the appropriations made through the gentleman's committee stick to the department for which the appropriation is originally made?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is no power in the department to transfer funds to another agency or even to a division within an agency unless there is specific power given by the Congress. As pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], language of that kind was proposed, but it was stricken out. There is no such power. This happens sometimes, and perhaps this is what the gentleman has in mind: An agency will do work for another agency on a reimbursable basis. That is where this Federal Works Agency will get some funds, as pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH], because of work that it will do for other agencies on a reimbursable basis, which has the effect of augmenting the amount appropriated to that agency.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is quite true, but what I want to know is whether this business of transferring funds for administrative purposes from subagencies will continue?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They will not do that unless they are given specific authority for it. None is given in this particular bill.

Mr. Chairman, I think the cut suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts is quite drastic. The committee has cut $86,000 from this item, which brings it well below the appropriation for the current year. Under the reorganization plans the office of the Administrator is charged with supervision of the Public Buildings Administration, the Public Roads Administration, both of which are moving full speed ahead. It is true that the Work Projects Administration and Public Works Administration are in process of liquidation, but even then there are certain important duties to be performed for them by the Administrator's office.

I think the gentleman's cut is a little too heavy. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were ayes 90 and noes 78.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. FITZPATRICK and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 155 and noes 121.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

General administrative expenses: For architectural, engineering, mechanical, administrative, clerical, and other personal services, including the salary of the Commissioner of Public Buildings at $10,000 per annum; traveling expenses, printing and binding (not to exceed $20,000), advertising, testing instruments, lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and such other contingencies, articles, services, equipment, or supplies as the Commissioner of Public Buildings may deem necessary in connection with any of the work of the Public Buildings Administration; ground rent of the Federal buildings at Salamanca, N. Y., and Columbus, Miss., for which payment may be made in advance; $1,225,000, of which not to exceed $675,900 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $386,100 for personal services in the field: Provided, That the foregoing appropriations shall not be available for the cost of surveys, plaster models, progress photographs, test pits and borings, or mill and shop inspections, but the cost thereof shall be construed to be chargeable against the construction appropriations of the respective projects to which they relate.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman, against the language on page 17, line 15, beginning with the word "including" and ending with the word "annum" in line 16, the language reading "including the salary of the Commissioner of Public Buildings at $10,000 per annum," upon the ground that that particular wording is legislation upon an appropriation bill and is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects to the language beginning in line 15, after the word "services"?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. After the word "services" and including the word "annum" in line 16.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the item had the unanimous support of the subcommittee, but it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the prosecution of construction projects or planning programs assigned to the Public Buildings Administration for which funds are provided by direct appropriation or transferred under authority contained in section 35 of the act of June 15, 1938 (40 U. S. C. 265), an amount administratively determined as necessary for the payment of salaries and expenses of personnel engaged upon the preparation of plans and specifications, field supervision, and general office expense, may be transferred and consolidated on the books of the Treasury Department into a special account for direct expenditure in the prosecution of said work, such expenditures to be subsequently allocated and reported upon by projects in accordance with procedures prescribed by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman a couple of questions.

On page 21 in line 10, "contracts for telephone switchboards." I would like to know what you mean by that. Is that a rental proposition or a buying proposition?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They rent them from the telephone company in many of the departments.

Mr. WHITE. It is a contract to rent, then?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC ROADS ADMINISTRATION

General administrative expenses: For the employment of persons and means, including rent, advertising (including advertising in the city of Washington for work to be performed in areas adjacent thereto), printing and binding (not to exceed $27,000), purchase (including exchange) of lawbooks, books of reference and periodicals, and the preparation, distribution, and display of exhibits, in the city of Washington and elsewhere for the purpose of conducting research and investigational studies, either independently or in cooperation with State highway departments, or other agencies, including studies of highway administration, legislation, finance, economics, transport, construction, operation, maintenance, utilization, and safety, and of street and highway traffic control; investigations and experiments in the best methods of road making, especially by the use of local materials; and studies of types of mechanical plants and appliances used for road building and maintenance, and of methods of road repair and maintenance suited to the needs of different localities; for maintenance and repairs of experimental highways; for furnishing expert advice on these subjects; for collating, reporting, and illustrating the results of same; and for preparing, publishing, and distributing bulletins and reports; to be paid from any moneys available from the administrative funds provided under the act of July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355–359), as amended, or as otherwise provided.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the paragraph just concluded mentions appropriately experimental highways and the building and maintenance of same.

When the mechanized hordes of Hitler rolled into the Lowlands of Belgium, Holland, and France it was over the perfectly constructed six-, seven-, and eight-lane highways leading from the heart of Nazi Germany itself that those troops came into the territory of the countries opposing the invasion. On the other hand, there were the narrow one- and two-lane roads in the oppressed countries I have mentioned.

The result was that the force of the equipment and the manpower of Hitler crushed the opposition. Stuka bombers from the skies blasted columns of ground troops coming to meet the Germans because those soldiers were bottlenecked against the fleeing humanity of the civilian population.

The reason I recall this part of the Nazi conquest is to remind the members of this Committee of the absolute necessity for the United States preparing very carefully now to think in terms of post-war construction of so-called superhighways or express roads.

When the war broke over America the 75,000 miles of strategic highway network in this country were in a deplorable condition. Only one-third of that entire highway system met even the minimum requirements of our military strategists.

I call your attention today to the need for a planned program when this war will have been concluded. We need the speedy construction of a great highway system, not only in America but linking this Nation more closely with Alaska on the north and our South American neighbors below the border. I say this advisedly because I can well realize that there will be those who, when this war will have been ended in our victory, will once again go back to the ill-advised proposition of putting our people to work on projects that are not fundamental and will not aid in the essential wealth of our Nation. Build highways. Build airways. Be constructive in post-war planning.

I direct your attention to the success of the experimental dream, as it was called, of the Pennsylvania Turnpike between Pittsburgh and Harrisburg.

That streamlined four-lane road was somewhat facetiously called a foolish guinea pig, yet we know that in peacetime 2½ hours' travel time is saved between Pittsburgh and Harrisburg. After the war is over we are going to have many of these roads linking the great cities and rural regions of our country, and we are, of course, going to extend them throughout the world. A link should, at the war's end, be built from Harrisburg to Philadelphia. Washington to Baltimore is another demanding action as soon as possible. In West Virginia a desirable link in such a system would be from Morgantown to Charleston.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. CASE. The bill carries $3,000,000 for advance engineering plans, but this $3,000,000 is restricted for the development of a strategic network of highways that bypass municipalities and metropolitan areas.

The thing the gentleman has in mind was discussed by the committee and I think the committee favored an appropriation for road planning outside the municipal areas. It was, however, felt that the item in the form in which it was submitted to us would be subject to a point of order. That is the only reason there is not an item in this bill for post-war planning of rural roads as well as city roads.

I may say in this connection that evidence was brought before the committee that unless some steps are taken in that direction now a post-war program may be concentrated in large cities. It is highly desirable that there be a proper planning of roadways throughout the country to avoid that situation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I appreciate the contribution of the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from West Virginia may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I note that the money included in this bill for highway purposes, including access roads, is hardly as much as is devoted in a biennium in one or two of the larger States, such as my own State of California, for road construction work. How can it be expected that a Federal road construction program can be put through with such relatively small appropriations? Let us take the east coast road between Boston and Miami; it is in perfectly terrible condition; so far as use as a military highway is concerned, it is not worth anything; there are numerous stretches of two-lane road, inadequate bridges, ferry crossings, and all that sort of thing. Anyone who has driven even a small part of it in the past knows perfectly well that the road is not adequate.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct. In particular in the New England States we find thousands of miles of roadway that are not suitable for war use or even to meet the increasing peacetime needs. As a member of the Roads Committee I am sure we recognize the primary importance of the subject of post-war highway construction, and I believe we have a responsibility to get ready now, so there may be no delay when peace comes again.

Mr. HINSHAW. I hope the gentleman's committee can get every dollar of the gasoline tax that is being collected by the Federal Government for use in construction of highways throughout the Nation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. As the gentleman states, the present situation in Federal highway construction is such that not much money is being devoted to that purpose. It has always been my opinion that the tax money collected from the sale of gasoline should be used for road work and not diverted by the States or Nation for other purposes, as has happened all too frequently.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I see two gentlemen on their feet; I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to supplement the idea advanced by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], who just preceded me, with reference to the construction of a supermilitary highway in this country, and I ask for these few minutes to call attention to H. R. 56, a bill introduced during the early days of the session. This bill provides for the construction of a supermilitary highway extending the Alaska Highway from somewhere near Minot, N. Dak.—I hope the gentleman from North Dakota will get that point—from somewhere near Minot to the vicinity of Chicago, to Cincinnati, through Kentucky, Tennessee, northern Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, or Arkansas, and through Texas to connect up with what is known as the Pan-American Highway. From El Paso up through New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, or Utah, Idaho, or Wyoming, and through Montana to Glacier Park, and from there to connect with the Alaska Highway at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada. In addition to this circle traversing the middle eastern part of the United States, the middle western part of the United States, giving us access to the North and to the South, there would be added six auxiliary roads to the east and west coasts. One from some point near Cincinnati, Ohio, to Boston, Mass.; another from near Knoxville, Tenn., to Charleston, S. C.; a third from near Birmingham, Ala., to Pensacola, Fla.; a fourth from Los Angeles to the main line; a fifth from San Francisco to the main line; and a sixth from Seattle to main superhighway.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I commend the gentleman for his interest in this superhighway construction. I think it might be interesting at this point to develop whether the gentleman proposes to have constructed toll roads or establish them free without cost for the vehicles and passengers traveling thereon?

Mr. HARE. The bill provides that they shall be toll roads.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I shall say to the gentleman that in connection with the operation of the Pennsylvania Turnpike under peacetime travel—of course, during the war we can make no comparison—the bonds with which that road was constructed were being retired twice as fast as anticipated in the financial set-up of that highway, showing that it can be done, and that motorists of every type, commercial and private, are eager to use such facilities.

Mr. HARE. I am very glad to have that information from the gentleman and I sincerely trust that he will assist in having this bill reported at this session of Congress in order to make the necessary surveys so that when the emergency is over that part of the work will be done and construction can begin immediately.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Of course, I think that we should report this character of legislation. Of course, I am zealous for the bill that I first introduced in 1937 and which in the present Congress is H. R. 776, but I am sure also that the gentleman's idea is sound.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARE. I hope to address myself to this proposal in more detail as soon as I am able to secure time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, from my experience in pioneering in the West it is my belief that in this discussion we are dealing with one of the most important activities of the Government at the present time. Ever since I have taken up my duties as a Member representing one of the great undeveloped sections of the West I have endeavored to assist and work for the construction of roads. In connection with the activities of the Government in the defense of our country, I wonder if the majority of the Members of the House know what the conditions are today in the West and if they know of the bottlenecks in roads that exist in the Rocky Mountains. We have only a few main arterial roads crossing from the East to the West through the Rocky Mountain section of this country, none of them up to standard. There is not a four-lane road over the mountains of the West. I could take you on some of our most important arterial highways out there and show you how the road is winding and dangerous. If we were forced to transport heavy traffic over that road in connection with supplying our forces in the theater of hostilities in the Pacific, we would be stymied. There are bottlenecks throughout the Rocky Mountains that it would be impossible either by rail or truck transportation to overcome. I wish that the Members of this House would give more attention to the construction of roads throughout the mountain sections of the Northwest and the West.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. What the gentleman says is correct. I remember that prior to America's entry into the war, military maneuvers, especially in the West and Southwest, were impeded because the roads were not in shape to take care of the guns of a certain weight used in those tactics.

Mr. WHITE. I doubt that there is a road between Canada and the State of Utah, in the 600 miles of the north and south limits of the State of Idaho, that ordinary artillery could traverse today. I know that the main artery of the Northwest, Highway No. 10, is in such shape that it would be practically impossible for the truck and trailer or the ordinary long pieces of artillery to negotiate the curves. I was appalled to see work discontinued on one of the bottlenecks around Lake Coeur d'Alene in the State of Idaho, on Highway No. 10.

I hope this bill will pass and that there will be no disposition to cut any of these road appropriations, and that we will do what they did in Germany, build roads on which our troops may move freely and the supplies also in the theater of activities in the Pacific.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY SYSTEM

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355-359) and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, including not to exceed $1,135,000 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, and including the salary of the Commissioner of Public Roads at $10,000 per annum, $40,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, which is a part of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1942 by section 1 of the act approved September 5, 1940 (54 Stat. 867): Provided, That none of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to any State on account of any project on which convict labor shall be employed, except this provision shall not apply to convict labor performed by convicts on parole or probation: Provided further, That not to exceed $55,000 of the funds provided for carrying out the provisions of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921 (23 U. S. C. 21, 23), shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles: Provided further, That, during the fiscal year 1944, whenever performing authorized engineering or other services in connection with the survey, construction, and maintenance, or improvement of roads for other Government agencies the charge for such services may include depreciation on engineering and road-building equipment used, and the amounts received on account of such charges shall be credited to the appropriation concerned: Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1944 the appropriations for the work of the Public Roads Administration shall be available for meeting the expenses of warehouse maintenance and the procurement, care, and handling of supplies, materials, and equipment stored therein for distribution to projects under the supervision of the Public Roads Administration, and for sale and distribution to other Government activities, the cost of such supplies and materials or the value of such equipment (including the cost of transportation and handling) to be reimbursed to appropriations current at the time additional supplies, materials, or equipment are procured from the appropriation chargeable with the cost or value of such supplies, materials, or equipment: Provided further, That the appropriations available to the Public Roads Administration may be used in emergency for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for the immediate relief of employees engaged on hazardous work under that administration: Provided further, That the appropriations for the work of the Public Roads Administration shall be available for necessary expenses (not exceeding $9,000) of attendance at meetings and conferences of highway departments, associations, organizations, and other agencies concerned, and (not exceeding $15,000) for the temporary employment, by contract or otherwise, of technical consultants and experts without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and classification laws.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language on page 24, beginning with line 5, reading as follows: "and including the salary of the Commissioner of Public Roads at $10,000 per annum."

The point is that it is an appropriation without authorization.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS

For necessary salaries and expenses of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, including contracts for personal services in the making of special investigations and reports; traveling expenses of members and employees, including not to exceed $2,500 for attendance upon meetings of technical and professional societies; periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of the Langley Memorial Aeronautical Laboratory, the Ames Aeronautical Laboratory, and the aircraft-engine research laboratory at Cleveland, Ohio; purchase and maintenance of cafeteria equipment; maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; not to exceed $319,500 for personal services in the District of Columbia, including one Director of Aeronautical Research at not to exceed $10,000 per annum; and not to exceed $2,500 for temporary employment of consultants, at not to exceed $50 per diem, by contract or otherwise, without regard to the civil-service and classification laws; in all, $15,672,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL HOUSING AGENCY

Office of the Administrator

Salaries and expenses: In addition to the amounts otherwise available (which amounts shall be transferred to this authorization for expenditure hereunder) for the administrative expenses of the Office of the Administrator, National Housing Agency, in carrying out the provisions of the act of October 14, 1940, as amended (42 U. S. C. 1521), such amounts, not exceeding $508,780, as the Administrator determines are required for the expenses of the Office of the Administrator, National Housing Agency, in the performance of administrative and supervisory services relating to the constituent units of said agency shall be transferred, from the funds available for the administrative expenses of such constituent units for the fiscal year 1944, to this authorization for expenditure hereunder and shall be available until June 30, 1944, for all necessary expenses of said Office of the Administrator, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia; printing and binding; purchase and exchange of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals and newspapers (not to exceed $500); preparation, mounting, shipping, and installation of exhibits (not to exceed $500); maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; not to exceed $5,000 for temporary employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for legal or other special services without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of (1) actual transportation and other necessary expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the agency and (2) not to exceed $1,500 for expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the work of the agency when specifically authorized by the Administrator; reimbursement for the actual cost of ferry fares and bridge, road, and tunnel tolls and an allowance not to exceed 3 cents per mile for all travel performed in privately owned automobiles by employees engaged in the inspection of property within the limits of their official posts of duty when such travel is performed in connection with such inspection: Provided, That notwithstanding the consolidation effected by Executive Order 9070, section 7 of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1936, shall continue to apply to administrative expenses of and for the constituent units of the National Housing Agency mentioned in said section 7 and shall also apply to such expenses of said National Housing Agency in connection with the functions and purposes of said constituent units, and none of the funds made available by this act for such administrative expenses shall be obligated or expended unless and until an appropriate appropriation account shall have been established therefor pursuant to an appropriation warrant or a covering warrant, and all such expenditures shall be accounted for and audited in accordance with the Budget and Accounting Act, as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the committee what is the amount of money asked for here for the administration of the United States Housing Authority, since the consolidation of the United States Housing Authority with the National Housing Agency?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It is all consolidated in one item under the National Public Housing Authority, I may say to the gentleman. After the consolidation of those agencies I do not know that there would be any way to segregate it and tell how much of it would go to the activities formerly carried on by the Federal Housing Authority. The agencies have been consolidated, as the gentleman knows, to cut out a great many other agencies dealing in the field of public housing. There is a pretty full statement in the report on it. The figure here of $3,400,000 is to carry out the housing activities.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Is that for the administration alone or does that include the annual Federal contributions?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No contributions are in that. This is the administration. This is what was formerly known as the United States Housing Authority. I believe that is what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is right, and I understand that is principally under Mr. Emmerich.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. So that you have $3,000,000 in this appropriation for purely administrative purposes for the United States Housing Authority?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is right.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. May I call attention to the fact that in addition to that sum for administrative expenses the bill carries for annual contributions the sum of $5,750,000, in addition to the unexpended balance, which I believe amounts to another $5,600,000.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The gentleman means $10,000,000 altogether?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes; about $11,000,000 over all, as compared with $15,000,000 in the current year.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is in another part of the bill, however?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; it is under the Federal Public Housing Authority.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What I was trying to get at was the purely administrative expenses of what is now left of the United States Housing Authority.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: Not to exceed a total of $12,142,200, to be derived from the same sources as the funds made available for administrative expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, and Home Owners' Loan Corporation by the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1943, and from the special deposit account hereinafter mentioned, shall be available during the fiscal year 1944 for administrative expenses of the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration (Executive Order No. 9070 of February 24, 1942), which term and the term "administration," wherever used herein, shall unless otherwise qualified include and apply to said corporations but shall be exclusive of any corporation organized in pursuance of authority contained in the act of May 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 550), and any amendments thereof, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821–833); expenses (not to exceed $7,500) of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of said Administration when specifically authorized by the Administration; printing and binding; lawbooks, books of reference, and not to exceed $1,250 for periodicals and newspapers; rent in the District of Columbia; the immediate purchase of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; payment, when specifically authorized by the Administration, of actual transportation and other necessary expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence of persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Administration; use of the services and facilities of the Federal home-loan banks, Federal Reserve banks, and agencies of the Government, including the use of services and facilities within the Administration; the amounts so derived to be credited upon the books of the Treasurer of the United States in such account or accounts as the Administration may determine, and the Administration in its discretion may utilize the facilities of the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department for the disbursement of funds in or derived from such account or accounts relating to said corporations: Provided, That (1) all necessary expenses in connection with the liquidation of insured institutions, (2) all necessary expenses (including services performed on a force account, contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, protection, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or in which it has an interest, and (3) all necessary expenses (including services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the handling, including the purchase, sale, and exchange, of securities on behalf of Federal home-loan banks, and the sale, issuance, and retirement of, or payment of interest on, debentures or bonds, under the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof: Provided further, That except as herein otherwise provided, the administrative expenses and other obligations of the administration shall be incurred, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of July 22, 1932, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1421–1449), the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1461–1468), and title IV of the National Housing Act of June 27, 1934, as amended (12 U. S. C. 1725–1732): Provided further, That all moneys and funds heretofore deposited in the Treasury of the United States under the last sentence of section 19 of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended (including unexpended balances of moneys appropriated therefrom for administrative expenses), and hereafter all moneys and funds which would, except for this provision, be so depositable thereunder, shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States in a special deposit account and shall be available, retroactively as well as prospectively, for expenditure for all purposes of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, subject to subsections (a) and (b) of section 7 of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1936.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 39, lines 19 and 20, strike out the sign and figures "$12,142,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,310,734, and such Corporation shall be liquidated as provided by section 4 (k) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to the extent necessitated by the reduction of administrative personnel herein required, and the expenses incident to such liquidation shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall not incur for administrative expenses in excess of $833,333.33 for any month from July to December 1943, inclusive, nor in excess of $208,333.33 for any month from January to June 1944, inclusive."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in 1933 Congress created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This Corporation ceased to make any new loans on the 12th day of June 1936. It has, therefore, made no new loans in the last 6 years. At the peak of its business when the making of new loans was discontinued, it had made a little over 1,000,000 loans for a little over $3,000,000,000. That is rather easy to understand in round figures. On the 30th of June 1942 the number of loans had gone down to 811,521, and the amount outstanding was about $1,675,000,000, so that it has been reduced from the original amount by approximately $1,400,000,000. At one time they had more than 20,000 employees. For the next fiscal year they are asking for 3,832 employees.

Let me present to you some figures on the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They did a good job in the emergency because, after all, it was a relief institution and we anticipated that there would be losses. If you will examine the testimony of Mr. Fahey, the Director, you will find that he states that everybody knew that losses were inevitable. So do not be misled by any talk about whether or not there will be more money lost, because money will be lost any way you take it.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is just like any other institution in protecting its assets. If a borrower is in arrears, it has no choice except to foreclose, like a bank or thrift institution. It has foreclosed 156,586 properties. You see that is Uncle Sam foreclosing. It is not one of these grabbing banks, or one of these flinty hearted savings and loan corporations. This is old Uncle Sam, whiskers and all, who is doing the foreclosing, and so we have foreclosed 156,000. In addition, they have on hand another 41,269 properties, so that roughly speaking, out of a million loans made, there have been about 200,000 foreclosures of which we, the people, represented by the H. O. L. C., own 41,000 pieces of property. In addition to that, when the borrowers got into difficulties Congress passed the so-called Mead-Barry Act, in which the loans were extended from 15 to 25 years. Thus, in addition to the 200,000 foreclosures, there has been an extension of time on 251,170 loans.

The average age of these properties when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation made these loans was 17 years. Add 10 years to that, and that makes 27 years, so the average age of the properties they hold at this time is 26 or 27 years. Imagine the competition between those old properties and the new housing now being built, and the great quantity of post-war housing which we are assured and promised under the planning system will be built when the war comes to an end.

Let us take a look at the expenditures. It has been repeated on this floor time and time again, that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation does not cost the Treasury anything. No; but it costs 811,000 citizens something, because these expenditures come out of the citizens. Moreover the ultimate losses will come out of the taxpayers.

For administration expenses since they have been in business, they have had $248,000,000. That is money for the pay roll, for management, for administration since the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been doing business. They have had $248,000,000 administrative expenses. But that is not all. You notice in this bill there is a provision for contracts, fees, and other services and they shall not be considered as administrative expenses, and that means they spent that money for property management and commissions with only a nominal accounting therefore as nonadministrative expense. In addition to the $248,000,000 for administrative expenses, they have expended $91,000,000 for these nonadministrative purposes such as legal fees, legal costs, brokers' commission, management commission, sales commissions and all the other things that go along with the management of a large number of properties.

For this last fiscal year the legal costs were $1,200,000. Attorneys got $2,300,000 outside of the Government, sales brokers got $1,400,000 for selling these properties, and the management brokers got $2,000,000, making nearly $13,000,000 for the fiscal year ended in 1941.

Now, let us look at the losses. On sales of properties they have lost $190,654,000. That is about $10,000,000 short of $200,000,000 in losses. On fees, they have paid into those properties another $37,000,000, so that their cumulative loss is $227,000,000. What is the reserve? I had a difficult time to get at that matter of reserve but we finally succeeded.

When we got through we found that there was not a dollar in reserve. There are no bonds in reserve. The only thing they have in reserve to protect the loss are 41,000 properties, the average age of which is 26 years, and those properties are being carried on the books at book value without depreciation having been taken. That is the only reserve they have. And so Mr. Fahey is eminently right when he says there are going to be inevitable losses. The H. O. L. C. was the emergency operation, and is there any reason why it ought to be continued indefinitely? The law provides that it should be liquidated. The law of 1933 provides that when its purposes have been accomplished, the Board shall liquidate the Corporation, and I propose by this amendment to earmark and restrain their funds in addition to a cut in the funds, so that they will have to start liquidating this year, and then progressively to carry out the entire liquidation.

I do not believe that I am telling any tales out of school when I say that I talked to a high official in the executive branch of the Government only last night, and he has indicated that there are others on the other side of the Capitol who are very much interested in the liquidation of this Corporation, and that they are trying to work out some plan now. If that be true, and it is true, then the proper thing for the House to do at the present time is to give it an impetus, and adopt this amendment and say to Mr. Fahey and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation that it is the policy and desire of Congress that they liquidate expeditiously.

There is no disposition to liquidate. That is the trouble. That is the trouble with bureaucracy. That is the trouble with an emergency bureau, once it becomes entrenched. Once they get entrenched, they do not want to liquidate. They do not want to let loose. Mr. Fahey is now taking over 5,000 pieces of property from the Federal Housing Authority for war-conversion purposes, to convert them, and modernize them, and make them available as defense houses, and so they will dig in a little bit further, and they will be just like the United States Housing Corporation in the last World War.

Mr. Fahey is liquidating that corporation now. From 1918 to 1943 is 25 years. He testified to us in the committee a few weeks ago that only now is he liquidating the United States Housing Corporation from the First World War. While he says in so many words that he wants to liquidate, there is no doubt in my mind that he does not want to liquidate unless we compel him to do so. He wrote a letter to the president of the United States

Savings and Loan League, in which he says:

The newspapers released here recently the following statement concerning the United States Savings and Loan League. "Private lending institutions, its officers said, would take over the mortgage burden borne by Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which has outlived the emergency status granted at its foundation. Signatory officers of the organization were Ralph H. Cake, John F. Scott, W. M. Brock, and Morton Bodfish." If this release is correct, I want to say in the friendly and cooperative spirit which I trust will always obtain between the league and this office, that I consider this action a serious mistake on two counts.

Mr. Fahey then proceeds to set forth his reasons. Can this statement of attitude leave any doubt as to whether or not Mr. Fahey on his own initiative proposes to liquidate the Corporation? He will advance reason after reason, year in and year out, as to why the Corporation should not be liquidated and there is but one way for Congress to procure definite action and that is to mandate the liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation now.

He says:

Contrary to the impression which has been conveyed to some of the lending institutions, such an activity of liquidation would not effect great savings to the Federal Government, but would increase the Home Owners' Loan Corporation's losses, and, in turn, increase the national debt.

Congress authorized the H. O. L. C. to issue more than $4,000,000,000 of contingent certificates. They are all guaranteed as to principal and interest. He talks about the fear that there may be an increase in the national debt, when, as a matter of fact, if we liquidate this Corporation we will retire those contingent obligations, and for all practical purposes be liquidating and diminishing the obligations of the taxpayers of this country. Do not forget that those bonds are guaranteed, both as to principal and as to interest, and constitute a charge against the Nation. If we liquidate the H. O. L. C. the funds derived can then be used to retire the outstanding bonds.

So, from what I can see, I say that Mr. Fahey is not disposed to liquidate the corporation.

I can see many reasons why it ought to be liquidated.

In the first place, Mr. Fahey also runs the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. He makes every building and loan association, every insured institution get rid of its bad real estate. Why should not the Home Owners' Loan Corporation abide by the same rule?

Only recently he got out a regulation compelling insured building and loan associations to divest themselves of real estate. If it is a good rule for others in the country it is a good rule for Mr. Fahey.

There is only one way to liquidate and that is to liquidate. When Uncle John Sherman was Secretary of the Treasury, and the question was being considered about resuming specie payments, they sent a committee down to the Treasury, and do you know what historic answer he gave? He said:

The way to resume is to resume.

You cannot argue with that. In like vein, I say the way to liquidate an emergency agency that ought to be liquidated now is to liquidate. That is the only answer.

Are we going to wait until the war is over? The country is filled with money today. I just had a postcard from a fellow downtown who says if you have got a loan on your insurance policy, even at 6 percent, they are willing to give you the money at the bank and take it at 3 or 4 percent. The very fact that banks are seeking to refinance loans on insurance policies at lower rates is an indication of how abundant money is today and a further indication that this is the time to initiate liquidation of this emergency corporation.

Mr. Fahey said to me in answer to my question that he did not think the thrift institutions of the country could do this. Yet he had made a release to the New York Times and other papers just 3 weeks ago in which he was lamenting the fact that the thrift institutions, savings banks, and mortgage institutions were luring away his borrowers. If he is right on one count, then he is wrong on the other. The only reason they are luring them away today is because the country is so full of money that they do not know what to do with it, and this money wants to get into real estate mortgages, into paper that is represented by property scattered in the 48 States of the Union If we continue the Corporation there is going to be one of two answers. Either we are going to continue to bleed the borrowers or we are going to have to pay it out of the Federal Treasury.

Notwithstanding the case they try to make about losses resulting from selling the assets of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, we are going to have indefinitely larger losses unless we take advantage of the money market at the present time. The money is here. Savings and loan companies have written me from all over the country indicating their interest in this matter.

I know a little about the business of these thrift institutions. Early in life I was taught that the three great institutions which made this a great Nation were the churches, the schools, and the building and loan associations. These thrift societies are the voice of the common man. He owns them. When he becomes a shareholder and pays a few dollars each month, he becomes a full partner in the enterprise. He not only saves his own money but enables himself and his neighbor to become home owners, by their own efforts, without the interposition of the Federal Government. He becomes a community builder and I am proud that years ago I had a humble part in all this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did ask the gentleman from Illinois one day what the building and loan association was paying $25,000 a year for a lobbyist. Will you explain what he is doing for that money?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, the gentleman from New York can ask any member of the Banking and Currency Committee what Morton Bodfish, vice president of the United States Building and Loan League, is doing. He frequently appears before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and if the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], is on the floor, I will ask him whether or not Mr. Bodfish does not beget more confidence from that committee than most anybody who comes before it. He knows his business. He is no lobbyist. He is just serving millions of home owners who are represented in the United States Savings and Loan League. They have the savings—savings of humble citizens. They seek investments for those savings. They would like to take over these mortgages. They would like to put some of their money into them and so serve the useful purpose of taking Uncle Sam out of the mortgage business after he has concluded the emergency. To me it is amazing that anyone should seek to keep the Federal Government in the lending business when funds for all purposes are so plentiful.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BELL. I just wanted to ask the gentleman this question, and I am seeking information: Will there not be a tendency to turn over to the building and loan companies the good loans and to leave the bad loans for Uncle Sam to handle? I am not saying that that will be the case, but I would like to have the gentleman's reply to that question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They have put them entirely on a business basis, as they said. Why do they not put them up in packages, the good with the bad, and sell them that way, just like Mr. Fahey discounts an asset. Of course, as for our solicitude for those who may be in difficulties, as a matter of fact, has not Mr. Fahey foreclosed 200,000 of these people? If anyone feels that a mortgagor should be nursed along, no matter how far he may be in arrears, then we should properly continue the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, empower it to make new loans, provide it with unlimited funds, take over all the home mortgages in the land, and forget about the possibility of bankrupting the country. But Mr. Fahey does not operate that way. The thrift institutions which he insures do not operate that way, because he, as the boss of the Federal Home Loan Bank System, does not permit it. The loans of insured institutions must be current. Bad assets must be liquidated. If Mr. Fahey makes the thousands of thrift institutions do that, why should he not be compelled to operate his own Corporation in that fashion?

I venture the opinion that if the Corporation were in business for 50 years, there would still be loans in arrears.

Should that constitute a reason for the continuance of this emergency operation, now that the emergency is over?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman has pointed out very forcefully and very truthfully, I think, when he discussed this matter a day or two ago that private institutions because of State laws were compelled to foreclose; they could not carry these people in a depression.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Hence the necessity of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Now if we provide for its forced liquidation, speeded-up liquidation, which the gentleman suggests, of these lending accounts, there are some 800,000 of them that will be affected.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. These homes have been saved because of these acts. Turn these accounts back to the private bankers and, as I have heard even some people on the gentleman's side of the aisle say, suppose there comes another depression after this war with further widespread unemployment, will the private bankers be able to carry these accounts through such a period any more than they were in the other depression which brought about the necessity for this action by the Government to save these homes?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the best argument possible for just forever keeping the Government in this business. If we are ever going to get out, we have got to make a start. If this lending agency will make no move on its own part to liquidate itself we must give it a little push.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN I yield.

Mr. SHORT. How can we expect to have any period when average wage rates or general employment will be higher than it is at the present time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We cannot expect it, and this is the best opportunity we shall ever have to liquidate these obligations. It is now or never. Liquidation is really a great service to the Nation. It would be sound preparation for the difficult times that may lie ahead when the war is over and the credit of the country is taxed to the limit by the post-war demands.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. PLOESER. Is not the gentleman from Illinois of the opinion that this liquidation could be brought about this fiscal year if there were a serious and sincere attempt to liquidate, without its having to go further?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely. As it is we have simply reduced their administrative expenses for the next fiscal year, and they would be allowed to continue for some time after that into the following fiscal year. This is a kind of progresssive liquidation and serves notice on the Corporation that Congress wants it done.

If the agency will take no steps to liquidate itself, as I stated before, when everything indicates that they should be liquidated, then the Congress itself must do it for them.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. As a matter of fact there are five-hundred-odd-thousand loans that are liquidating themselves. These loans are paying the Government 5 and 6 percent interest on money the Government is getting for 4½ percent. This earning will take care of the losses on the two-hundred-odd-thousand bad loans.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is a table in the hearings showing that only 6½ percent of these loans, according to Mr. Fahey's own figures, are 3 months or less in arrears. There are thousands of loans that are not current.

Mr. BARRY. That is not the fact.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The figures are in the book.

Mr. BARRY. There are over 500,000 good, sound loans.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know where the gentleman gets his figures, but I do know what Mr. Fahey put in the hearings, and it is there for all to read.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I think that in his general statement the gentleman from Illinois is correct, that the banks do have a lot of money and that they are willing to take over the good properties; but I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in almost every city there are what is known as blighted areas. We have one of these blighted areas in Detroit, over in the old boulevard section. The banks are not willing to go into that old section and take up these home owners' loans that were made on old properties, old houses that are owned largely by workers or people who labor on small salaries. They are so-called undesirable loans. What bank is going to take them over?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why not take them over, the good and the bad together, liquidate those that must be liquidated and get the most out of it at a time when there is the best market we can ever expect for them?

Permit me to summarize the reasons for the step which is here proposed for the liquidation of the Corporation.

The insured thrift institutions of which Mr. Fahey is the directing head are compelled to liquidate bad assets and divest themselves of real-estate holdings. Why should not the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be compelled to do likewise.

Second. The only way to liquidate is to liquidate.

Third. The properties owned by H. O. L. C. and on which loans are carried are aging. Their average age is around 26 years. The longer the H. O. L. C. remains in business, the older these properties become and the smaller the real equity of the Government.

Fourth. The emergency is over and since this corporation was created only to meet an emergency, the logical step to take is to bring about its liquidation.

Fifth. If we fail to take this step, it will be a cue for other agencies of government to continue in business when the need for their continuance has passed.

Sixth. It appears from the records of the Corporation with respect to the decrease in the number of properties held, that left to itself it will require 30 years or more to wind up its business. Shall we duplicate the experience of the United States Housing Corporation which was created in the days of the First World War and which is only now being liquidated?

Seventh. Everybody is agreed, including the Chairman of the H. O. L. C., that losses are inevitable so that prudence and common sense dictate that we should take the losses now and retire from this operation.

Eighth. Liquidation will reduce the contingent debt of the Government since the H. O. L. C. bonds are guaranteed both as to principal and interest. The sale of the H. O. L. C. assets and the transfer of its loans to private institutions which have an abundance of money will enable the Corporation to retire outstanding bonds and so reduce the contingent debt.

Ninth. Never has there been so favorable a market for the liquidation of the Corporation as now and we should take advantage of market conditions without delay.

Tenth. The Corporation will carry 3,832 persons on the pay roll in the fiscal year 1944, and whatever proportions of these are retired will become available to ease the present manpower shortage. It may be argued that the number taken from the rolls will be pitifully small compared with our manpower needs, but no matter how many are involved, it is still a contribution to our manpower requirements.

Eleventh. As the Corporation continues in business, its money balances decline in an amount so that on a percentage basis it becomes increasingly expensive for the Corporation to operate and administer its loans and the property which it now holds.

Twelfth. Sales of its assets and the retirement of bonds will make additional funds available for the purchase of War Savings bonds and stamps at a time when the Treasury is doing its utmost to develop sales of such bonds to carry on the war effort.

Let me add one last thought. It has been repeatedly stated on this floor that the Federal Government bailed out the bank and thrift institutions when they were holding distressed loans and thereby served such institutions as well as the distressed home owner. Let me observe that when the H. O. L. C. took over these thousands of mortgages the thrift institutions of the country scaled down the value of these mortgages by more than $200,000,000. They, too, took substantial losses as a result of this operation. Finally let me observe, as I listen to the charges and allegations that the thrift institutions of the country are but a greedy, flinty, hard group of exploiters, that those which operated under the State laws of the country were compelled by law and not by choice to foreclose mortgages where they were in arrears beyond a certain time. This should be answer enough to the unsupported accusations which have been leveled against them from time to time. I sincerely hope that the membership will strike a blow for sound government by adopting the pending amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, let us try to straighten out one point right away. As pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY], a moment ago, there were, as of December 31, 1942, 586,776 loans which are being paid out on schedule; which confirms his statement.

When this matter originally arose, it was my intention on the floor of this House to oppose the continuance of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I had had letters from several loan groups. I have, myself, had some dealings with the matter. I thought it was the propitious time to make this liquidation which the gentleman from Illinois has suggested. But there is one unfortunate thing that happens to a new member of the Appropriations Committee. If he tries to be conscientious, he will go through the hearings. I read page by page with rather poor eyesight the entire 1944 hearings, then I went back and read all those hearings for 1943 which related to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Not being completely satisfied, I then went to the officials of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and asked them for other and particular information that I might use on the floor of this House in an effort to straighten out matters that concerned me very deeply and which did not appear to me to be going right.

I desire in this time to give the House the benefit of this information. Let me say at the outset that I was at the time the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was organized a director, officer, and stockholder, in what was probably the largest mortgage institution in my State handling this type of loan. Our company was very happy to turn over to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation thousands of dollars' worth of paper which we regarded as poor and which, upon my motion, my company had written down on its books by a very substantial amount. I am very happy to see the Home Owners' Loan Corporation make pay what we could not make pay.

May I say that the way to liquidate H. O. L. C. is by an orderly process, not by a rout. I think it can be done orderly and not in the pattern of a panic. If there is to be a move to liquidate, it should not be done by cutting off the appropriation for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation but should be accomplished by specific legislation through the Banking and Currency Committee, the proper policy-making committee to handle the matter. Bear in mind there have been no new loans since January 12, 1936. That is in itself liquidation.

Let me give you some particular points, first as to the amount of the loans and advances. The peak was $3,481,000,000. At the end of the present fiscal year the balance will be $1,472,000,000. That is 57-plus percent. It lacks only a few million dollars of being a 60-percent liquidation on the total amount advanced. That, Mr. Chairman, is orderly liquidation.

Then as to property acquired, the gentleman from Illinois has correctly stated that 194,000 pieces of property were acquired by foreclosure. I again remind you that on June 30, 1942, but 35,190 of those were in the hands of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, another fact indicating that they were going through the process of liquidation. But let me remind you that in the last few months people feeling that the ownership of property was a hedge against inflation have started paying up loans that otherwise were in distress and the rate of liquidation has dropped to almost nothing. Three out of five liquidations that are started now are stopped by the borrower paying up and becoming current. At the end of this fiscal year it is anticipated there will be only 23,477 houses on the list.

The gentleman from Illinois suggests that the head of this organization, Mr. Fahey, should take the medicine that he has prescribed for the building and loan leagues when he requires them to sell property. The fact he has sold houses and brought the number down from 194,000 to 35,000 indicates he has long been taking his own medicine.

May I say that liquidations reached their peak in 1937 when there were 68,000 until they were down to 2,808 in the last fiscal year.

Now, as to personnel. At the peak there were 21,000 employees in this agency. There are contemplated by this next bill only 3,822. That, Mr. Chairman, is orderly liquidation.

Finally, as to administrative expenses, we spent at the peak $35,000,000 per year. We will spend during the next fiscal year $10,000,000. I suggest also that is a step in the right direction.

What about this administrative expense? Is it too much? If it is, here is an agency that I submit you can trust. In the year 1941 this Congress gave it $22,000,000 and they spent $19,786,745. For the fiscal year 1942 they were allotted $19,400,000 and they spent $15,501,609. In the last 5 years they have turned back out of a total of $125,000,000 the sum of $9,000,000 to the Treasury of the United States. They will not throw away any of this $10,000,000.

Liquidation is being accelerated at the present time, and I give you certain indices by which you may judge. The first index is this: Total collections from borrowers. Those of us who have been in the business of making monthly payment loans know that as the loan progresses and becomes older the amount of interest goes down and the payment on principal builds up. If H. O. L. C. should receive $80,000,000 a year, year after year, the amount of principal payment would be increasing annually. But that is not the whole story. These H. O. L. C. borrowers paid $80,000,000 in 1936, but at the present time they are paying what? One hundred and ninety-seven million dollars last year and more than $200,000,000 during this fiscal year. I say that is liquidation because the great bulk of that is not for interest. It is for principal. The great increase is for the repayment of these loans and the rapid liquidation of the Corporation. I can give you those figures year by year to anyone interested. They are available.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Before the gentleman concludes, and I do not want to divert him from his intended remarks, will the gentleman make some observations for the benefit of the House as to what in his opinion will be the result if there is a forced liquidation of the mortgages owned by this agency and the probable damage to the Federal Government?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I will try to do that. Let us take the second index as to delinquencies. Of 851,000 loans in 1940, 500,000 were paid on time. When the number of accounts dropped to 780,000 in 1942, 586,000 paid on time. So, with 71,000 fewer accounts, 76,000 more were paying. That is a change from an actuarial standpoint of 25 percent and is a good indication.

As to delinquencies, there were 851,000 accounts. Two hundred and fifty-three of those moved into extended loans, which is under a provision passed by this House to make possible the holding of home owners' property. Those were the worst loans. They represented the bottom of the financial barrel in this transaction. But with 197,000 extended in 1940, 85,324 are now paying on schedule. Yes; there are 231,986 of these extended loans as of December 31, 1941, and 146,327 of those, the poor loans, the bottom of the barrel, are now being paid right on schedule every month.

I say to you that is a pretty good indication that this Congress passed a wise piece of legislation.

One more index in reference to the cure for delinquencies. During the fiscal year 1942 there were 701,000 new cases in delinquency. I do not want to mislead the House. Those were not 701,000 different loans. Sometimes a person got delinquent time after time, but nevertheless there were 701,000 red tickers that showed up in the collection register and 701,000 times they were corrected. Today, as the gentleman from Illinois very fairly pointed out, only 6 percent of all the loans are seriously in default.

Now, another matter: take the rate of acceleration of liquidation. The President asked us a while ago to pay up debts as a part of the program against inflation. I call your attention to the fact, however, that these people who are borrowers from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation were supposedly all in the lower financial brackets and in financial distress; yet 100,000 of those people have accelerated and increased their payments within the last year.

Now, I wish to take up this question of losses. I recognize there have been losses. As I said, as an official of a mortgage company, handling this type of business, I marked down paper on our own books that we subsequently passed to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. We anticipated that there would be losses. The Congress anticipated there would be losses. It was said on the floor of this House that the losses upon this $3,000,000,000 of H. O. L. C. loans would be a total of $1,000,000,000. I say to you that I have studied the balance sheet of this Corporation as carefully as I know how. You will find it on page 1045 of the hearings. I have asked H. O. L. C. for operating statements, the profit-and-loss statement, for their balance sheets. I have all sorts of special figures. Upon my responsibility, I say to you that as carefully as I can analyze it, as honestly as I can say it to you, the loss today is about $72,000,000. I stake my reputation as a person who has some financial responsibility when I say that, because, while it is true that this Corporation has taken some $220,000,000 of losses on real estate, at the same time, its operating statement shows $155,000,000 worth of earnings. I do not have to tell any Member of this House that when you have a deficit on one side and income on the other you have a right to balance it and come out with a net-loss figure of about $70,000,000. That is our loss to date, and nobody can successfully deny that.

So where are we now? I want to give you a sample of what I considered in reaching my decision on this item. Put it on results in your own district. Analyze it from the standpoint of your own home town or county. What does it mean to you? I have taken my district, my home State. In my State 2,462 loans were made by this Corporation for $5,417,000. As of December 31, 1942, 1,880 were still on the books, but they owed $2,286,678, demonstrating the same sort of liquidation that is going on all over this country. One thousand three hundred and seventy-eight of those loans are being paid regularly on schedule. Of the bad loans, 434 were extended; and 148 of those got in arrears. That is not bad for slow paper. We acquired 197 properties in my State; and 193 of them, all but 4, have already been sold. I say to you, that is liquidation.

There are 14 building and loan associations in my State at last report. They had total cash in the bank in that report of $513,000. How can they acquire $2,286,678 worth of paper? It cannot be done, except by what? By issuing building and loan stocks for the Federal Government to take in exchange for its perfectly good bonds. That is what will be the next step in this picture. I say to you, as persons trying to watch the public money, that you ought not to take that step. You ought to keep these home-owners' loan bonds which the Government has advanced. You ought not to take building and loan stock from any individual company in payment for them, and that is what you will have to do if you liquidate too rapidly.

What will be the effects if we liquidate it? I am not as pessimistic as the gentleman from New York. I do not think that 800,000 loans will immediately be foreclosed by the persons who might take over this paper because I know when you have made an installment-payment loan to a borrower as long as that borrower comes in every month with a check there is nothing you can do about foreclosing. You are going to allow that loan to run to maturity. So I say that in the great majority of cases there will be absolutely no difference, but in some cases there will be. Every time a loan gets into distress—every time that little red tag shows up to tell you there is a loan that bears watching—that individual company may not be able to do what the Federal Government has done. It may not be able to cure 701,000 cases of delinquency within a single year. When that happens and people become discouraged and get further and further behind, you know the rest of the credit story as well as I do.

Who wants this? Well, there is a trust company in Cleveland that says that this ought to be turned back. That very company took $22,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in exchange for bad paper it had. It took $19,000,000 from the H. O. L. C. in exchange for additional bad paper. Now, with money in its till, it wants to grab off some of this prime paper that now belongs to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

I say that that is not the way to do it. The little company I was in sold our paper and were glad to sell it to the Federal Government, and we are not going to take it back because a burnt child fears the fire.

But let me finally give you the fact that of all the loans that were extended, half of all these loans that were bad are now being regularly paid, and 50,000 of them are paid down now to where the home owner has more than a 30-percent equity in his home. I submit to you that the way to handle this problem is to continue the orderly liquidation that has been started.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] refer to the fact that the only reserve this Corporation held was repossessed or foreclosed real estate which had not been depreciated by a single dollar. The gentleman has a mortgage company of his own. Would the gentleman regard that method of doing business as good, sound business dealing in his own mortgage company? In other words, if the gentleman's own company took back large quantities of real estate, would the gentleman feel it to be sound business not to depreciate that real estate over a period of years?

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Without getting into a controversy with my friend from Illinois, who is a very fine, studious and serious Member of this House, that is not the only reserve possessed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to be sure, has set up what I regard as a very poor system of establishing a reserve. It sets aside out of its current income $40,000,000 a year. I do not think H. O. L. C. should do it just that way. I think it should take this money out of earnings or not at all.

Yes, there have been losses, but they are not substantial. They are now but $72,000,000, and that is a figure vastly below what anyone dreamed was possible when this organization was started.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. To be equally divided between the two sides?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The Chair will handle that all right.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A number of years ago, more years than I now like to count, I went home from a college oratorical contest, stating to my freshman roommate that I would like to hope that sometime I might be able to speak half as well as the gentleman from New Mexico, CLINT ANDERSON, did that night. Today I join in the appreciation expressed by the Members of the House when the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] concluded his remarks. I have known him for many years and I have the utmost admiration for him today as I had that night when he walked off with the college oratorical contest.

Mr. McCORMACK. And I suppose the gentleman on that occasion profoundly respected his penetrating logic, the same as he expressed it today.

Mr. CASE. I profess profound respect for his ability to deal with an audience, but today I must question the premise on which most of his argument was based, due, I think to his not having the exact text of the amendment before him. I shall try to point that out so clearly that I think it will appeal even to the gentleman from New Mexico himself. I was impressed by the appeal of the gentleman from New Mexico for orderly liquidation, but his argument was based on the assumption that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] calls for an immediate and complete liquidation of the poor loans as well as the good loans. That is not the situation. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois provides for a reduction in the amount appropriated from $12,100,000 to $8,300,000, and then provides that such Corporation shall be liquidated as provided by law "to the extent contemplated by the reduction of administrative personnel herein required, and expenses incident to such liquidation."

In other words, the proposal of the gentleman from Illinois is not a proposal for a complete liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. It is a proposal for an orderly liquidation of it. It proposes a reduction of one-third in the administration expenses allotted with corresponding liquidation. The testimony all through debate has been that some 72 percent of the loans of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are not in default. If there is to be an orderly liquidation, if the Government is to make the best possible showing in its H. O. L. C. operations, then it must dispose of its paper at a time when the market is good, when it may even get a premium for some of its paper, and that market is now. There is nothing in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois that requires liquidation of the bad paper. It merely provides for a liquidation proportionate to the reduction in administrative funds allowed. That will permit the liquidation of whatever paper the directors of the H. O. L. C. think is most salable, selling it when the market is good. That is the only time there will ever be a chance for the Government to make any profit on the good paper and getting the maximum return from the poorer paper. And, of course, selling the paper will not change the terms of the payment contract nor change its value.

I approach this question a little bit differently from the two gentlemen who have spoken. I was on the other end of the financial picture in 1933 and 1934. I had received a loan on my home from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I have never been a director of a building and loan corporation. I appreciated what that loan meant to me and my family at that time, and if we were in such a crisis again, I would be in favor of the Federal Government acting, but I call attention to the fact that today the Home Owners' Loan Corporation cannot make a single new loan. Its authority to make any new loans expired in 1936, so that all we have before us is the question of whether or not there shall be an orderly liquidation of the Home Owners' Corporation, to the extent provided by the reduction of the funds, making it at a time when we can sell some of this paper at a premium.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. If this amendment carries, it simply means that the taxpayers get penalized to the extent of approximately $300,000,000 by the savings and loan associations, banks, insurance companies, and other mortgage lending institutions for rescuing them from extreme difficulties—if not bankruptcy—7, 8, and 9 years ago. It is the old story of biting the hand that fed you.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARRY. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the effect of the passage of this amendment will be a raid on the Treasury to the amount of $300,000,000?

Mr. BARRY. I said it would amount to that. I say if these loans are liquidated now, and the mortgage companies do not take the sick loans, but leave them to be liquidated by the Government, then it will cost the Government approximately $300,000,000. To try and take advantage of your Government after it has nursed you back to health or saved your life is not what one would expect from American mortgage lending institutions. But that is precisely what the institutions supporting this legislation propose to do.

They say forget that we once held these mortgages which were then in default for 2 and 3 years. Forget that we had no alternative except foreclosure in a rapidly sagging real-estate market. Forget that you bailed us out with good, sound Government securities. Forget that you spent tens of millions of dollars to nurse these mortgages back to health. Forget that you foreclosed on several hundred thousand homes that could not be saved and took a substantial loss. After all, it is only the taxpayer's money, and he is used to being a sucker. With all the tremendous sums being appropriated for the war effort, what is a mere three hundred million more?

These lending institutions know that the five-hundred-thousand-odd mortgages they would like to grab will offset considerably the loss that may be anticipated on the two-hundred-thousand-odd mortgages now kept alive by reason of the Barry-Mead Act, which I sponsored in 1939. They are not concerned about what will happen to those two-hundred-thousand-odd families when they are are again in the hands of private owners. They are simply impelled by an uncontrollable desire to raid the H. O. L. C. portfolio at the expense of their Government and the taxpayers. They know that H. O. L. C. eventually will liquidate itself, and, judging by the past, it will make the cost of its existence less expensive to the taxpayers as its end approaches.

If it is to be liquidated now or in the immediate future, it should be done so that the distressed mortgages are taken as well as the sound ones, and that the distressed ones are protected in some measure from unnecessary foreclosures by the lending companies, especially during the war period.

I, therefore, urge that the pending motion be defeated.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, these statistics of past years are very confusing. These historical recitations of the activities of previous years are interesting and somewhat sentimental. My committee helped set up this agency. Many of us would now like to discontinue it. There are other agencies of this sort that should be liquidated. We gave the H. O. L. C. $200,000,000 to get going, in 2-percent bonds, and because they could get 4½ percent or more for their loans they often declared they would probably not lose any money. That is what we heard for several years. Now we find they have probably spent the $200,000,000, which is represented by the foreclosed properties that they own.

This House must have some courage in these matters. Now is the time to liquidate real estate while the market is good and money plentiful. We know that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has not always been too patient with its mortgagors. They claim that if they dispose of the loans that they now have it will cost $54,000,000. If they should sell the real estate that they own, it would be at a loss of $53,000,000, or a total of $107,000,000. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BARRY], who just addressed you, attempted to assure you that it would be at a loss of $331,000,000. To get at this amount of loss they state that if we let them go 5 years more they will have had $148,000,000 profit on the operating expenses. What an argument to prove a loss. That does not need further comment. The $107,000,000 is probably stretched to the limit of their imaginations.

Let us liquidate now and lose only $107,000,000. Five years later the real-estate market may be in a slump and we may lose five times as much.

What worries me is that the chairman of this committee is quoted in the hearings as saying that we should hold on to the good loans so as to be able to finance the bad ones. Why do you not let them take more new good loans so as to make a real profit? At their rate of interest they could easily get them. Should we change the law to let them increase rather than decrease their activities? Certainly we should not let them compete with private lending agencies by subsidy from the Government.

We set up many organizations and gave them authority to sell 2 percent bonds and loan out the money at 4½ and 5 percent. These would be in the red if they did not have that subsidy. Now these agencies are seeking good loans. They are actually competing with the banks and we are now hearing protests from the bankers. We favored the formation of these agencies with the full understanding that they would not take loans without assurance that the necessary credit could not be procured at the banks. I am sorry to read that the chairman of this committee said, "Hold on to those good loans so as to take care of the losses." If we are pursuing that policy, we will never get anywhere toward liquidation.

This amendment does not provide for immediate liquidation. It will simply give it impetus, as the sponsor of the amendment stated. It is a gradual withdrawal of funds to carry on, forcing a gradual liquidation. This is fair and proper. I do not want my Government to keep on taking loans simply because we can get money at 2 percent and loan it at 4½ percent and further compete by virtue of this subsidy. It is not a nice way to hide our losses. The emergency has passed. Do not let these fervid sentimental addresses influence us too much. They refer to the past unfortunate era. "I could also bore for water." But my tears must not roll during this session of the Congress over conditions that do not now exist. We have the plain duty to liquidate now and repeal many of the emergency operations placed on the statute books.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] have both pointed out to you that this amendment does not provide for the entire liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I want to say that is the weakness of the amendment. The fact of the matter is that, that when all of this talk was going on about liquidating this Corporation, we discussed it in the subcommittee, and not once have we had a single proposal where these building and loan associations have come in and offered to take over all of these loans. It is true that the amendment does not call for the entire liquidation of the Corporation, but what does it provide? Simply for the partial liquidation, and what part of that is going to be liquidated. In other words, this amendment will force the Corporation to liquidate a portion of the Corporation, and the only thing they can get these building and loan associations to take is the good loans, and then at the end of the year when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation comes back to us for an appropriation we have to appropriate more money for them to finance the bad loans.

The beginning of this whole thing was probably because of the fact that the building and loan association—and I will give them a lot of credit for seeing the danger of this—wanted to take over these good loans when they saw they were beginning to pay. There was a resolution passed by the United States Savings and Loan League in Chicago in 1942, in which they commended the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for the fine work they did when they first started out. Then they go on to say:

> With the steadily increasing improvement in economic conditions throughout the country, we feel that the time has now arrived when private capital is in a position to assist in and expedite the liquidation of the Corporation's affairs by purchasing and locally servicing a large proportion of the Corporation's present mortgage holdings.

They say they want to assist by servicing a portion. They do not say all. This resolution was sent to me by one of my constituents who is executive vice president of one of these associations. I wrote to him and told him we had discussed that matter in the committee, and that whenever these associations arranged a plan or proposed a plan to the committee or to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation whereby they would take over all of the obligations of the corporation and finance them and we could arrange for protection of the home owners, then I would go along with him. He wrote back and said:

> I have gone over your letter very carefully and I think, as you, that if the Federals take over this task that they should take it over in toto, for the reason, as I see it, that there would be no economy so far as the Government is concerned or the Loan Corporation in turning over current assets.

In other words, he agreed with my position. Let me tell you something that has happened—and these loan associations have a right to do this—but they have gone in and canvassed some of those who have borrowed from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They did not canvass those who were behind in their payments. They did not canvass any of these bad loans. The inducement they gave was not a lower rate of interest, it was a longer period and a larger loan. And in passing I may say to my friend from Illinois, who knows that I do not want the Government in business any more than he does, that some of these concerns that have been working this are in his own State, and through their methods throughout the country these associations have deprived the Home Owners' Loan Corporation of about $40,000,000 in interest alone on their good loans—that is the interest which they could be using to finance these bad loans.

I hope the members of this committee will not adopt this amendment at this time, because I do not believe it is sound financial policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I find myself opposing the distinguished and capable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], but I do. I have lived in Brooklyn, in New York City, all my life. I have witnessed there during the past 10 years what this Corporation has done for the people in that and the neighboring communities. While the case for this Corporation has been stated much better than I can state it, let me briefly review for you the operations of what is perhaps the largest home-financing program the world has even seen, an operation that in the short space of 3 years effected over 1,000,000 loans to the extent of three and one-half billions of dollars, and in a period of less than 7 years since the termination of its lending operations has, as the gentleman from Illinois has so well pointed out and as is supported by figures advanced by those who oppose his amendment, liquidated to the point that it has in an orderly, efficient, businesslike manner; liquidated upward of 55 percent of its bonded indebtedness, disposed of over 60 percent of the properties it took by way of foreclosure; has rehabilitated the mortgagors presently in its portfolio to the point that it has; a Corporation that in that period advanced to the savings and loan associatons who now want to skim the cream upward of $1,000,000,000, which savings and loan associations today are indebted to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the sum of about $120,000,000 for advances made to them under the authority of the original Home Owners' Loan Act and the amendments thereto. This Corporation has accepted and has steadfastly observed the mandate of Congress and has proceeded to liquidate with a speed and dispatch the like of which no other governmental operation has done.

We should not only consider the taxpayers of the country for the loss they would sustain by a speedy and precipitous liquidation—and make no mistake, the liquidation of an operation of this size within 1 year would virtually be a forced liquidation—we should consider the effect upon the morale of the 800,000 home-owning mortgagors who would be faced with a return to the same type of private financial institution and mortgage supervision with which they were faced in 1933. I say to you members of the Committee in all seriousness that instead of our implying condemnation toward the operation of this Corporation we should rather today extend to them our vote of confidence and respect that they have, in a most efficient, businesslike manner completely rehabilitated, completely preserved, over 800,000 home units in this country. When the historians of the future point to the operations of this agency for the preservation of the American home and family during this great decade, they will say I am sure it was the greatest single influence that has preserved the American home and the American way of life.

I hope and I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be voted down.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I admire the eloquent gentleman who just preceded me; he is always on the alert for his New York constituents; but his eloquence is of a little different brand than the eloquence of the figures I am about to present. The figures speak eloquently of the losses sustained in the State of New York on sales of this property between July 1, 1940, and June 30, 1941. Here are the figures for New York State: Properties acquired, 3,763; properties sold, 5,029. Sales price, $22,267,785; capital value, $37,746,034. The losses on these transactions total $15,478,249; the average loss per property is $3,077.80; and the selling expense—listen to this—the selling expense and broker's commission amounted to $1,448,085. The total loss amounted to $16,926,334. This makes an average loss per property of $3,365.75.

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. Not just now.

It is about time that the taxpayers of this country had some relief from this kind of financing. Some folks would have you believe that this agency is easy to get along with. Many of my constituents have found them cruel, cold, and heartless. They have been arbitrary and officious. I am for the Dirksen amendment—it is another step in the direction of putting our own house in order.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that there are only 46,000 of these mortgages that are in default more than 3 months and that that default of 3 months is something that is largely due to the machinery of bookkeeping in the organization?

Mr. BENDER. There is no question about that statement at all.

Mr. KEOGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEOGH. The gentleman went into great detail to give some figures with respect to the operations of this Corporation. Does the gentleman think that there is any private syndicate or private individual who would take the 35,000 pieces of property the Corporation now owns and pay any more than private purchasers in an orderly manner have paid over the years? Does the gentleman think so, as a matter of business?

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, if we are going to take this tremendous loss from month to month and year to year, we had better take it all at once and without shedding crocodile tears. No business would survive for very long if the same condition prevailed. We are throwing good money after bad.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As a matter of fact, Mr. Fahey testified before our committee time and time again that the losses were inevitable. That is the word he used. He knows it and everybody else does. Yet they would hold onto and nurture this thing on the basis of a declining balance, while the cost of doing business goes up year after year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield the 4 minutes allotted me to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that may be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think we all have in mind that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was set up as an emergency measure to prevent the forced liquidation of homes during the depression and that it has served a very worthy purpose. When it was set up in 1933 we all anticipated that the Government would take a large loss. It was referred to as a relief measure, and it has always been considered a relief measure. We never anticipated a profit through the operations of the H. O. L. C. We have always anticipated a loss, and I think Mr. Fahey and his organization should be commended for keeping the loss down to as small an amount as they have.

I am sorry to see the controversy this afternoon apparently take sides as between the building and loan associations and the banks on the one side, including the insurance companies, and the H. O. L. C. on the other, because at no time during the operation of H. O. L. C. could not any of these financial institutions purchase these obligations under any terms which were satisfactory to the home-loan bank in the district in which they operated.

My worthy friend, the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], has on two or three occasions this afternoon indicated that there would be forced liquidations if this amendment was adopted. The gentleman from New Mexico referred to forced liquidations, the two gentlemen from New York referred to forced liquidations or forced sales. The impression might have been created on the floor that these thousands of pieces of property would flood the market all of a sudden and that the prices would be forced down and the present owners lose tremendously.

Mr. Chairman, I have been in contact with a man in the Government, one who has the confidence of every member of the Banking and Currency Committee and deserves the confidence of every Member of the Congress, and he told me as late as last night that the purposes of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation have been served and that it should be liquidated as soon as possible. The gentleman from New York [Mr. KEOGH] yesterday admitted that the liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is a very salutary objective if it were practical. So the whole thing turns on whether it is practical at the present time.

We have set up home-loan banks throughout the United States—all within this one roof—the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. They are all in the same building; they are all in the same house; they are all living together; they were set up to make it easy for banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and Federal savings and loan associations to get advances on real-estate paper; they were set up for purposes, if necessary, of advancing loans to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Now, in the liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, do not think for a moment that we are going to throw these homes on the market all at once. This amendment should be passed to force an orderly liquidation through the home-loan banks of this Nation.

These properties will be turned over to the home-loan banks and the personnel of the home-loan banks today, and they have virtually nothing else to do because the banks are not doing much, could handle the entire matter. It is not practical for the banks to discount paper with them at the present time. These employees have little or nothing to do and they could liquidate the H. O. L. C. loans just as orderly and with the same limitation on time and the extension of time and opportunity as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation does today. All Mr. Fahey has to do is to contact his own board, of which he is chairman, and say, "I want an advance from the home-loan banks of this Nation to liquidate the H. O. L. C.," and every bit of this paper, good and bad, will be transferred to the Federal home-loan banks for orderly liquidation under the terms of the insurance and the mortgage as it now exists. These Federal home-loan banks are authorized to extend these mortgages under even more favorable terms than the mortgagors have today. They are authorized to reduce the interest, they are authorized to continue even beyond the limits of the Barry-Mead amendment the terms by which these mortgages might be amortized.

What is more desirable than that we turn over to the war effort, if we want to put this on a war basis, the 3,800 employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and let the employees in the Home Loan banks throughout the Nation function as the liquidators of this corporation, thereby not only giving the home-loan banks an opportunity to return to the Treasury $5,000,000 each of capital which the Treasury has subscribed to the Federal home-loan banks, but also save the taxpayers the administrative cost of employing 3,800 people in Washington and elsewhere. For these reasons impetus should be given to this movement which is recognized as essential by every sound-thinking man in the Government, including the gentleman to whom I have referred. I wish I might quote him directly, but I am not going to. He has had more to do with this situation than any other individual in Washington.

I would not have taken this attitude had he not assured me that it could be done in an orderly manner with a saving of hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars to the taxpayers by turning the H. O. L. C. over to the Federal home-loan banks for orderly liquidation.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. Is it not a fact there are millions of dollars not only in the hands of banks and trust companies all over this country but in the hands of individuals whose owners are unable to loan them and would be glad to invest in these securities?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Too much idle money is lying around. The banks, insurance companies, building and loan associations, and Federal savings and loan associations do not know where to go to invest their money; yet we have this agency continuing in competition with private industry.

What is the result? Instead of the depositors in banks and the subscribers to shares in building and loan associations getting a fair return on their deposits, in some instances they are getting nothing on their deposits and in many instances are not getting more than 1 percent because the Government is in direct competition with them. Mr. Chairman, you do not hurt anyone but the depositors by continuing these agencies in competition with private industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, one of the prime purposes of this amendment is to get the Government out of business and out of competition with private enterprise. A further purpose is to rid the Federal pay roll of a lot of people with whose services we can very well dispense at a saving of millions of dollars to American taxpayers.

I rode home last night with a man who heretofore has been in the real-estate loan business. He told me he had no business now. He said the Federal Government with its cheap money and through the agency of the very kind of thing we now propose to liquidate had put him out of business.

I have recently talked to many people in my district who have been paid outstanding loans on which they have been drawing interest, and they can find no opportunity to invest their money in loans on real estate for the reason that agencies like this have put them out of business and rendered them unable to make profitable investment of their money.

When this proposal is made, there are some here whose heads are transformed almost into fountains of tears and they want to revert to a period when money was hard to get and when this Corporation was set up virtually as a relief agency. But conditions now are wholly changed. When do you want to sell, anyhow? Is it not when somebody wants to buy, and when the purchaser has money with which to make the purchase? People are looking for just the sort of investment that will be made available by the liquidation of this governmental agency.

It has been said that there are some bad loans and that they probably cannot be sold. The average man, even though he wants to sell his horses, would not expect to sell a sick horse.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I understood the gentleman from New Mexico to say that in the case of the average loan the owner had about one-third equity. That is a salable loan. They should not take losses because banking concerns and building and loan associations will pay for such loans.

Mr. JENNINGS. They are eager to get these loans. Now, in this floodtime of industry, when everybody has work who wants to work, it would seem to me that a person who owns a piece of property should be able to make substantial payments on the mortgage, and that there should be but few foreclosures.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROWE. Is it not a further object of this amendment to recapture to Congress the direction of liquidation rather than to leave it in the hands of the men in charge?

Mr. JENNINGS. That is probably a good reason for adopting this amendment.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENNINGS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How does the gentleman feel on the subject of private corporations taking over the farm mortgages throughout the country which are paying only 3½ percent? Would the gentleman favor doing that?

Mr. JENNINGS. I am in favor of getting the Government out of business. It has been in competition with its citizens long enough, to the eternal loss and destruction of the taxpayers of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, first I want to tell you what the situation is with reference to these loans that are in arrears. The only loans in arrears are 41,000 loans running up to 12 months and 3,300 that are in default more than 12 months. Of the total of 1,700,000 loans, only 5½ percent are in arrears more than 3 months. Every one of those loans is probably in arrears at least 15 days and maybe 30 days less than they are reported to be, because the way this organization does business their machinery takes so long to work that they report loans in arrears that are really not in arrears. Of the 230,000 loans reported in arrears, 185,000 are less than 3 months in arrears.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BARRY. Does not the gentleman know that the 230,000 loans he says are only 3 months in arrears have already been spread 10 years by the Barry-Mead Act, and they now have 25 years in which to pay out?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I understand that, but these loans have been reduced about 30 percent now and most of them are good mortgages that are salable; all except a very few. There may be 50,000 mortgages that may have to be liquidated by the organization. There is $39,000,000 worth of real estate they have taken over that they have not gotten rid of.

There are about $39,000,000 of real estate that they have to get rid of. Their problems are entirely restricted to that 5½ percent of their total loans, which come to less than $50,000, and that $39,000,000 of property that they have on hand. It is absolutely ridiculous for us to be carrying $12,000,000 a year to look after that property, and to look after those loans. They could be serviced by the banks in the localities, or by individuals, who would take the mortgages over without any extra expense to these organizations. Why we should not take advantage of our opportunities to do that, and put this thing on a business basis, I cannot understand, and I do not believe that anyone can explain. If we go ahead and do this and require them to turn over these mortgages which are all good enough now so that people could carry them and which are practically all—all except 5½ percent—right up to date, there would not be any reason at all why we could not get by with it all right. They could liquidate this thing and not have to have a pay roll of over a million dollars a year while doing it. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FITZPATRICK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 4 minutes.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; I yield to the lady from Illinois for a brief question.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. The point is made that there ought to be an orderly liquidation. I would like to understand the amendment. They have a whole year in which to liquidate it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Yes; but a year is not a sufficient length of time. They should be permitted to do it in an orderly way, as they are at the present time.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. Is it not true that any piece of paper now owned by the H. O. L. C. can be picked up by any loan association any time the purchaser desires?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is correct. When the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was first inaugurated, they made loans to 1,017,821, in the amount of $3,480,000,000. At that time foreclosures in this country were at the rate of 1,000 per day. Our Government not only went to the rescue of the home owners but it went to the rescue of the building and loan associations, together with the banks throughout the country. At that time they claimed at least 95 or 98 percent of all of these mortgages taken over by the H. O. L. C. would have been foreclosed if the Government had not intervened. Yet today the building and loan associations and the banks throughout the country want to take over the good loans now held by the H. O. L. C. and have the Corporation retain the bad ones, notwithstanding the fact that the Government took over all loans, good and bad. Today, these loan associations are looking for good paper of about 500,000 to 600,000 mortgages now in fine condition.

You will find in the committee hearings that there have been 250,000 loans extended under the Mead-Barry amendment from 15 to 25 years. Without any question these mortgages will be foreclosed if this amendment is adopted, and the taxpayers of this country will lose anywhere from $250,000,000 to $450,000,000. What for? To turn over to the building and loan associations of this country those sound mortgages, now held by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. As it has been stated, the number of foreclosures in 1937 were 68,880, and in 1941 there were 11,498 foreclosures, while in 1942 they were down to 2,808. From these figures you can see that the H. O. L. C. was gradually getting into a fine financial condition and they would eventually be able to liquidate in an orderly way, which they are doing at the present time. I hold in my hand a bill introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] now before the Banking and Currency Committee to liquidate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

I am in favor of liquidation providing the building and loan associations throughout the country will take over all the mortgages now held by the H. O. L. C. and not just 60 percent, which is the amount of the good mortgages. I am going to ask my friend whether or not it would be more advisable to take over the entire amount of mortgages.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As a matter of fact they made overtures to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to take all these in, and bid them on the market, but Mr. Fahey would not agree.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman get a statement from the building and loan associations that they will take them all over? If he will, I will support it, but at the present time to make the record clear, they are willing to take over only the sound loans. Because of the number of good loans taken over by the building and loan associations, the H. O. L. C. has lost about $40,000,000 in the past year.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed by the committee, but there remains 4 minutes for the gentleman from Virginia. If he does not consume them the gentleman's request will be put. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Last Friday night I listened with great interest to the radio address delivered in Pennsylvania by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, and I assure you his remarks were worth listening to.

He stated that the program of the Republican Party is to take care of all of the workers of our country. He went into great details as to their plans, stating their purpose is to help and do justice to the workers of the country, also the farmers, the small business men, and last but not least the capitalists, and they in turn would all work in cooperation as one big family, and after the war every man and woman seeking work would find a position. He certainly pictured the country as a paradise. However, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, 5 days later the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], a member of the Republican Party, offers an amendment to liquidate the H. O. L. C., and from the best information I can get if this amendment is adopted, 200,000 to 300,000 home owners will lose their homes through foreclosure and the Government will lose from $300,000,000 to $450,000,000. Surely that is not in keeping with the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], because if this amendment is adopted two or three hundred thousand workers in this country will lose their homes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In regard to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], about the building and loan companies offering to take over the assets of the Corporation, I think at one time they did make an offer to take over all the assets of the Corporation and issue back to the Government shares which the Government would finance for 10 years.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman is correct. I understand the building and loan associations have here in Washington a lobbyist receiving a salary of $20,000 per annum. His job is to send out circulars to the different building and loan associations throughout the country requesting them to contact their Congressman and try to have him support the Dirksen amendment so that the good mortgages will be turned over to the building and loan associations and banks; which loans the Government bailed out at the time the H. O. L. C. was established. If this is a sample of the Republican Party's program I cannot see that it agrees with the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] in his recent radio address. I hope this amendment will be defeated and we will save the homes of many Americans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN) there were ayes 141 and noes 136.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The request comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The request comes too late. The Clerk will read.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. There was so much confusion in the room that the vote as announced by the Chair was not heard. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair repeat the vote at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote was announced, and the Chair rather hesitated before announcing that the amendment was agreed to. The Chair will restate, for the information of the gentleman, the vote was 141 yeas and 136 noes.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL PUBLIC HOUSING AUTHORITY

Salaries and expenses: In addition to the amounts available (which shall be transferred to this authorization) for the payment of the administrative expenses of the Federal Public Housing Authority in carrying out the provisions of section 201 of the act of September 9, 1940 (54 Stat. 872), the act of October 14, 1940, as amended (42 U. S. C. 1521), and the acts of March 1, 1941 (55 Stat. 14), May 24, 1941 (55 Stat. 197) and December 17, 1941 (55 Stat. 810) relating to war housing, including temporary shelter, and in carrying out the provisions of sections 3 of the acts of June 29, 1936 (40 U. S. C. 423 and 433), relating, respectively, to the operation and maintenance of the projects transferred pursuant to Executive Order No. 7732 of October 27, 1937, and of the projects transferred pursuant to paragraphs 1 (g) and 6 of Executive Order No. 9070 of February 24, 1942, not to exceed $3,400,000 of the funds of said Authority derived from its operations under the act of September 1, 1937, as amended (42 U. S. C. 1401), shall be available for all necessary administrative expenses of said Authority, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for legal or other special services, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; payment, when specifically authorized by the Commissioner, of (1) the actual transportation and other necessary expenses and not to exceed $5,000 in connection with payment of $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence to persons serving, while away from their homes and without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Authority and (2) expenses of attendance (not to exceed $5,000) at meetings or conventions concerned with the work of the Authority; printing and binding; purchase of lawbooks, books of reference and periodicals; and photographing equipment.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this paragraph is vague and nonspecific as to the amount of appropriation, and ask to be heard on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will indicate the point of order more particularly.

Mr. MONRONEY. I believe I will have to be heard on it. The language in the bill apparently appropriates——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate the language to which he directs the point of order?

Mr. MONRONEY. I make the point of order that the language contained in line 3, page 46, is nonspecific as to the amount, and I ask to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, in making this point of order, I am merely trying to carry out what is in my understanding the obligations of the Congress in making these appropriations. I take this paragraph as an example of abuses that have grown up under a system where Congress loses the authority to control the purse strings of the governmental agencies. It is my claim that this paragraph is not in order, since the appropriation contained therein is not specific as to the amount it seeks to appropriate. The only figures shown in the bill purport to appropriate "not to exceed $3,400,000 of the funds of said Authority."

I hold that this is vague, indefinite and misleading, and nonspecific, in that the actual intent of the appropriating committee is to give the agency a total of $12,400,000. But, in fact, even this amount is not the amount that they are permitted to expend by the language of this paragraph.

On pages 13 and 14 of the report accompanying the bill is this language:

The committee has recommended an authorization of $3,400,000, which is a reduction of $100,000 under the Budget figure. In addition to the sum herein made available the Federal Public Housing Authority will have access to $9,000,000 for administrative expenses in connection with funds for war housing heretofore provided by allocations from emergency funds for the President or by appropriations made available by the Congress.

I hold that this amount of $9,000,000 to come under the interpretation of precedents as follows:

CANNON'S PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, VOLUME 7, PAGE 228 (1936)

1156. Reappropriations of unexpended balances to be in order on appropriation bill must specify amounts and from what previous appropriation remaining, and be for similar objects.

On January 30, 1915,[1] the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the following paragraph was read:

"Aeronautics: The sum of $1,000,000 is hereby reappropriated, out of the total unobligated balances of all annual appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and made available for aeronautics, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for procuring, producing, constructing, operating, preserving, storing, and handling aircraft and appurtenances, maintenance of aircraft stations, experimental work in development of aviation for naval purposes, and such other aeronautical purposes as the Secretary of the Navy may deem proper."

Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois, made a point of order against the paragraph.

The Chairman [2] rules: "The point of order is made by the gentleman from Illinois. It appears that it has heretofore been decided that a reappropriation of an unexpended balance for an object authorized by law may be made on an appropriation bill for a similar object."

On February 12, 1897, the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole when the paragraph was read:

"The Postmaster General is authorized to apply to the payment of the salaries of letter carriers for the fiscal year 1897 the sum of $23,000, being an unexpended balance of $13,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for street letter boxes, posts, and pedestals, and an unexpended balance of $9,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for package boxes."

On February 14, 1907, when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, this proviso was read:

"And provided further, That the unexpended balances under appropriations 'Provisions, Navy, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1905 and 1906,' are hereby reappropriated for 'Provisions, Navy, for fiscal year ending June 30, 1908'."

It was held that that was in order, but in this case the reappropriations asked for do not point out from what appropriations this reappropriation is asked, nor the specific amounts; nor does it appear that this appropriation is for a similar object. Therefore, the Chair, differentiating these decisions which hold that a reappropriation is in order, is constrained to arrive at the conclusion that when the reappropriation is asked for it must specify from what appropriation, heretofore made, the reappropriation is asked, and the specific amounts to be reappropriated. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, it will be argued, I am sure, that the report satisfies this requirement, but with that I cannot agree. We have here an appropriation bill making the appropriation for "salaries and expenses," and in the much involved language and citations carried in the paragraph, even a Philadelphia lawyer cannot tell what amounts we are giving to this agency unless referring to the report.

Suppose, for example, it was the desire of this House to reduce the agency by 50 percent of their funds of $12,400,000. It would be impossible to reach any of these $9,000,000 in funds so being transferred, reappropriated, or given to the agency.

Throughout the precedents run the same theme that Congress should make specific appropriations in its bills and dating back to Jefferson's time it has been recognized that indefinite appropriations transgressed good governmental policy.

HINDS' PRECEDENTS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, VOLUME 4 (1907)

SEC. 4032. The creation and history of the Committee on Appropriations, section 3 of rule XI

Reference to the establishment of the system of specific appropriations.

(7) On March 12, 1828, Mr. J. S. Barbour, of Virginia, precipitated a discussion of a proposition that the appointment of the disbursing and accounting officers of the Treasury should be taken from the President and be lodged in the House. This discussion (1st sess., 20th Cong. Journal, pp. 406, 436; debates, pp. 1954, 1963, 1971, 1998) reviewed somewhat the usages of the Government and attributed the habit of making specific appropriations to a suggestion of President Jefferson. This suggestion was probably contained in the following paragraph of his first message, December 8, 1801 (see vol. I, p. 329, of Richardson's Messages and Papers):

"In our care, too, of the public contributions intrusted in our direction it would be prudent to multiply barriers against their dissipation by appropriating specific sums to every specific purpose susceptible of definition; by disallowing all applications of money varying from the appropriation in object or transcending it in amount; by reducing the undefined field of contingencies and thereby circumscribing discretionary powers over money, and by bringing back to a single department all accountabilities for money, where the examinations may be prompt, efficacious, and uniform."

On February 3, 1830, the Committee on Retrenchment made a report recommending that the useful practice of specific appropriations be applied to the contingent fund of the two Houses. (Rept. No. 150, 1st sess., 21st Cong.)

Further, I wish to call attention to the Chairman to the language in this paragraph and to point out that in no way is any ceiling or limitation as to the amount this agency can spend on its administrative salaries and expenses, either in Washington or in its several regional offices. Bear in mind that these appropriations mentioned herein are not used for the management or operation of these defense housing properties on the sites of the buildings. All are for the Washington overhead and their regional office overhead.

The language I object to is as follows:

Salaries and expenses: In addition to the amounts available (which shall be transferred to this authorization) for the payment of the administrative expenses of the Federal Public Housing Authority in carrying out the provisions of—

And so forth. It enumerates specifically the act of October 14, 1940. Reading section 6 of that Lanham Act we find this language:

SEC. 6. Moneys derived from rental or operation of property acquired or constructed under provisions of this act shall be returned to the appropriation authorized by this act, and shall be available for expenses of operation and maintenance including administrative expenses in connection therewith, and the unobligated balance of the moneys so deposited shall be covered into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year as miscellaneous receipts.

Thus, I believe you can see, that all the rentals from these defense housing projects, amounting soon to millions of dollars, will become available, without limitation by any act of Congress, for the payment of overhead or expenses incurred in connection with the "holding company" activities of the Federal Public Housing Authority.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, reading this section 6, and the language of the paragraph in the appropriation bill, appropriating "in addition to the amounts available—which shall be transferred to this authorization—for the payment of the administrative expenses," and so forth," you can readily see that this is in no way anything but a blank check plus the $3,400,000 which is specifically spelled out in the bill.

The purposes of sound legislation require, Mr. Chairman, that such vague, indefinite, and nonspecific paragraphs as these in appropriation bills be discontinued, so that Members of the Congress may have before them, in "showcase" style, if you please, the amounts of money that are being appropriated for the salaries and expenses of these agencies.

I respectfully ask that the Chair sustain this point of order and permit the Appropriations Committee to offer a substitute, limiting this agency to the amount that it intends it should have.

[1] 3d. sess., 63d Cong., RECORD, p. 2750.

[2] James Hay, of Virginia, chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Very briefly, if the Chair will permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The language is the customary language which is used in appropriation bills where we authorize the use of funds already under the control of an agency. The language authorizes the use of $3,400,000 of the funds of this agency. If there is anything indefinite about it it would be very easy to strike out the words "not to exceed." These words are superfluous anyway.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Vriginia. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. This paragraph does make an appropriation of $12,400,000; does it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; but it authorizes specifically the use of $3,400,000 for this specific purpose.

Mr. MONRONEY. But how does Congress know, Mr. Chairman, how much we are actually appropriating unless some Member happens to pick it up in the report or in the Budget recommendation?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the language is sufficiently specific on this point. It simply states "$3,400,000 of these funds may be used"; and they cannot use any more than that.

Mr. MONRONEY. But they will use $12,400,000.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order ought to be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes a point of order against language appearing on page 46 of the bill, particularly the language in line 3 reading:

Not to exceed $3,400,000 of the funds.

This language involved a reappropriation. The point is made that the amount to be reappropriated exceeds the amount of funds in the hands of the agency.

The proposition advanced by the gentleman from Oklahoma has been passed upon previously. Among other rulings was one by Speaker Gillett in which he announced the proposition that a reappropriation of an unexpended balance may be amended by a proposition making a direct appropriation for the same purpose.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Annual contributions: For the payment of annual contributions to public housing agencies in accordance with section 10 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U. S. C. 1410), $5,750,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1943: Provided, That except for payments required on contracts entered into prior to April 18, 1940, no part of this appropriation shall be available for payment to any public-housing agency for expenditure in connection with any low-rent housing project, unless the public-housing agency shall have adopted regulations prohibiting as a tenant of any such project by rental or occupancy any person other than a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise again to ask the chairman of the committee a few questions about this $5,750,000. As I understand, the total amount for annual Federal contributions is $11,600,000. Is that correct?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. That is based on construction amounting in terms of dollars to $448,000,000. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the average annual Federal contribution rate that is paid out of the Treasury to cover that?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know the average; I know the maximum.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. But I want to know the average annual contribution rate upon which this appropriation is based.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I cannot give the average. I am not sure whether it is in the hearings or not; I do not have it at hand, at any rate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not believe there is any such thing as an average annual rate, because it shifts from $6,000,000 to $15,000,000. It is the difference between the ascertained economic rent and what a family in one of these dwellings can pay. What the rate may be and what the family might be able to pay varies from place to place; it shuttles up and down.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It does not shuttle up and down like that. These contracts are made, I believe, for a term of 5 or 10 years; I have forgotten which.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The average annual contribution that the gentleman refers to will vary every time a group of houses is completed. Every time new construction is undertaken the amount of the contribution changes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the rate, then; what is the annual contribution rate upon which this request is made?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will permit, it varies in different sections of the country. In some sections they have an economic rent of $4 a room, and in others it is $1 a room. I could not give the gentleman the figures because there are none on that basis. There are figures in the record showing what it is for the different localities.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. What is the average, now, for all the projects in this $448,000,000 construction; that is what I want to get, the average rate?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not sure that the average rate either on a unit basis or for the entire country has been calculated. I know I have not seen any figures along that line.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The appropriation is not arrived at in that manner, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio. I do not think therefore that anyone has ever even thought of the complicated process of trying to figure out an average, or ever thought that to do so would be very helpful. We have authorized a general amount for annual contributions, and those amounts are appropriated as and when they are needed and the amounts are figured on the basis of the best information we can get as to the differential.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. These annual Federal contribution contracts are written and there must be some average figure for all the projects. This is rather important.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I cannot give the gentleman the information he seeks, I am sorry. It did not occur to the committee that those figures were particularly important.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The disparity would not be particularly important anyway because these funds are earmarked for contributions and if they are not needed they revert to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

For salaries and expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia, of the Securities and Exchange Commission in performing the duties imposed by law or in pursuance of law, including employment of experts when necessary; contract stenographic reporting services; purchase and exchange of lawbooks, books of reference, directories, and periodicals; not to exceed $1,000 for the purchase of newspapers; travel expenses, including the expense of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Commission, at meetings concerned with the work of the Securities and Exchange Commission; garage rental; foreign postage; mileage and witness fees; rental of equipment; operation, maintenance, and repair of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; and purchase of rubber gloves; $4,000,000.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, the reading clerk got past the matter of the securities and exchange section and I ask unanimous consent to go back to that section for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois has an amendment in advance of the amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I proposed to offer an amendment but I withheld it.

Mr. DISNEY. Does the gentleman intend to offer it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DISNEY: Page 48, line 3, insert a colon, and add the following: "No part of this appropriation shall be used to promulgate or enforce any rule or regulations known as the proposed rule or regulation F-9 and F-10, and providing in substance (1) the engineers' reports shall be mandatory, (2) require the disclosure of the cost of purchase price, and (3) an abridgment of the right to appoint an agent, all with reference to the sale of oil and gas royalties and lease under the jurisdiction of the Oil and Gas Division of the Securities and Exchange Commission."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order against the amendment until I have an opportunity to examine the language of the amendment.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, down in my State where men make a living from the royalty business and the sale of oil and gas leases, this matter has reached an almost revolutionary state. There are just as many campaign managers against us down there as there are men engaged in the oil and gas business and royalty business. Regulations F–9 and F–10 are what has excited them. I could not properly represent my district unless I called the attention of the Committee to the situation. I realize, of course, that legislation in the nature of substantive legislation is not proper in an appropriation bill, but this is sometimes the only way to get at these things. These bureaus use their nuisance value to drive people out of business, which is exactly what is going on down in my country and in the other oil States which you gentlemen represent.

One of the things that is required under this F–9 and F–10—not yet put into force—I would not be frank with the Committee if I did not tell you that—is that an engineer's report shall be mandatory before an oil or gas lease or royalty can be sold or offered for sale at a public offering. An immense number of documents have to be filled out before the most trivial lease or royalty could be sold. The object is to prevent fraud, but fraud is often really operated by the department against the legitimate businessmen.

The next extraordinary thing that is proposed in these two documents is the requirement that they must advise exactly what the property costs before they can sell it. A new innovation in American institutions is the spectacle of a bureau taking that power; that is, the power to require one before selling to advise the buyer the cost price of the article or subject matter being sold except large public issues of stocks or bonds. Of course that drives these smaller business men out of business.

This procedure is the only way to get at this matter involved in these two documents. Of course, unless we pass some inhibition against their being placed in the regulations, these features will be put in the regulations and become the law of the land, to the complete exclusion and the putting out of business of those men who make a living in that way.

Another thing is that these orders require, even though the agent shall operate only within the State, that the Bureau hopes to direct supervision over who the agent shall be and prescribe rules for his conduct. I have never seen bureaucracy run so rampant as in the Securities and Exchange Commission, especially with reference to this matter and the so-called proxy rule. I was taken by surprise when the Dirksen amendment was not offered to dispose of the proxy rule of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Let me give you this illustration. I was talking the other evening with a man high in the councils of the Government and with another gentleman now in private business of importance who has been a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission. They were raising veritable hades about the way the Securities and Exchange Commission was handling things. I said, "I have sometimes almost come to the stage of voting to abolish the Securities and Exchange Commission and place its functions in the Federal Trade Commission or Commerce." "Oh, no," they both said. One of them, as I told you, was formerly a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission. "No; don't do that. That is not the proper way to do it. Refuse to let them have the money to operate this way."

I inquired, "What is the trouble down there?" They replied, "The thing is being run by a lot of men down in the divisions who want to increase their authority and make themselves more important and more powerful."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I continue to reserve my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. I have placed this matter before you just as it is. This little bureau, the oil and gas division, composed of three or four of the nicest fellows who ever lived, have acquired a thirst for power that makes any chronic alcoholic blush with shame, and they are going to continue to do that.

Good citizens, men in whom you would repose confidence, whom you would accept as social and business friends, are being pushed and crowded out of a legitimate business down in those oil States.

You heard me a few weeks ago tell you that we are running into a national oil shortage. Under the power these men in the bureaus have assumed, the drilling of wildcat wells is tremendously hampered by the restrictions that are placed around the legitimate operation of that business. Men do not endure those things forever. They finally quit and go into some other business. Leases and royalties have to be routed to Washington and go through all types and kinds of red tape, and businessmen wind up finally so disgusted not only with the business in which they are engaged, curbed as it is, but with their Government itself. Nobody can dodge the blame. The blame rests right here in the Congress.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Is it not true that in some instances it would be absolutely impossible under any circumstances to furnish information about the property you are about to sell, for the simple reason that perchance it has never been studied by any living character?

Mr. DISNEY. Of course, and who ever heard in America, except in sundry bureaus, of your being required to state publicly in the offering sheet how much the property cost you? You do not do that when the profit motive is involved, and we still operate under the capitalistic system.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am in thorough accord with what the gentleman has said. I proposed here yesterday that the S. E. C. be transferred to the Department of Commerce so it will have a little stability, a little bit better direction, and a little more seasoning for some of these young fellows who see so much on one side and not on the other.

Mr. DISNEY. What became of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is legislative in character, and could not be offered here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I think the amendment is so indefinite it would be impossible for the Chair or anyone else to know whether this is a limitation on anything or what it limits. The gentleman says the funds herein are not to be used for the purpose of enforcing certain orders known as so-and-so and so-and-so. Even after listening to our friend, to whom we always listen with pleasure and profit, those wayfarers who, like myself, are not versed in the parlance of the Securities and Exchange Commission are not able to determine what the amendment means.

Mr. DISNEY. Why not take a chance on it?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not like to take a chance.

Mr. DISNEY. You are taking no chances.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. My experience has been that when we legislate in haste without knowing what we are doing, and we often do that, we do not get very far. I think that on its merits this ought not to be considered now, but aside from that, it is subject to a point of order, and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. DISNEY. May I inquire when such a matter could be considered? That is where the futility of these things comes in.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. There is a legislative committee of this House that set up and established the Securities and Exchange Commission. It is a splendid committee, headed by the distinguished gentleman from California, who succeeded our distinguished Speaker, who helped to write this law. I am sure the doors of that committee are open to my friend any time he wishes to enter.

Mr. DISNEY. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment puts a limitation on the use of the funds appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The Chair is ready to rule.

The appropriation under consideration involves $4,000,000 for salaries and other expenses of the Securities and Exchange Commission. A lump sum is thus appropriated. The practice has grown up of undertaking to limit these lump-sum appropriations by preventing expenditures for particular purposes. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] undertakes to limit this appropriation by providing that no part of this appropriation shall be used to promulgate or enforce the three rules and regulations mentioned in his amendment. The Chair holds that the amendment constitutes a limitation and overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia) there were—ayes 161, noes 98.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY

For the maintenance and operation of properties under title I of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Authority Act, $12,000: Provided, That all receipts derived from sales, leases, or other sources shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States monthly.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAGNUSON: On page 53, line 14, insert a new title:

"NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING COUNCIL

"For all salaries, expenses, including post-war planning research, there shall be appropriated for the National Resources Planning Council the sum of $415,000."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph on the ground that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that it is not in order at this point of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment at this point although I appreciate that it is technically subject to a point of order. However, I would feel somewhat derelict, as would other Members I know, if we did not make the record clear at this time regarding this body. Of course, the Committee on Appropriations knocked out the entire appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board. I stated the other day that many of us deplored that fact. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] stated to the committee that the main reason for denying this group the appropriation was that they were conducting a lot of duplicate work with other departments. It is true that there is a certain amount of planning in every department of the Government, and it is also true that there had never been a clearinghouse for this work. I happen to know, and I know some other Members who appreciate the work of this Board. I know something about the work that the Planning Board has done, and my amendment does not call for the full amount asked. This would merely set up a skeleton organization to continue the work. It seems to me that it would be false economy on the part of the House to cut out a board of this kind and deny this. I think we should set up some comprehensive scheme for not only planning at this time, but for post-war planning.

In the field of jobs planning alone we will spend millions of dollars after this war is over for the returned soldiers and sailors to guarantee them jobs, and it seems to me that we should have somebody to do that, and no one as yet has questioned the integrity of the fine work that this National Resources Planning Board has undertaken and done. They have done a studied, intelligent job, and it has been a source of research for Members of the House and members of the committees of the House. I offer the amendment at this time so that the House may know that the appropriation for this Board was stricken out entirely. It seems to me that it is false economy, and the country should know it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am a member of the subcommittee, and I voted against cutting out the Board.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, may I express my agreement with the idea that the gentleman from Washington is presenting?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the people of this country ought to know that there has been a body working on planning, whether we disagree with its findings or not. I have not yet found anyone on either side who will criticize the fine work this Board has done.

Mr. TABER. The work of that Board has been useless and it has been a menace to the country.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am glad to have the gentleman express his opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Did the gentleman read the RECORD today?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Did the gentleman read any part of my remarks? If he had, he would have found that I was against it.

Mr. MURDOCK. In general, I am in favor of the gentleman's proposition, although it may be subject to a point of order now, and I want to go on record as being against the deletion earlier of a similar appropriation. If there ever was a time in the history of America calling for careful planning for national safety, that time is now.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for having reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon the point of order?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment to insert a new title in the bill, as follows:

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING COUNCIL

For all salaries, expenses, including post-war planning, research, there shall be appropriated for the National Resources Planning Council the sum of $415,000.

The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no law warranting this appropriation. No law has been pointed out to the Chair, and the Chair is aware of no statute that would authorize the appropriation. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: For all salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration, including the expenses of maintenance and operation of medical, hospital, and domiciliary services of the Veterans' Administration, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting war veterans," approved July 3, 1930 (38 U. S. C. 11–11f), and any and all laws for which the Veterans' Administration is now or may hereafter be charged with administering, $117,677,000: Provided, That not to exceed $3,500 of this amount shall be available for expenses, except membership fees, of employees, detailed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to attend meetings of associations for the promotion of medical science or for the betterment of insurance practices and conventions of organized war veterans: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available also for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including traveling expenses; examination of estimates of appropriations in the field, including actual expenses of subsistence or per diem allowance in lieu thereof; furnishing and laundering of such wearing apparel as may be prescribed for employees in the performance of their official duties; purchase and exchange of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; for passenger-carrying and other motor vehicles, including purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of same, including not more than two passenger automobiles for general administrative use of the central office in the District of Columbia; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to utilize Government-owned automotive equipment in transporting children of Veterans' Administration employees located at isolated stations to and from school under such limitations as he may by regulation prescribe; and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to expend not to exceed $2,000 of this appropriation for actuarial services pertaining to the Government life-insurance fund, to be obtained by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as he may determine to be reasonable; for allotment and transfer to the Federal Security Agency (Public Health Service), the War, Navy, and Interior Departments, for disbursement by them under the various headings of their applicable appropriations, of such amounts as are necessary for the care and treatment of beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration, including minor repairs and improvements of existing facilities under their jurisdiction necessary to such care and treatment; for expenses incidental to the maintenance and operation of farms; for recreational articles and facilities at institutions maintained by the Veterans' Administration; for administrative expenses incidental to securing employment for war veterans; for funeral, burial, and other expenses incidental thereto for beneficiaries of the Veterans' Administration accruing during the year for which this appropriation is made or prior fiscal years: Provided further, That the appropriations herein made for the care and maintenance of veterans in hospitals or homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration shall be available for the purchase of tobacco to be furnished, subject to such regulations as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall prescribe, to veterans receiving hospital treatment or domiciliary care in Veterans' Administration hospitals or homes: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers and sailors, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888 (24 U. S. C. 134), as amended, for those veterans eligible for admission to Veterans' Administration facilities for hospital or domiciliary care: Provided further, That the Administrator is hereby authorized to employ medical consultants for duty on such terms as he may deem advisable and without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for the purchase directly from sources authorized by the common carriers of printed reduced fare requests for use by veterans when traveling at their own expense from or to Veterans' Administration facilities.

No part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of any site for or toward the construction of any new hospital or home, or for the purchase of any hospital or home; and not more than $2,500,000 of this appropriation may be used to repair, alter, improve, or provide facilities in the several hospitals and homes under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration either by contract or by the hire of temporary employees and the purchase of materials.

For printing and binding for the Veterans' Administration, including all its bureaus and functions located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $200,000.

Pensions: For the payment of compensation, pensions, gratuities, and allowances, now authorized under any act of Congress, or regulation of the President based thereon, or which may hereafter be authorized, including emergency officers' retirement pay and annuities, the administration of which is now or may hereafter be placed in the Veterans' Administration, accruing during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made or in prior fiscal years, $493,000,000, to be immediately available.

For military and naval insurance accruing during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made or in prior fiscal years, $21,458,000.

Adjusted service and dependent pay: For payment of adjusted-service credits of not more than $50 each and the quarterly installments due to dependents of deceased veterans, as provided in the act of May 19, 1924, as amended (38 U. S. C. 631–632, 661–670), $125,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

National service life insurance: For transfer to the national service life insurance fund, in accordance with the provisions of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, on account of payments of benefits in excess of the reserve of the policy in case of death, or for premiums waived in case of total disability, in cases where the death or total disability of the insured shall have been determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be the result of disease or injury traceable to the extra hazards of military or naval service, and to reimburse the national service life insurance fund for payments made therefrom when recovery of such payments is waived by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs under the authority of section 609 (a) of said act, $250,000,000, to be immediately available.

Hospital and domiciliary facilities: For hospital and domiciliary facilities, $4,557,000, to reman available until expended: Provided, That this amount shall be available for use by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, with the approval of the President, for extending any of the facilities under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Administration or for any of the purposes set forth in sections 1 and 2 of the act approved March 4, 1931 (38 U. S. C. 438j): Provided further, That not to exceed 3 percent of this amount shall be available for the employment in the District of Columbia and in the field of necessary technical and clerical assistants to aid in the preparation of plans and specifications for the projects as approved hereunder and in the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses, field office equipment, and supplies in connection therewith.

Total, Veterans' Administration, $887,017,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for hospitalization or examination of any persons except beneficiaries entitled under the laws bestowing such benefits to veterans, unless reimbursement of cost is made to the appropriation at such rates as may be fixed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL: Page 60, line 19, after "$887,017,000", insert "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes, except for cooking purposes."

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have just offered is in the appropriation bill for the independent offices for the present year. It was put in the first bill back in 1931. The object was to make sure that the patients in the veterans' hospitals should be permitted to have butter instead of oleomargarine. That provision of law has been in every appropriation bill from that time until this. Now, this bill is brought in with that particular provision stricken out, without any explanation in the report as to why it is stricken out. My object is to have it reinstated.

There are about 65,000 patients in the veterans' hospitals, or there were last October. About 5,000 of those are tuberculosis cases, and of the others about 35,000 are neuropsychiatric cases, making about 40,000 of the 65,000 patients who are especially deserving of the very best kind of food, in order to protect their health as far as possible. Every other patient is entitled to equal consideration. That was the object of putting that provision in the bill in 1931.

At this time there is a scarcity of butter, and General Hines, in his appearance before the committee, offered that as an excuse for feeding the patients oleomargarine instead of butter. As a matter of fact, we are producing just about as much butter this year as usual, about 1,750,000,000 pounds.

Thirty percent is reserved for the purposes of our armed forces; 10 percent, or about 170,000,000 pounds, has been set aside for lend-lease operations. About 130,000,000 pounds are to go to Russia and the remainder to Britain and others of the United Nations. Neither Russia nor Britain want oleomargarine. That leaves approximately 1,000,000,000 pounds of butter for the civilian population of the United States.

There is one sure way to increase the supply of butter and that is to encourage the dairy people out in the Northwest, who produce 50 percent of all the butter and more than 50 percent of all dairy products, to produce more cream and permit the manufacture of more butter. That is the way to do it.

There is no quicker way or easier way to discourage those dairymen than to take up at this time, when it is so desired to have unity for all practical purposes, on the floor of the House in particular, and throughout the country, this oleomargarine question and tell the farmers that the Government is going to take the butter away from hospital patients and feed them oleomargarine. Some 3,400 of those patients in the veterans' hospitals at present have been brought back from Guadalcanal, New Guinea, and Africa, suffering of wounds and other disabilities. Unless this amendment shall be adopted, the Government is going to take butter away from them and feed them oleomargarine. It seems an outrageous treatment of our soldiers.

In the district I represent, the farmers are having difficulty in maintaining the production of dairy products. They are short of help and machinery. The action of the committee, in promoting the use of oleomargarine and restricting the use of butter, is particularly demoralizing and discouraging to the dairy industry.

On behalf of the patients in the hospitals who need nourishing butter—on behalf of those patients who have come from Australia, Guadalcanal and Africa, those patients who have been accustomed to the use of butter, I, and all other veteran patients in Government hospitals, ask that you shall vote this amendment back into the law, with the hope that it will remain there at least for the duration.

There is another side to this. Previously when this matter has come before Congress it has always been urged that it is a matter of economy to feed the patients in the various hospitals oleomargarine, because it costs less than butter. That is a mean and cheap form of economy. One way to increase the supply of butter, one way to do it, would be to give to the dairy farmer who produces butterfat a price which would permit as much profit per pound of butterfat as the oleomargarine manufacturers get per pound of oleomargarine. Guarantee cost of production and a reasonable profit and provide farm help and facilities, the dairy farmers will increase butter production.

I ask you to put this amendment back into the bill on behalf of war veterans in Federal hospitals and also on behalf of those farmers in the Northwest who are struggling under difficulties to increase the supply of all dairy products, including butter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Of course, no one has said or would say to the veteran that he could not have the very best that is obtainable any time, any place. This Congress would not say that; least of all, would the Veterans' Administration say that.

Without going into the question, which would be immediately controversial, about the merits or demerits of oleomargarine or any other butter substitutes, I might say that one could present here the very highest hygienic and medical authority which would say that there are many fats that can be used that are just as nutritious, when they are fortified with the appropriate vitamins, that would be just as good for the human body as butter. I do not say that——

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No; not now. In order not to get into any argument, I withdraw the statement.

Mr. HULL. You might give me a chance to ask one question.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HULL. Would the gentleman advocate the abolition of the dairy cow and the initiation of oleomargarine as a great health savior to the American people?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. No, I would not do that. The committee would not have deleted this amendment except for the fact that General Hines, than whom the veteran has no better friend in the United States anywhere, anxious and solicitous for his welfare, told the committee, on page 254, that he wished to have this language deleted because there were certain instances in certain cases where he could not get butter, and that in those cases he would like to have authority to use oleomargarine. Where he could get butter he would use butter, but where he could not get it, he ought to be permited some flexibility in connection with the use of substitutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. The gentleman, of course, has no way of promising anything. I should like to say to the gentleman from Virginia at this time that in taking this action we are not setting any precedent for the future, that this is only for the duration.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. This is only for this bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if he lived out in my State he would be lucky to have even oleomargarine in these times.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; and if he happened to be a laborer in Mexico he could get beef every day and all the eggs he wanted.

Mr. HINSHAW. Precisely; and all the butter, too.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not know about the butter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were—ayes 80, noes 109.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that many of the members of the Committee make it a habit to go to veterans' hospitals from time to time, visiting the patients and perhaps examining the condition of the physical plants. These hospitals are visible signs of the country's appreciation of the patriotic service rendered by the men who have served in our various wars who need medical and nursing care.

I happen to be less interested in paint, plaster, furnaces, and roofs, important as they are, than I am in the actual care that is being given the men.

With the increased need of nurses for active war duty, the veterans' hospitals and the other hospitals caring for veterans have shared in the problem caused by a general shortage of graduate nurses. I shall not go into this matter at the moment as I anticipate giving the House before long something in the nature of a report of this nursing shortage and to discuss the ways now in progress and under consideration to increase the actual number of nurses and to take up the slack generally.

The Veterans' Bureau has been very cooperative and forward looking and its nursing service has not hesitated to make use of new methods, even though some of these have seemed revolutionary to certain of the Government departments.

One of my reasons for speaking to this section of the bill is to emphasize the fine attitude of the Bureau in its efforts to meet the needs of the hospitals under its jurisdiction. In addition, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the recently resigned head of the nursing service of the Veterans' Bureau, Mrs. Mary A. Hickey. Only those closely connected with the Veterans' Bureau can know the beauty of her long and faithful service to the men of our many forces. With unusual wisdom she saw that the heavy burden of war would bring dramatic need for reorganization and increased responsibility. She resigned her position in order to make it possible for a younger woman to take up the work she has so conscientiously performed and carry it into new areas created by all-out global war. I feel certain that all of you join with me in hoping for Mrs. Hickey many years of happy memories of the days of joyous consecration to the welfare and the comfort of our Veterans' Administration. Even so do I know that you extend to her successor, Miss Gwen H. Andrew, congratulations and all possible good wishes for her in the very heavy task she has had the courage to undertake.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I know of nothing controversial in the remainder of the bill. I have conferred with the gentleman from Massachusetts. I wonder if it would be satisfactory to consider the remaining sections of the bill as having been read for amendment, they to be printed in the RECORD, and to be open to any amendment any Member may care to offer?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the remaining sections of the bill be considered as having been read, that they be printed in the RECORD at this point, and that amendments may be in order to any of these paragraphs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The remaining paragraphs of the bill read as follows:

SEC. 102. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission, with the exception of the Chairman so long as the office is held by the present incumbent, and the Commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission shall be at the rate of $10,000 each per annum.

SEC. 103. No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay the salary or wages of any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penal clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law.

SEC. 104. Where appropriations in this act are expendable for travel expenses and no specific limitation has been placed thereon, the expenditures for travel expenses may not exceed the amount set forth therefor in the Budget estimates submitted for the appropriations.

SEC. 105. Where appropriations in this act are expendable for the purchase of newspapers and periodicals and no specific limitation has been placed thereon, the expenditures therefor under each such appropriation may not exceed the amount of $50: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to the purchase of scientific, technical, trade, or traffic periodicals necessary in connection with the performance of the authorized functions of the agencies for which funds are herein provided.

TITLE II—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. (a) Appropriations for the fiscal year 1944 available for expenses of travel of civilian officers and employees of the executive departments and independent establishments shall be available also for expenses of travel performed by them on transfer from one official station to another when authorized by the head of the department or establishment concerned in the order directing such transfer: Provided, That such expenses shall not be allowed for any transfer effected for the convenience of any officer or employee.

(b) Appropriations of the executive departments and independent establishments for the fiscal year 1944 available for the transportation of things shall be available, in accordance with the act of October 10, 1940 (5 U. S. C. 73c–1), for expenses incurred in the transfer of household goods and effects of civilian officers and employees of such departments and establishments when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty.

SEC. 202. Unless otherwise specifically provided, no appropriation available for the executive departments and independent establishments for the fiscal year 1944 in this act or any other act shall be expended—

(a) To purchase any motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle (exclusive of busses, ambulances, and station wagons), at a cost, completely equipped for operation, and including the value of any vehicle exchanged, in excess of such amount as the Secretary of War, in the case of the War Department, the Secretary of the Navy, in the case of the Navy Department, the Commissioners, in the case of the government of the District of Columbia, and the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, in the case of other essential governmental needs, may determine necessary to obtain satisfactory motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, but in no event shall the price so paid for any such vehicle exceed the maximum price therefor established by the Office of Price Administration and in no event more than $1,500, which amount shall be in addition to the amount required for transportation.

(b) For the maintenance, operation, and repair of any Government-owned motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle not used exclusively for official purposes; and "official purposes" shall not include the transportation of officers and employees between their domiciles and places of employment, except in cases of medical officers on out-patient medical services and except in cases of officers and employees engaged in field work the character of whose duties makes such transportation necessary and then only as to such latter cases when the same is approved by the head of the department or establishment concerned. The limitations of this subsection (b) shall not apply to any motor vehicles for official use of the President, the heads of the executive departments, Ambassadors, Ministers, and chargés d'affaires.

SEC. 203. In purchasing motor-propelled or animal-drawn vehicles or tractors, or road, agricultural, manufacturing, or laboratory equipment, or boats, or parts, accessories, tires, or equipment thereof, the head of any executive department or independent establishment or his duly authorized representative may exchange or sell similar items and apply the exchange allowances or proceeds of sales in such cases in whole or in part payment therefor.

SEC. 204. Section 3709, Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), shall not apply to any purchase by or service rendered to any executive department or independent establishment during the fiscal year 1944 when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100, but this section shall not be construed as affecting any provision of law authorizing purchases or services without regard to said section 3709 in amounts greater than $100.

SEC. 205. Unless otherwise specified and until July 1, 1944, no part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person is a citizen of the United States or a person in the service of the United States on the date of this enactment who, being eligible for citizenship, had theretofore filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States. This section shall not apply to citizens of the Commonwealth of the Philippines or to nationals of those countries allied with the United States in the prosecution of the war: Provided, That this section shall become effective on the date of enactment of this act and shall supersede and be in lieu of similar provisions in appropriation acts restricting the expenditure of funds during the fiscal year 1943, but any exemptions from such superseded provisions shall remain in force in connection with the operation of this section until June 30, 1943.

SEC. 206. Hereafter any officer or employee of any of the executive departments or independent establishments, including any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, designated in writing by the head thereof for such purpose, is hereby authorized to administer the oath required by section 1757, Revised Statutes, as amended (5 U. S. C. 16), incident to entrance into the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any other oath required by law in connection with employment therein, such oath to be administered without charge or fee and to have the same force and effect as oaths administered by officers having seals.

SEC. 207. This act may be cited as the "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1944."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the chairman of the subcommittee whether there is any provision in the remainder of the bill to prevent the hedgehopping around of employees from one department to another when they have been specifically prohibited employment? I have such an amendment to offer, similar to the one that was adopted in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman read it for information? As I recall it I would have no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The amendment reads as follows:

SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation or authorization in this act shall be used to pay any part of the salary or expenses of any person whose salary or expenses are prohibited from being paid from any appropriation or authorization in any other act; but this prohibition shall be effective only during the period for which such prohibition in such other act is effective.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It merely means that if he is prohibited in one agency he cannot hop over into another agency.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I have no objection to it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 62, after line 2, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation or authorization in this act shall be used to pay any part of the salary or expenses of any person whose salary or expenses are prohibited from being paid from any appropriation or authorization in any other act; but this prohibition shall be effective only during the period for which such prohibition in such other act is effective."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. WHITTINGTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the Dirksen amendment relating to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment. If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 39, lines 19 and 20, strike out the sign and figures "$12,142,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,310,734 and such corporation shall be liquidated as provided by section 4 (k) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to the extent necessitated by the reduction of administrative personnel herein required, and the expenses incident to such liquidation shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall not incur for administrative expenses in excess of $833,333.33 for any month from July to December 1943, inclusive, nor in excess of $208,333.33 for any month from January to June 1944, inclusive."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 224, nays 159, answered "present" 2, not voting 49, as follows:

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, on this roll call I voted "nay." I have a pair with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. McGREGOR. I therefore withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on this roll call I voted "nay." I have a pair with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CLASON. I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk have authority to correct the section numbers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this minute for the purpose of finding out what the program will be for the rest of the week.

Mr. McCORMACK. Tomorrow the first order of business will be the consideration of a bill from the Appropriations Committee involving three items of an emergency nature, but I understand there is no controversy over them despite their being of an emergency nature. The bill will be called up before the 1-minute speeches—that procedure being followed because of the importance of the immediate passage of the bill.

Madame Chiang Kai-shek is to be our guest tomorrow, and, of course, the order of business otherwise tomorrow will be dependent upon the time of her arrival in the Capitol.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When is she expected to arrive here?

Mr. McCORMACK. She is expected to arrive at the Senate at 12:15 and here at 12:30, but it is my opinion that she will arrive here about 12:45.

A resolution from the Committee on Accounts concerning an appropriation for the Dies committee wil' also be considered tomorrow. I do not know if there are any other reports from the Committee on Accounts to be submitted tomorrow. Usually those matters are acted upon without debate.

The bill H. R. 1605, which it was announced last week would be taken up tomorrow, is an amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 with respect to farm acreage allotments, the farm marketing excess of wheat, the use of excess corn and silage for feed to livestock on the farm, and—I assume this is probably the important part—to provide for the adequate supply of peanuts for oil and other uses.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why does the gentleman say that peanuts is the important part?

Mr. McCORMACK. Many Members are interested in it. I am glad my friend asked me to interpret it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not mean that it is peanut legislation?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; peanuts are involved in the legislation.

Last week I announced that the Columbia Basin project bill would be considered this week, but because of changed circumstances it will not come up until next week, if I can put it on the agenda for next week.

On Friday the Private Calendar will be called. I understand that the conference report on the telegraph merger bill will be filed tomorrow, and that will be called up on Friday. If time permits, we will also take up on Friday the bill H. R. 1670, amending the Civilian Pilot Training Act, which I announced last week would be taken up on Friday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know whether or not that bill is controversial?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to state as to that, but my recollection is that there is probably not much controversy over it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The program for next week has not yet been arranged?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to state now the program for next week.

THE LATE PAUL R. GREEVER

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. BARRETT].

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I inform this House of the death of the Honorable Paul R. Greever. He was accidentally killed yesterday at his home in Cody, Wyo. I have known and admired Paul Greever for nearly a quarter of a century. He was my friend and had countless friends over our State. He served Wyoming with honor and distinction in the Seventy-fourth and Seventy-fifth Congresses. He was born at Lansing, Kans., and was a graduate of the University of that State, and served in the Three Hundredth and Fourteenth Trench Mortar Battery, Eighty-ninth Division, in the American Expeditionary Forces in World War No. 1. Paul Greever came to Wyoming immediately after receiving his discharge from the Army. He served as mayor of Cody, Wyo., and was a member of the board of trustees of the University of Wyoming. Mr. Greever was one of the leading members of the bar of the State of Wyoming. He was truly an outstanding citizen of Wyoming, and his passing will come as a distinct shock to his countless friends over my State, as well as to many of you who served with him in the Halls of Congress.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, the news that has just been given us by our colleague from Wyoming comes to me as a distinct shock. Paul Greever and I were neighbors at home. I think I was his nearest congressional neighbor, although we lived in separate States. He was a good neighbor, and he was a good legislator. He was one of the best-balanced and most fair-minded men in the House. I think every man who had the opportunity to know him or serve with him will join me in saying that we respect his memory and know that the State of Wyoming has lost a good citizen, an outstanding man, whose untimely death is a misfortune to his community, his State, and the Nation. We are sorry, and we are sad to hear that he is gone.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I, too, am shocked and deeply grieved by the tragic news of the death of our former colleague, Paul Greever, of Wyoming. He was one of the first Members of the House I met when I came here in 1937. Knowing him meant very much to me.

He was a man from the plains and mountains, a typical westerner, which may account in part for his friendliness and breadth of vision. I had many consultations with him. When I wanted information regarding matters pertaining to the livestock industry, or of mining, or even of irrigation or anything else that pertained to the great West, I consulted with Paul Greever. I found him to be a statesman of the first order and also a friend in whom I could have full confidence.

I take this short moment to extend my heartfelt sympathy to his family and to the State of Wyoming in the loss they have sustained in his going.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the work of the Maritime Commission and the War Shipping Administration and include certain quotations and excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert a brief article from today's Washington Daily News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address delivered by the distinguished minority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts, Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., at the Lincoln Day Dinner before the Republican Club of Allegheny, on Friday night last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow after the completion of the legislative program and any other orders that may heretofore have been granted, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INVASION IN BUREAUCRATIC CONTROL

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KEOGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert a short article from the New York Times of the other day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow afternoon, after the special order entered on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], I may address the House for 12 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks at this point and to include therein two letters addressed to Mr. David Stern, of the Philadelphia Record, under date of February 16, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in view of the insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15, 1943, of an editorial in the Philadelphia Record commenting upon certain remarks alleged to have been made by me, it is clear that the party inserting them did so without any prior investigation as to the facts, as such investigation would readily have revealed that the alleged remarks consisted of misquotation and distortion, so that the entire quotation was utterly different from the remarks actually made by me. Under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letters:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1943.

Mr. DAVID STERN,
Philadelphia Record, Philadelphia, Pa.

SIR: I enclose herewith a letter to you with the request that it be published at the earliest possible date in the Philadelphia Record, but only in its entirety. I do not wish the meaning of this letter to be destroyed as you attempted to warp and distort the meaning of statements I was supposed to have made at a Lincoln Day banquet. Since you have undoubtedly inspired attacks upon me in the Pennsylvania Legislature and in the United States Senate, on the part of those who are undoubtedly indebted to you for past favors, I believe I have the right to expect you to print my reply to your insidious political charges.

I may add that for one reporter prepared to distort my remarks there were hundreds at the banquet who would undoubtedly be glad to affirm that I did not make the statements as quoted by your paper. I did say that the Republicans had great contributions to make to the country's war effort, of grit and brains and backbone. The American people evidently thought so, too, last November.

Yours very truly,

HUGH D. SCOTT, Jr.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1943.

Mr. DAVID STERN,
Philadelphia Record, Philadelphia, Pa.

SIR: I should think you would be ashamed, in order to secure some imagined political advantage, to give currency on the front page of your edition of February 15 to certain statements alleged to have been made by me.

These statements were incorrectly quoted and the entire alleged quotation was ripped from the context of my remarks. I positively did not say anything indicating any possible opinion on my part that the war could end too soon. The war can't possibly end too soon to please me. I did not reflect upon the very great and valorous victories of the Russian armies and I did not either smear my country's allies nor keep silent about my country's enemies. The contrary is true, as those who heard the speech (except your reporter) know very well. The rest of the alleged quotation was badly garbled and does not convey the thought expressed by me, except that I do not deny that I said that "they (the American people) are tired of fools in high places." This goes for a certain type of newspaper publisher (if the cap fits you may wear it with my compliments), as well as for greedy, small-minded men in government.

Again, let me repeat that I said nothing at the Lincoln Day banquet which any American could resent; I can see how fellow-travelers along the Communist Party line might well resent any American doctrine which I endorse.

In giving currency to a misquotation you have made it possible for Axis radio to pick up your ill-timed editorial and seek to create dissension among us. Your callous misinterpretation of what you allege to be my statements is a great contribution to national disunity. Perhaps the plaintiff in the last libel suit will present to you an iron cross.

Yours very truly,

HUGH D. SCOTT, Jr.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew my request of yesterday to place in the Appendix an editorial which will cost a little more than the usual allowance. I have an estimate from the printer that it will cost $135.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include therein a telegram from the Passaic County (N. J.) Board of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an editorial from the Endicott Daily Bulletin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MRUK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HON. PAUL GREEVER

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the passing of the late Honorable Paul Greever at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, Paul R. Greever was born at Lansing, Leavenworth County, Kans., in my district in 1891. He received his early education in the public schools of Leavenworth and was graduated from the University of Kansas Law School. He served in the Three Hundred and Fourteenth Trench Mortar Battery, Eighty-ninth Division, from April 1917 to March 1919. It was my pleasure to know him first when he was in the law school at Lawrence, Kans.

He leaves to mourn his loss several relatives in northeast Kansas and a wide circle of friends over the whole State. He was a good, conscientious, able Congressman—a level-headed fellow with a large stock of common sense. He was not easily stampeded, did his own thinking, and had the courage of his convictions.

I am very proud to have known him in his earlier life and to have served with him here as a colleague. We all regret very much his sudden and untimely death while yet so comparatively young.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LAMBERTSON was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include two editorials from the Des Moines Register.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the RECORD and include a short bill that I introduced today and a letter concerning the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. MUNDT] be allowed to extend his remarks and include a magazine article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. SHAFER was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HARNESS of Indiana was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LEFEVRE (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), on account of illness.

To Mr. GAVAGAN, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 18, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

---

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

There will be a hearing of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on Tuesday, February 23, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the consideration of postal employees' salary bills.

---

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

183. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting a list of papers recommended to the Archivist by certain agencies of the Federal Government for his disposal; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

184. A letter from the President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the District of Columbia Motor Vehicle Parking Facility Act of 1942, approved February 16, 1942; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

185. A letter from the Chairman, United States Employees' Compensation Commission, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

186. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the Federal inspection of grain and similar agricultural commodities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

187. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Office for Emergency Management amounting to $2,973,000 for the fiscal year 1943 (H. Doc. No. 113); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

188. A letter from the Consumers' Counsel, Bituminous Coal Consumers' Counsel, transmitting the annual report of the Office of the Bituminous Coal Consumers' Counsel covering the period November 1, 1941, to December 31, 1942; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

189. A letter from the Chairman, The National Archives, transmitting the annual report of the National Archives Trust Fund Board for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942; to the Committee on the Library.

147. By Mr. MOTT: Senate Joint Memorial No. 1 of the Forty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, urging that the President and the Congress of the United States cause to be promulgated appropriate orders, rules, and regulations designed to encourage maximum production of essential food commodities by assuring to the farms of Oregon and of the United States generally that their requirements for production will be met and designed further to assure the people of the State of Oregon and other Pacific Coast States, as well as those in other parts of the country, a fair and reasonable distribution of all available food commodities; to the Committee on Agriculture.

148. Also, House Joint Memorial No. 1 of the Forty-second Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, memorializing the Congress of the United States to consider favorably and enact some pay-as-you-go plan or similar plan known as the Ruml plan or such other plan and legislation as will accomplish the desired result; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, who hast made of one blood all nations of men to dwell upon the face of the earth, we give Thee thanks for the increasing revelation that under the canopy of Thy everlasting mercy, in Thee there is no east or west; and that the seamless robe of a united humanity is being woven out of the strands and colors of all peoples. In the courage, the faith, and the hope made flesh in the queenly representative of a great nation we clasp this day the hand of our brave ally, a half world away, yet near to our hearts. As we bring our grateful homage to this Lady with a Lamp—the glowing lamp of an ancient and magnificent culture, of justice and freedom, and of a radiant reliance on Thee, we see illumined a page of Thy Holy Book: "The heart of her husband trusteth in her, and he shall have no lack of gain. Strength and dignity are her clothing. She openeth her mouth with wisdom and the law of kindness is on her tongue. Many daughters have done virtuously, but she excelleth them all. A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised; her works praise her in the gates."

We thank Thee, God of the freedoms, that, under the valiant leadership of this servant of Thine and of her warrior companion, by faith China has quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, waxed valiant in fight; out of weakness has been made strong; being tortured has not accepted deliverance that she might obtain a better resurrection, but that enduring as seeing the invisible has put to flight the army of aliens. By faith bring us, we beseech Thee, with her to united victory, keeping step with the eternal purpose for mankind as Thy truth goes marching on. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, February 15, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 133. An act to amend and clarify certain provisions of law relating to functions of the War Shipping Administration, and for other purposes;

H. R. 1294. An act to authorize the sale or transfer of property belonging to the Government for other purposes; and

H. R. 1762. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 1446) authorizing appropriations for the United States Navy for additional ship-repair facilities, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are detained on official business for the Senate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] are conducting hearings in Puerto Rico on behalf of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. WALLGREN] are absent conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] are necessarily absent as members of the Truman committee on a trip of inspection of airplane plants.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

VISIT OF MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senate is to be honored today by a visit from one of the outstanding women of the world and of this generation. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair, to reassemble following the visit of Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, and that the Chair appoint a committee of five to escort her into the Chamber. I also ask unanimous consent that the morning business be postponed until the Senate reassembles following Mme. Chiang Kai-shek's visit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, pursuant to the requests of the Senator from Kentucky, it is so ordered.

The Chair appoints the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] as the committee to escort Mme. Chiang Kai-shek into the Chamber.

At 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., under the order previously entered, the Senate stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate being in recess,

The Chief Justice of the United States, and Associate Justice Reed, Associate Justice Frankfurter, Associate Justice Jackson, and Associate Justice Rutledge of the Supreme Court of the United States, accompanied by Charles E. Cropley, Clerk, and Thomas E. Waggaman, Marshal, entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them to the right of the Vice President.

Hon. Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, and Hon. Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them to the right of the Vice President's desk.

Members of the party accompanying Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, including Mr. L. K. Kung, Dr. Wei Tao-ming, Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States from China, and Mme. Wei, Mme. T. V. Soong, Dr. H. T. Tong, Miss Jeanette Kung, and Capt. L. C. Kung, entered the Chamber, and were escorted to the seats assigned them to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The committee appointed by the Vice President, preceded by the Secretary of the Senate (Edwin A. Halsey), and the Sergeant at Arms (Wall Doxey), and consisting of Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. CAPPER, and Mrs. CARAWAY, entered the Chamber at the main door and escorted Mme. Chiang Kai-shek to a seat at the desk immediately in front of the Vice President.

(Mme. Chiang Kai-shek was greeted with prolonged applause, Senators and guests of the Senate rising.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators, distinguished guests, Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, wife of the Generalissimo of the armies of China, will now address you. [Applause.]

ADDRESS BY MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Mr. President, Members of the Senate of the United States, ladies, and gentlemen, I am overwhelmed by the warmth and spontaneity of the welcome of the American people, of whom you are the representatives. I did not know that I was to speak to you today at the Senate except to say, "How do you do? I am so very glad to see you," and to bring the greetings of my people to the people of America. However, just before coming here, the Vice President told me that he would like to have me say a few words to you.

I am not a very good extemporaneous speaker; in fact, I am no speaker at all; but I am not so very much discouraged, because a few days ago I was at Hyde Park, and went to the President's library. Something I saw there encouraged me, and made me feel that perhaps you will not expect overmuch of me in speaking to you extemporaneously. What do you think I saw there? I saw many things, but the one thing which interested me most of all was that in a glass case there was the first draft of one of the President's speeches, a second draft, and on and on up to the sixth draft. Yesterday I happened to mention this fact to the President, and told him that I was extremely glad that he had to write so many drafts when he is such a well-known and acknowledgedly fine speaker. His reply to me was that sometimes he writes 12 drafts of a speech. So, my remarks here today, being extemporaneous, I am sure you will make allowances for me.

The traditional friendship between your country and mine has a history of 160 years. I feel—and I believe that I am not the only one who feels this way—that there are a great many similarities between your people and mine, and that these similarities are the basis of our friendship.

I should like to tell you a little story which will illustrate this belief. When General Doolittle and his men went to bomb Tokyo, on their return some of your boys had to bail out in the interior of China. One of them later told me that he had to bail out of his ship, and that when he landed on Chinese soil and saw the populace running toward him, he just waved his arm and shouted the only Chinese word he knew, "Mei-kuo, Mei-kuo," which means "America." [Applause.] Literally translated from the Chinese it means "Beautiful country." This boy said that our people laughed and almost hugged him, and greeted him like a long lost brother. He further told me that he thought that he had come home when he saw our people; and that was the first time he had ever been to China. [Applause.]

I came to your country as a little girl. I know your people. I have lived with them. I spent the formative years of my life amongst your people. I speak your language, not only the language of your hearts, but also your tongue. So coming here today I feel that I am also coming home. [Applause.]

I believe, however, that it is not only I who am coming home; I feel that if the Chinese people could speak to you in your own tongue, or if you could understand our tongue, they would tell you that basically and fundamentally we are fighting for the same cause [great applause]; that we have identity of ideals; that the "four freedoms," which your President proclaimed to the world, resound throughout our vast land as the gong of freedom, the gong of freedom of the United Nations, and the death knell of the aggressors. [Applause.]

I assure you that our people are willing and eager to cooperate with you in the realization of these ideals, because we want to see to it that they do not echo as empty phrases, but become realities for ourselves, for our children, for our children's children, and for all mankind. [Applause.]

How are we going to realize these ideals? I think I shall tell you a little story which just came to my mind. As you know, China is a very old nation. We have a history of 5,000 years. When we were obliged to evacuate Hankow and go into the hinterland to carry on and continue our resistance against aggression, the Generalissimo and I passed one of our fronts, the Changsha front. One day we went into the Heng-yang Mountains, where there are traces of a famous pavilion called "Rub-the-mirror" pavilion, which was built over 2,000 years ago. It will perhaps interest you to hear the story of that pavilion.

Two thousand years ago near that spot was an old Buddhist temple. One of the young monks went there, and all day long he sat cross-legged, with his hands clasped before him in an attitude of prayer, and murmured "Amita-Buddha! Amita-Buddha! Amita-Buddha!" He murmured and chanted day after day, because he hoped that he would acquire grace.

The Father Prior of that temple took a piece of brick and rubbed it against a stone hour after hour, day after day, and week after week. The little acolyte, being very young, sometimes cast his eyes around to see what the old Father Prior was doing. The old Father Prior just kept on his work of rubbing the brick against the stone. So one day the young acolyte said to him, "Father Prior, what are you doing day after day rubbing this brick on the stone?" The Father Prior replied, "I am trying to make a mirror out of this brick." The young acolyte said, "But it is impossible to make a mirror out of a brick, Father Prior." "Yes," said the Father Prior, "and it is just as impossible for you to acquire grace by doing nothing except murmur 'Amita-Buddha' all day long, day in and day out." [Applause.]

So, my friends, I feel that it is necessary for us not only to have ideals and to proclaim that we have them, it is necessary that we act to implement them. [Applause.] And so to you, gentlemen of the Senate, and to you ladies and gentlemen in the galleries, I say that without the active help of all of us our leaders cannot implement these ideals. It is up to you and to me to take to heart the lesson of "Rub-the-mirror" pavilion.

I thank you. [Great applause, Senators and their guests rising.]

Following her address, Mme. Chiang Kai-shek and the distinguished visitors accompanying her and the other guests of the Senate were escorted from the Chamber.

At 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., the Senate reassembled, when it was called to order by the Vice President.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

Report of Persons Commissioned in the Army of the United States

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report showing the name, age, legal residence, rank, branch of the service, with special qualification therefor, of each person commissioned in the Army of the United States without prior commissioned military service, for the period December 1, 1942, to January 31, 1943 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee of Military Affairs.

Acts of Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, V. I.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of laws passed by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, V. I. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Report of Bituminous Coal Consumers' Counsel

A letter from the Bituminous Coal Consumers' Counsel, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of his operations for the period from November 1, 1941, to December 31, 1942 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Reports of the Librarian of Congress and Register of Copyrights

A letter from the Librarian of Congress, transmitting pursuant to law, his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, and the annual report of the Register of Copyrights for the same period (with the accompanying reports); to the Committee on the Library.

Amendment of Employees' Compensation Act

A letter from the Chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," as amended (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Disposition of Executive Papers

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of the Treasury, Navy (3), Agriculture (8), and Commerce; United States Civil Service Commission (2), National Housing Agency (2), and the Alley Dwelling Authority which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Concurrent Resolution 13

"Whereas this Nation is now engaged in a world-wide war which has brought about a tremendous demand upon our transportation facilities; and

"Whereas it is recognized that a serious problem has arisen relative to the continuation of our transportation facilities because of the shortage of rubber, and our Government has urged, as a result of investigations and conclusions reached by the Baruch committee, a development of synthetic rubber to alleviate the shortage; and

"Whereas it is a desire of this State to cooperate in every way possible with the Federal Government and its committees and to make available its surplus commodities which are essential in the manufacture of synthetic rubber; and

"Whereas in the State of Iowa raw materials are available for the manufacture of alcohol used in the production of synthetic rubber; and

"Whereas it would be economically advantageous to erect factories for the production of synthetic rubber in the area where the necessary raw materials are produced, and where the high protein byproducts are urgently needed for animal feeds: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That Rubber Administrator William M. Jeffers and our two Senators, Hon. George A. Wilson and Hon. Guy M. Gillette, and our eight Congressmen be urged to use their best efforts to help unsnarl the present situation relative to the production of synthetic rubber from agricultural products; that such plants be located in the surplus crop area, including the State of Iowa, to the end that our State, Nation, and humanity be benefited and also to the end that this war be brought to a successful and more rapid conclusion; be it further

"Resolved by the house, That copies of this resolution be mailed to Vice President Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard, Rubber Administrator William M. Jeffers, Senator Guy M. Gillette, Senator George A. Wilson, and our eight Members of the House of Representatives and that this resolution be spread upon the house and senate journals of the Fiftieth General Assembly of the State of Iowa."

A resolution of the Senate of Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

"Senate Resolution 1

"Whereas the Legislature of Puerto Rico has passed certain laws tending to improve living conditions and to protect the welfare of the people of Puerto Rico;

"Whereas among these laws are to be found the following:

"Land law of Puerto Rico;

"Law creating the Puerto Rico Water Resources Authority;

"Law creating the Puerto Rico Transportation Authority;

"Law creating the Puerto Rico Development Company;

"Law creating the Development Bank of Puerto Rico;

"Law creating the Puerto Rico Planning, Urbanizing, and Zoning Board;

"Law creating the Puerto Rico Communications Authority; and

"Law regulating the sugar industry in Puerto Rico;

"Whereas some of these laws were sanctioned by the direct vote of the people of Puerto Rico and all were passed by the Legislature of Puerto Rico in the exercise of the power delegated to it by the people of Puerto Rico;

"Whereas Congressman FRED L. CRAWFORD, of Michigan, has introduced a resolution in the Congress of the United States of America with the purpose of having the Congress annul these laws, thus despoiling the people of Puerto Rico, in the midst of the great sacrifices it is making in the military and civil fields for the defense of democracy, of all enjoyment of democracy;

"Whereas this constitutes an unheard-of assault against the liberties of the people of Puerto Rico, the doctrine of President Roosevelt and the American Nation, in America and throughout the world, and its adoption would imply a sinister loss of prestige to that doctrine;

"Whereas if such a resolution is adopted, not only the people of Puerto Rico but all small peoples would see democracy declared a fraud, a lie, and a farce by the Congress of the Nation which is directing the war for democracy and which will fundamentally influence the formation of world liberties following victory;

"Whereas if the precedent is established by which the will of the people and of its legislature in Puerto Rico expressed in the eight laws mentioned has no value at all, the same procedure could be applied to all the legislation and all the democratic acts of the Puerto Rican people and of its legislature: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico:

"1. To condemn, as it hereby condemns, in the most energetic and unequivocal terms, the assault against democracy in Puerto Rico and against the principles of democracy outside of Puerto Rico which the Crawford resolution constitutes.

"2. To condemn, as it hereby condemns, in the most energetic and unequivocal terms, as the representatives of a people struggling for democracy, the fact that in the very Congress of the United States of America a resolution has been introduced of such nature that it brings into disrepute and stains the high motives of the Government of the United States of America in directing the present struggle in the defense and affirmation of democracy.

"3. To declare, as it hereby declares, that, although confiding in the spirit of righteousness of the Congress of the United States and believing that it will not permit the adoption of such sinister resolution, it affirms the unbreakable will of our people to oppose such violation of liberty and democracy by all legitimate means which free men can and should employ to defend themselves against tyranny and oppression.

4. To declare, as it hereby declares, that in the employment of the necessary means for the defense of our democracy and our liberty against such sinister assault our people will act in such manner that our fellow citizens of the north, descendants of Washington and Jefferson, will not have to feel ashamed of us.

"5. That copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States of America, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, to the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Possessions of the Senate, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the American press, to the legislatures of the 48 States, and to all parliamentary bodies of America and of the world which function free of totalitarian tyranny."

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Finance:

"Enrolled Joint Memorial 1

"Whereas title I, section 2 (a), clause (7), reads as follows: 'Effective July 1, 1941, provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of an individual claiming old-age assistance'; and

"Whereas title IV, section 402 (a), clause (7), reads as follows: 'provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of any child claiming aid to dependent children'; and

"Whereas title X, section 1002 (a), clause (8), reads as follows: 'provide that the State agency shall, in determining need, take into consideration any other income and resources of an individual claiming aid to the blind'; and

"Whereas these provisions restrict the States from allowing recipients of relief in these categories from accepting intermittent employment without impairment of their grant; and

"Whereas deduction of all such earnings from grants reduces the willingness of recipients to accept such employment; and

"Whereas, due to the shortage of manpower in all lines of industry during the war emergency, it is necessary that all manpower be made available to the United States Government to successfully prosecute the war effort; and

"Whereas it is imperative that all people be employed wherever they can make a contribution to the war effort: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to amend titles I, IV, and X, section 2 (a), clause (7), section 402 (a), clause (7), and section 1002 (a), clause (8) to allow for intermittent employment without impairment to the grants of recipients; be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of the memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate and Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to United States Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Edward V. Robertson, Congressman Frank A. Barrett, and to the Honorable Arthur J. Altmeyer, Chairman of the Social Security Board."

By Mr. O'MAHONEY (for Mr. MCCARRAN):

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Finance:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 4

"Assembly joint resolution memorializing Congress to amend the law on the collection of income tax to a pay-as-you-go basis

"Whereas the Congress is considering the amendment of the income-tax law to provide for the collection of such tax on a current basis; and

"Whereas inflationary forces in the economy of the United States are at work due to the unparalleled expenditures for defense; and

"Whereas we have seen the effect of uncontrolled inflation during the following World War No. 1 and in certain foreign countries; and

"Whereas the war effort of the United States requires that the unusual income due to these expenditures should be made available to the Treasury of the United States as it is earned; and

"Whereas the unprecedented requirements of the United States Government in meeting its war obligations may otherwise result in delinquencies in the payment of income taxes under present or prospective rate; and

"Whereas such a situation might result in comfort to the enemies of our country and in a lack of confidence from our people: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to adopt an income-tax program which will provide for the payment of such taxes as income is earned; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Nevada further suggests the adoption of measures providing for a compulsory savings program or tax during the duration of the war which will insure the accumulation of savings guaranteeing a satisfaction of the improving standard of living presently sacrificed to insure the victory; and be it further

"Resolved, That properly certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Nevada to our Senators in the United States Senate and to our Representative in Congress."

By Mr. GILLETTE:

A house concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Concurrent Resolution E

"Whereas during the past 25 years the economy of the Nation has been so fundamentally based on rubber that unless rubber is immediately forthcoming the Nation's economy is doomed to a disruptive breakdown which will drastically curtail the all-out war effort and endanger ultimate victory.

"For the past year, high officials of our Government have been attempting to make synthetic rubber out of petroleum. From the best information available, 33 rubber plants have been authorized, all with the Standard Oil Co. and members of their patent pool. Grants have been made by Jesse Jones, head of Reconstruction Finance Corporation, providing all necessary funds to the extent of a half a billion dollars or more.

"Since this arrangement has been made, plants have reached only the blueprint stage. One or two plants may be in operation by 1944. From the time that has elapsed since the construction of these plants was authorized, without results, it is self-evident that the making of synthetic rubber is still in the experimental stage and that the experience so far has been in the wrong direction.

"The Russian Government has successfully been making all of their rubber for the last 10 years or more, and they offered to this Government over a year ago their formula for making synthetic rubber out of agricultural products. Nothing has been done to take advantage of this.

"The Gillette committee findings of last year established the fact that plants for making rubber out of agricultural products can be built with one-third of the amount of critical materials required by the petroleum plants and one-third of the cost in about one-half of the time. That at this time we have a surplus of certain agricultural products, all of them containing carbohydrates.

"In fact, rubber can be made from any thing that grows out of the ground, including waste products.

"Whereas it appears that no results are apparent at this time from the action that has been taken by the Government to make synthetic rubber: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That we ask the reintroduction of the Gillette bill and its immediate passage, so that speedy arrangements may be made for the building of plants to make rubber from agricultural products as well as from petroleum products, so as to assure an adequate supply of synthetic rubber to be used in winning the war and to insure the all-out war effort and speedier victory by preventing the disruptive break-down of our national economy; now be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to each Member of Congress from North Dakota, including both Senators and Representatives; Mr. Gillette, of Iowa; the President of the Senate; the Speaker of the House; the President of the United States; Mr. Jeffers, Rubber Administrator; Jesse Jones; and to the speaker of the house and president of the senate of the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri, Illinois, Michigan, South Dakota, and Colorado."

(The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.)

By Mr. ROBERTSON:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Finance:

"Enrolled Joint Memorial No. 2

"Whereas titles I and X of the Social Security Act provide for old-age assistance and assistance to the blind of a maximum payment of $40 per month; and

"Whereas the United States participates in the grant paid to the individual in the amount of 50 per centum; and

"Whereas all grants are determined by compilation of a budget of need in each individual case; and

"Whereas this procedure does not allow the payment of deficiencies in the budget in excess of $40 per month; Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Wyoming (the Senate concurring), That we hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to amend titles I and X of the Social Security Act to provide for grants to the States of 50 per centum of State average payments of $40 per month in lieu of an individual basis, to enable the States to pay full budget deficiencies in all grants, and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of the memorial be sent to the President of the United States and to United States Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney and E. V. Robertson, Congressman Frank A. Barrett, and to the Honorable Arthur J. Altmeyer, chairman of the Social Security Board."

By Mr. LANGER:

A House concurrent resolution of the Assembly of the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Concurrent Resolution D

"Whereas apparently there has been no determination made by responsible officers of the Government of the total required production of essential food and fiber for the duration of the war and for the reconstruction period following the war; and

"Whereas food and fiber goals have thus far been established only on a short-time basis; and

"Whereas the War Manpower Commission was created for the purpose of analyzing and giving proper weight to the minimum manpower requirements of all war industries including agriculture, the armed forces and the necessary civilian economy; and

"Whereas, although several months have elapsed since the creation of said Manpower Commission, the drain of agriculture's trained manpower into industry and the armed forces through the Selective Service System continues at substantially the previous rate, notwithstanding the fact that thousands of auction sales have been held and that breeding herds of sheep, hogs, and both beef and dairy cattle continue to be reduced through shipment to market as a result of the manpower shortage already existing throughout this area; and

"Whereas, notwithstanding the fact that agriculture in the Great Plains area, normally renews completely its mechanized equipment every 10 years, and the further facts that this area has just come through a 10-year period of depression and crop failure which made normal replacement impossible, thus multiplying many times the minimum requirements for both new machinery and repair parts; and

"Whereas, notwithstanding the recent increase of 30 percent over previous allocations of iron and steel for farm equipment granted by the War Production Board, the seeded acreage of field crops in this area will be substantially reduced as compared to 1942 for the combined reasons of manpower shortage and inadequate machinery and repair parts; and

"Whereas North Dakota now has 40,000 of its young men serving in the armed forces and being wholly an agricultural State it is self-evident that a very large percentage of the men now in service and a similar percentage of any subsequent drains on our manpower have and must come from our farms; and

"Whereas, if North Dakota is to contribute her best in this prosecution of this total war, it can only be done through maximum utilization of its one great resource, namely, agriculture; and

"Whereas this can be done only if immediate and realistic consideration, followed by positive action, be given to the minimum requirements of our farmers in the fields. Manpower, machinery, repair parts, tires, gasoline, credit availability, credit cost, nonrecourse production, loans, equitable relationship between price floors and ceiling to production costs, the relationship of production costs to the added risks incident to the efforts to meet expanding production goals under wartime conditions, the apparent necessity for lifting all acreage restrictions on wheat as has already been done for corn: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That we earnestly recommend and ask that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry make an immediate and thorough investigation of all the agricultural "musts" to the end that the requirements of sufficient manpower, sufficient current credit, proper price relationship between production costs, ceilings and floors, sufficient farm machinery and repair parts, gasoline, rubber, fertilizer, and other necessary supplies be definitely determined on a long-time basis, not only for the war years but for the reconstruction period following the war and allotted to agriculture so that sufficient food and fiber may be forthcoming to meet increasingly expanding goals and to supply the requirement of our armed forces, the civilian population, the lease-lend commitments to the Allied Nations, and food for occupied countries, and that such investigation include the careful weighing and consideration of the interrelationship and division of authority and responsibility among the following agencies in connection with such determination: United States Department of Agriculture, Office of Price Administration, War Production Board, War Manpower Commission, Office of Petroleum Coordinator; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to each Member of Congress from North Dakota, presiding officer of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representaties, Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture, Office of Price Administration, chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, president of the Senate and speaker of the House of Representatives in the States of Montana, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Oklahoma, Michigan, Texas, Missouri, and Illinois."

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

"House Concurrent Memorial 1

"To the Congress of the United States:

"Your memorialist respectfully represents:

"By act of April 20, 1927, the Legislature of Arizona created the Arizona Children's Colony, an institution for the care and education of mentally defective children.

"Under the provisions of the act of March 19, 1929, a tract consisting of 80 acres of irrigated farming land, situated near the city of Mesa, was purchased as a site for the institution, in a location possessing surroundings highly favorable for its purposes.

"One legislative impediment after another, but chiefly the economic fear of adding to the tax burden through appropriations for operation, intervened to delay the carrying forward of this important humanitarian enterprise, but the act of March 19, 1941, recognized its urgent need by making appropriation for the construction of initial buildings, which would have been erected and occupied by this time but for the difficulties attendant upon procuring building materials.

"The Arizona Children's Colony ranks in its objectives with the other social, educational, and charitable institutions for which grants of land were made to the State of Arizona under the terms of the Enabling Act of June 20, 1910, and which have proven of great benefits in the maintenance of hospitals and schools for the insane, the deaf, dumb, and blind, and disabled miners, as well as of educational and correctional institutions.

"Wherefore your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, prays:

"1. That the Congress enact legislation granting to the State of Arizona 100,000 acres of the surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, and nonmineral public lands of the United States within the limits of this State, for the purposes of an institution for the care and education of mentally defective children."

A concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona; to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

"House Concurrent Memorial 2

"To the President and the Congress of the United States:

"Your memorialist respectfully represents:

"The urgent need for zinc, lead, copper, and other so-called strategic metals is a condition which calls for no explanation.

"That everything possible must be done, as a war measure, to meet this need is admitted.

"Labor conditions, priorities, transportation, and perhaps other factors, may be numbered among the impediments to maximum production.

"The chief factor, however, is found in the ceiling prices currently effective for these metals.

"These prices may have been just and adequate when set, but such is not the case now. Since these prices were fixed, wages, supplies, and everything entering into the cost of mining has increased, and mine operators, particularly the small operators, find themselves with depleted budgets and inadequate loans, and unable to realize full production.

"As a matter of simple justice, also, the mining industry should be enabled to operate on a fair and equitable basis of security and profit equal to that enjoyed by other war industries.

"Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the Sixteenth Arizona State Legislature, the Senate concurring, respectfully prays:

"1. That steps be taken, by the Chief Executive, or by the appropriate Federal agency, and if necessary by the Congress, through the medium of legislation, to insure a substantial increase in the price of strategic metals, and particularly zinc, lead, and copper."

PRICE CEILINGS FOR FLUE-CURED TOBACCO—RESOLUTION OF NORTH CAROLINA LEGISLATURE

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, for my colleague the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and myself, I present to the Senate a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, which is now in session. The resolution, being a joint one and known as Senate Resolution 142, interests itself in ceilings upon tobacco, and I take this opportunity to read the first paragraph thereof:

A joint resolution urging the Federal authorities to apply price ceilings to the flue-cured tobacco crop by a method which will not destroy the auction system of selling tobacco.

Mr. President, the resolution is signed by the Honorable R. L. Harris, President of the Senate of the State of North Carolina, and by the Honorable John Kerr, Jr., Speaker of the North Carolina House of Representatives. I may add that Mr. John Kerr, Jr., is the son of John Kerr, who served in the National House of Representatives for many years. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and, under the rule, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Resolution 142

Whereas the growing and marketing of tobacco is one of North Carolina's foremost industries, affecting the lives, prosperity, and property of a large number of its citizens; and

Whereas by the free choice of the tobacco growers the auction system of selling tobacco has been adopted and now prevails in North Carolina; and

Whereas the preservation of the auction method of selling tobacco, with its competitive features, is essential and necessary in order to preserve a free market where tobacco can be offered and sold according to its true value, subject only to a price ceiling of Office of Price Administration; and

Whereas the price ceilings on buyers' averages as enforced in the sale of the 1942 flue-cured crop was in the main satisfactory to growers and tended to preserve the auction system and its competitive features: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Carolina (the House of Representatives concurring):

SECTION 1. That the United States Department of Agriculture and the Office of Price Administration be requested and urged in establishing price ceilings for the 1943 crop of flue-cured tobacco to establish such ceilings on buyers' averages, but not on individual baskets of tobacco, in order to protect and preserve a free market for the sale of leaf tobacco at auction.

SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of Congress from North Carolina and to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Office of Price Administration Administrator.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in effect from and after its ratification.

RESOLUTION OF THIRTIETH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE FARMERS EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE STATE UNION OF NEBRASKA—CEILING PRICE ON LIVESTOCK

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, in the interest of food production, I present a resolution adopted at the thirtieth annual convention of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative State Union of Nebraska, February 10 and 11, 1943, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION PASSED AT THE THIRTIETH ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE FARMERS EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE STATE UNION OF NEBRASKA, FEBRUARY 10 AND 11, 1943

There still seem to be a few groups who are working to have the Office of Price Administration set a ceiling price on live meat animals. Everyone acquainted with the livestock business knows that this would be practically a physical impossibility. We urge the continuance of every possible means to prevent this.

LETTER FROM THE KOREAN NATIONAL REVOLUTIONARY PARTY, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA BRANCH

Mr. GILLETTE presented a letter from the Korean National Revolutionary Party, United States of America Branch, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE KOREAN
NATIONAL REVOLUTIONARY PARTY,
Los Angeles, Calif., February 12, 1943.

Senator GUY M. GILLETTE,
Senate Foreign Relations Committee,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GILLETTE: We are most grateful for your humanitarianism and understanding of Korea and the Korean problems. Your introduction of the Korean students bill was the means of saving many of the Korean students from being deported before December 7, 1941.

Your recent Senate Resolution No. 91, urging the United States Senate to give full legal backing to the Atlantic Charter is another proof of your generous understanding of the subjugated peoples of the Pacific, and particularly of Korea.

We fully realize the responsibility of the Koreans in general toward the United States, and the United Nations' war efforts for an early victory. We are also cognizant of the far-reaching moral influence your Senate Resolution No. 91 will have over more than 1,000,000,000 people in the Near and Far East in the support we may give to America in the Pacific.

Therefore, we are mindful of our acts and response to the call for effective cooperation between the United States and the Koreans who are now engaged in their struggle to whip the Japanese militarists.

In view of the many kind things you have done in behalf of us, we thank you most heartily and sincerely. We pray that God may continue to give you health, happiness, and the success you so deserve.

Gratefully yours,

DIAMOND KIM,
Chairman.
LOWELL KWAHK,
Secretary.

PROTECTION OF SMALL BUSINESS—RESOLUTION OF THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ASSOCIATION OF ST. LOUIS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a resolution or statement adopted as a part of the platform of the Mississippi Valley Association of St. Louis setting forth its interest in the small businessmen of the United States and urging that Congress enact legislation to protect small businesses. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution or statement was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Small businesses and manufacturing plants are an integral part of private enterprise and free competition. There are more than 160,000 small businesses employing more than 3,000,000 workers and their existence is threatened by war priorities and the shortage of manpower. We urge that the Congress give serious attention to measures to protect and preserve small businesses.

PROPOSALS TO RESTRICT THE MAKING OF FLOUR—LETTER FROM DR. F. D. FARRELL

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a letter I have just received from Dr. F. D. Farrell, president of the Kansas State College, at Manhattan, Kans. I have been in close touch with this college for more than 40 years; in fact my first public office was membership on the board of regents for the institution approximately 30 years ago. Dr. Farrell is an unusually high-class citizen of Kansas, in addition to being one of our most distinguished educators and scholars.

In his letter Dr. Farrell calls attention to proposals being made to restrict the making of flour for bread to four types—whole wheat; high extraction; wheat flour combined with soybean, peanut, or cottonseed flour; and enriched white flour. He says in his letter to me that this is neither necessary nor desirable, and adds:

To require ultra-high extraction or the addition of protein supplements would probably injure both the wheat industry and the consumer because of the effect of such a requirement on the consumption of bread. The palatability of bread for most consumers would be seriously reduced by ultra-high extraction or the addition of protein supplements, and bread consumption no doubt would be correspondingly reduced.

I may add, Mr. President, that while there is no shortage of wheat or flour, livestock feeders are having considerable difficulty in obtaining protein supplements for animal feeding; so it would seem unwise to divert the use of protein supplements for making bread while this shortage of livestock feed exists.

I ask unanimous consent that Dr. Farrell's letter be printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks and be appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND APPLIED SCIENCE,
Manhattan, February 8, 1943.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: A proposal has been made a time or two by a representative of one of the war agencies, probably the War Production Board, involving the Kansas wheat industry. As I understand it, the proposal is that throughout the period of the war only four types of flour be available in this country for use in bread making: (1) Whole wheat flour; (2) high extraction (not less than 85 percent) flour; (3) wheat flour combined with protein supplements such as soybean flour, peanut flour or cottonseed flour; and (4) enriched white flour.

In our judgment, it is neither necessary nor desirable to require the use of ultrahigh extraction flour or of flour combined with such protein supplements as peanut, soybean, or cottonseed.

There is no present scarcity of wheat or flour. Just now there seems to be no prospect of an acute scarcity within the next year or two at least. To require ultrahigh extraction or the addition of protein supplements would probably injure both the wheat industry and the consumer because of the effect of such a requirement on the consumption of bread. The palatability of bread for most consumers would be seriously reduced by ultrahigh extraction or the addition of protein supplements and bread consumption, no doubt, would be correspondingly reduced.

A further objection to the proposal lies in the fact that whereas there is no shortage of wheat or flour, livestock feeders are experiencing serious difficulty in obtaining protein supplements for their animals. This fact makes it seem particularly undesirable to divert the use of protein supplements for the making of bread.

I do not know what the status of the proposal now is in Washington but I thought that you should know about it if you have not already been informed regarding it so that you may be prepared to deal with it if it should approach the stage of official adoption.

Very truly yours,

F. D. FARRELL,
President.

EDITORIAL FROM UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred an editorial from this week's issue of the United Mine Workers' Journal.

There being no objection, the editorial was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COAL MINERS HAVE THE RIGHT TO PROVE $2 DAY WAGE INCREASE IS JUSTIFIED

The old game of damning American coal miners and their leadership is on again in full force.

And again, we have with us the learned special purpose writers, aided and abetted by that legion of "crystal-gazing" radio commentators, all picturing to the American public the whys and wherefores of just how the American wheels of industry are to be stilled on March 31 because it has been said some time in the past:

"The United Mine Workers do not work without a contract."

These news analysts "plum" forget to use, "or the equivalent of a wage agreement," and that equivalent is and has been a retroactive wage agreement, making retroactive the wage rates and working conditions finally determined and ultimately agreed upon. Simple reflection by these learned writers and commentators would have revealed that, in 1941, the United Mine Workers worked during May, June, and up to the 5th of July, under a retroactive agreement in many coal fields. And it has been done in other years. So why all the scare publicity at this time?

The answer to this is rather simple. Certain Washington "burrocrats" and certain politicians have certain grievances against the United Mine Workers. These grievances are both political and economic. They do not exactly regard a coal miner as one who is entitled to conditions of employment or wage rates commensurate with those employed in certain other trades.

Like economic and political grievances are entertained by certain editors in control of big circulations and so their game is to do the best job possible in selling the public against the mine workers' demands in advance of the wage negotiations.

The mine workers believe the $2 a day wage proposal is economically sound. They believe they have a right to present their case and their argument in support of their demands without being condemned as economic villains in advance of that opportunity. The United Mine Workers believe that when the wage conference convenes and the whole economic structure of the coal industry is laid bare that the facts developed will substantiate the ability of the industry to meet the $2 proposal without serious injury to the public purse.

During 1942, the United Mine Workers increased production 70,000,000 tons with 70,000 less men employed. No other country in the world can show any such record on a per capita man-day basis. The basic wage rate upon which 1942 coal was produced was 50 cents the day less than it was 20 years ago. The cost of living in the coal-mining camps of America is the highest level of any other geographical area in the United States. The coal miner is the innocent victim of short line, excess railroad freight rates, as well as company and high margin stores, which take all the traffic will bear.

Why don't these same writers and commentators who are so hell-bent on arousing public opinion against the United Mine Workers, simply because the mine workers dare pursue the economic right of American citizens, dig into the facts and learn something about how coal production costs f. o. b. mines affect the American purse, and what the cost of coal really totals to the selling price of the manufactured products coal produces and transports?

Even with the granting of the $2 a day increased wage, the total cost of coal f. o. b. the mine to the selling price of all manufactured products would remain less than .0075 of a cent per sales dollar.

Why don't some of the "burrocrats" who spend hours reminiscing in swell Washington dining rooms about the sporting events of their younger years, and then rush madly to their respective offices to arrive before quitting time so that they can sign the commitments to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on projects and for goods without blinking an eye—who in many instances do not know the premise of their economic doings—try to learn how things can be done—how the coal industry can meet the economic necessities of the men who mine the coal?

We are just about fed up with this constant damning of the Americal coal miner. It seems that every time the American coal miners formulate wage proposals, they are characterized as a coercive force trying to destroy set formulas and economic standards of American industry. Who gave to whom the right to say that the American coal miner is not entitled to enjoy comparative American standards of life with other Americans?

We think it is about time that American society, American industry, and Government "burrocrats" began to appreciate the work performed by American coal miners employed in the most hazardous industry of all the basic industries of the Nation—the full consideration which is their just due.

And, in this viewpoint, we believe we are fully sustained by a large segment of the American press located in coal-producing areas, who know first hand the economic plight of the coal miner, as pointed out by the Scranton Times in an editorial discussing the wage proposal, when that paper said:

"When they get to the War Labor Board the mine workers are entitled to have their wage scales considered on the basis of pure merit and without prejudice by reason of political or personal differences between public officials and the leaders of the mine workers or any prejudices arising from the recent anthracite strike."

REPORTS OF BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE

The following reports of the Committee on Banking and Currency were submitted:

By Mr. RADCLIFFE:

S. 677. A bill to amend the National Housing Act, as amended; without amendment (Rept. No. 55).

By Mr. WAGNER (for himself and Mr. DANAHER):

S. 700. A bill to amend section 12B and section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act during the continuance of the war and for 6 months after its termination; with amendments (Rept. No. 56).

PRODUCTION AND MARKETING OF WOOL

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Special Committee to Investigate Production, Transportation, and Marketing of Wool, submitted, pursuant to Senate Resolution 160, Seventy-fourth Congress, and Senate Resolution 12, Seventy-eighth Congress, a report with particular reference to the Government stock pile of wool and the disposition of the domestic clip, which was ordered to be printed as Report No. 57.

REPORT ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. BARKLEY, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which was referred for examination and recommendation a list of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted a report thereon pursuant to law.

CONTINUATION OF AUTHORITY FOR INSPECTION OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 104), which, under the rule, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority contained in Senate Resolution 298, agreed to October 9, 1942, authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs, or any duly appointed subcommittee thereof, to visit, for purposes of inspection, during the second session of the Seventy-seventh Congress, any part of the Military Establishment in the Western Hemisphere, hereby is extended from the end of the said session to and including January 6, 1943.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. BANKHEAD (for himself, Mr. SMITH, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. NYE, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. BILBO, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BUSHFIELD, Mr. STEWART, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. BURTON, Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MOORE, Mr. REVERCOMB, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. VAN NUYS, Mr. HILL, Mr. WHERRY, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. MCFARLAND, Mr. REED, Mr. LANGER, Mr. ROBERTSON and Mr. SCRUGHAM) introduced Senate bill 729, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 738. A bill to amend section 212 (a) of the act of June 30, 1932 (Economy Act); and

S. 739. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the attendance of personnel of the Army of the United States as students at educational institutions and other places"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(Mr. REYNOLDS also introduced Senate bill 740, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 741. A bill regulating compensation of United States commissioners; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(Mr. CAPPER introduced Senate Joint Resolution 33, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

DEFERMENT FROM MILITARY SERVICE AND RELEASE OF AGRICULTURAL LABOR

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I introduce two bills for appropriate reference, and desire to make a brief statement regarding them.

One of the bills provides for the deferment of agricultural labor. The bill has 40 cosponsors.

The other bill would authorize the Secretary of War to release on furlough all men in the land forces of the United States who are located in the United States on the date of enactment of the act and who, immediately prior to their induction into such forces, were regularly engaged in an agricultural occupation or endeavor or were employed in connection with the production or harvesting of any agricultural commodity as their principal occupation. This bill has 30 cosponsors.

In view of the importance of the measures, I ask unanimous consent to have them printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 729) providing for the deferment from military service of persons engaged in agricultural occupations, introduced by Mr. BANKHEAD (for himself, Mr. SMITH, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. NYE, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. BILBO, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BUSHFIELD, Mr. STEWART, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. BURTON, Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MCCLELLAN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MOORE, Mr. REVERCOMB, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. VAN NUYS, Mr. HILL, Mr. WHERRY, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. MCFARLAND, Mr. REED, Mr. LANGER, Mr. ROBERTSON, and Mr. SCRUGHAM) was read twice by its title; referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 (k) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(k) Every registrant who is regularly engaged in an agricultural occupation or endeavor or whose principal occupation consists of employment in connection with the production or harvesting of any agricultural commodity shall, while he continues to be so engaged or employed, be deferred from training and service under this act in the land and naval forces of the United States; and no such registrant shall leave such occupation or endeavor or cease to be employed in connection with such production or harvesting unless, prior thereto, he requests his selective service local board to determine, and such local board, subject to appeal in accordance with section 10 (a) (2), determines, that it is in the best interest of the war effort for him to engage in some other occupation or endeavor, to be employed in some other work, or to become a member of such land or naval forces."

The bill (S. 730) to provide for releasing certain persons in military service to aid in agricultural production, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BANKHEAD (for himself, Mr. SMITH, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. NYE, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. SHIPSTEAD, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. BILBO, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. BUSHFIELD, Mr. STEWART, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. EASTLAND, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. MOORE, Mr. REVERCOMB, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. VAN NUYS, Mr. WHERRY, Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, Mr. REED, Mr. BUCK, Mr. LANGER, Mr. ROBERTSON, and Mr. SCRUGHAM), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to further relieve the shortage of farm labor and to assist in the adequate production and harvesting of agricultural commodities essential to the war effort, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to release on furlough, until January 1, 1944, all men in the land forces of the United States who are located in the United States on the date of enactment of this act, and who, immediately prior to their induction into such forces, were regularly engaged in an agricultural occupation or endeavor, or were employed in connection with the production or harvesting of any agricultural commodity as their principal occupation, as determined by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2 (a) Each man who is so released on furlough shall be required to enter into an agreement (1) that during the period of such furlough and until January 1, 1944, he will engage in such work in connection with the production, planting, cultivating, or harvesting of agricultural commodities as he is qualified by experience to perform, (2) that in the event that a shortage of farm labor exists in any area in connection with the production, planting, cultivating, or harvesting of any agricultural commodity, as determined and published by the Secretary of Agriculture, he may be assigned to work in such area, and (3) that his furlough shall be immediately terminated for failure to comply with the terms of such agreement.

(b) While any man so released on furlough is employed as herein provided he shall be entitled to receive compensation for his services at the prevailing rate of pay therefor in the community in which such services are performed, but if such amount is less than the amount such man would have received as a member of the land forces of the United States he shall be entitled to receive the latter amount.

(c) The Secretary of War is authorized to make such regulations, and to enter into such contracts with respect to the employment and compensation of men released on furlough under this act, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

APPLICATION OF NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE ACT TO WAR CORRESPONDENTS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I now reintroduce a bill which I introduced in the Seventy-seventh Congress, affecting war correspondents. The bill I am now introducing reads as follows:

A bill extending the provisions of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940 to American war correspondents.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 601 (a) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "and (6) an officially accredited American war correspondent."

SEC. 2. Section 601 (c) of such act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "and the term 'active service' in the case of an officially accredited American war correspondent, includes all periods of time during which such person is serving in his official capacity as an American war correspondent with any branch of the land or naval forces of the United States."

In this connection, Mr. President, I may say that, unfortunately, the committee to which the bill was referred at the last session of Congress did not see fit to pass upon it favorably, and it will, of necessity, return to the same committee that has been considering matters of that nature and category insofar as the National Insurance Act is affected.

I wish to state further, at this opportune time, that I trust seriously that the members of the committee to which the bill will be referred will give to it not only immediate consideration but that they will likewise certainly give to it favorable consideration, for I believe that newspapermen and war correspondents who are at the front are entitled to the benefits of the National Life Insurance Act.

In connection with this matter I wish to call the attention of the Members of this body to a very interesting article which appeared in a newspaper published in the city of Washington, namely, the Times-Herald, issue of February 10, 1943, under the caption "Capital compass," written daily by Mr. George D. Riley and Mr. Page Huidekoper. I quote from the article, as follows:

Some American correspondents in England are being given an intensive indoctrination course in bombing etiquette at the headquarters of the Eighth Air Force of the United States Army.

They have just completed their first week, which concentrated mainly on high altitude flying, use of oxygen masks during flight, and learning air force lingo. Next week they will be taught how to pack parachutes, and how to use them if the need ever arises.

Later they will go on operational raids with bombers of the Eighth Air Force and write about the raids for their respective papers at home.

Objective of all this, according to an air force colonel, is to see that the American people get the best technical reporting possible on the activities of the air force. After a little while, he said, the reporters will pick up a vast amount of intimate flying knowledge and their stories will be consequently far more graphic and accurate.

To that statement I heartily agree.

WRITERS OF WAR

According to the Joint Army and Navy Credential Board, the unit which supplies the necessary papers, there are nearly 500 newspapermen with American Army, Navy, and Air Forces abroad.

The casualty list of journalists in this war indicates the constant danger to which they are exposed. So far there have been 11 killed in action, 2 are missing, 21 wounded in line of duty, 18 captured in battle, and several score interned, of whom more than 40 have already been exchanged.

Among the correspondent heroes have been such reporters as Witt Hancock and Larry Allen, of the Associated Press; Byron Darnton, Warld War veteran, who was killed in New Guinea while covering the war in the South Pacific for the New York Times; Stanley Johnston, of the Chicago Tribune Press Service, who wrote the epic story of the sinking of the aircraft carrier Lexington; Don Bell, who stuck to his National Broadcasting Co. broadcasting post throughout the bombing of Manila; Clark Lee, of the Associated Press, whose dispatches from Bataan won even the praise of the austere Infantry Journal; Harold Guard, of the United Press; Cecil Brown, of the Columbia Broadcasting System, who was on the Repulse when she was torpedoed; Harold Denny, of the New York Times, who was captured by the Germans in Libya, and Harry Crockett, of the Associated Press, who was recently killed on duty in the Mediterranean.

Mr. President, without taking up further time of the Senate, I ask that the remainder of this brief but timely article, in the interest of American war correspondents of the newspaper fraternity of America, be printed in the RECORD at this juncture as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the remainder of the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IN WORLD WAR NO. 1

In World War No. 1 there were no United States correspondents killed in action; one died of influenza, half a dozen were slightly wounded, and two were gassed.

None was captured or interned except for those who were caught in Germany or Austria-Hungary when war broke out.

A lot of names of newspapermen of the last war stand out, but perhaps one of the most battle-scarred of the correspondents was Frederick Palmer, of the New York World. He had already covered the Greek War in 1897, the Philippines campaign, the Boxer uprising, the taking of Tientsin in 1900, and the Macedonian, Russo-Jap, Turkish, and Balkan wars and insurrections when World War No. 1 broke out.

Palmer was the only American correspondent accredited to the British Army and fleet from 1914 to 1916, and his stories were carried by Associated Press, United Press, and International News Service.

GREATS OF THE PAST

Richard Harding Davis had also already made a great name for himself in the field of journalism when World War No. 1 broke out. He had covered, among others, the Cuban campaign, and when he wasn't writing dispatches about the war he was fighting alongside Theodore Roosevelt's Rough Riders.

John T. McCutcheon, the Chicago Tribune's famous cartoonist, was a reporter in the Spanish-American War.

James Creelman, a Hearst man and another of the most famous correspondents of the last war, had also covered the Spanish-American War.

J. W. Pegler (he didn't start using his second name, Westbrook, until years later), who was then with the United Press, was another World War correspondent, but he gave it up to join the Navy.

Among the many other famous ones were Heywood Broun, Damon Runyon, Irvin Cobb, Edwin L. James, and Paul Scott Mowrer.

But no matter how much action these men saw, the Army Air Corps colonel said, it will look like nothing compared to what newspapermen in this war will see—and the Army is glad to give them technical training so they can understand the shape of the battle.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 740) extending the provisions of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940 to American war correspondents, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, for a number of years I have considered it my high privilege and solemn duty to introduce in the Senate in each Congress a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which would make it possible for the people of the District of Columbia to participate with their fellow Americans in the Government of our country.

As a firm believer in the fundamental principles of our form of government, I hold that all Americans, wherever they reside in our country, should possess the right and the privilege of participating in the legislation of the Nation through legislators of their own choosing. Likewise, I hold that all such Americans are justly entitled to participate, through their duly chosen electors, in the election of the President and the Vice President of the United States.

With the single exception of those Americans permanently residing in the District of Columbia, the way is open for all others to participate. And, strange as it may seem, the Congress, which under the Constitution is given the broad power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over the seat of the Government of the United States, has not the power to correct this grievous wrong.

Last week that wise elder statesman, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas, introduced a joint resolution in the House of Representatives to correct this serious omission from the Constitution and thus grant to the Congress a new power which it should by all means possess. I am much impressed with this new simple form of amendment, and learning that it has the approval of local civic leaders, I offer it for the consideration of the Senate in lieu of the more elaborate forms which I have heretofore introduced. Other proposed amendments introduced in the past have carried details which should be decided by subsequent legislation and are naturally of a controversial nature.

Mr. President, the amendment which I now offer is a simple, broad enabling provision which grants to Congress the power to provide that there shall be in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President Members elected by the people of the District of Columbia. The number of such Members and their powers are to be determined by the Congress. The amendment is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures of the several States, which when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States within 7 years of the date of its passage, shall be valid as a part of said Constitution, namely:

"The Congress shall have power to provide that there shall be in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President Members elected by the people of the District constituting the seat of the Government of the United States, in such numbers and with such powers as the Congress shall determine. All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal."

Mr. President, under this amendment the Congress would not surrender or in any way lessen its constitutional legislative control over the Nation's Capital. The amendment would increase the power of the Congress to cure this gross and un-American injustice at the heart of the Nation and to do this in the manner and to the degree which the Congress, in its wisdom, may determine.

The amendment concludes with a provision that, "All legislation hereunder shall be subject to amendment and repeal." This is to insure definitely that the Congress in the exercise of the proposed new power will not then expend its power beyond recapture through amendment and repeal.

Mr. President, the un-American conditions prevailing in the Capital of the Nation do not make sense. They are entirely out of harmony with the fundamental principles of our Government or the much-heralded "four freedoms." If there ever was an excuse or reason for the creation of so anomalous a situation, it could have been only for the protection of the national interest. I am satisfied that the protection of the national interest does not require these fine Americans of the Capital to be the subjects of the United States of America. They are of right and ought to be recognized as full participating citizens of the Republic.

Now, as thousands of the voteless and unrepresented men of the District of Columbia are serving in the armed forces of our and their country in this greatest of all wars, is the time for Congress to undertake the task of removing this great injustice. Yes, it will require a constitutional amendment to clothe the Congress with power to make a complete job of this long-delayed act of justice and I do not believe that that Congress should be too busy to undertake so urgent a patriotic duty.

There is nothing controversial in the amendment I am introducing. It provides a straightforward grant of power to the Congress, by appropriate legislation, to apply to the seat of the Government those cherished, fundamental American principles of our Government now denied. The time is now ripe for affirmative and curative action. This unwise and indefensible un-American condition must be erased before we can, with a clear conscience, preach freedom and democracy to the rest of the world.

Mr. President, I beseech Senators not to let this matter slumber but to give it their early and sympathetic consideration and favorable action.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 33) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and among the electors of President and Vice President to the people of the District of Columbia, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOANS FOR MINERAL DEVELOPMENT PURPOSES—RECONSIDERATION OF BILL

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 12, a bill to amend the act entitled "An act relating to direct loans for industrial purposes by Federal Reserve banks, and for other purposes, as amended, by authorizing loans for mineral development purposes in time of war," was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES

Mr. CLARK of Missouri submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 105), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the authority contained in Senate Resolution 246, agreed to April 17, 1930, authorizing a special committee to investigate the conservation of wild animal life, hereby is continued from February 1, 1943, to the end of the Seventy-eighth Congress; and the said committee hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $6,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for such purpose.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. MCNARY, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] be excused from further service on the Special Committee to Investigate Production, Transportation, and Use of Fuels in Areas West of the Mississippi River, and that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] be assigned to service on said special committee.

THE ARMY MOTION PICTURE—A PRELUDE TO WAR

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday I transmitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations some correspondence between General Marshall, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, and me. For the benefit of the Senate I request that the letter of General Marshall addressed to me under date of February 9, and my reply thereto under date of February 16, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The correspondence is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, February 9, 1943.

Hon. RUFUS C. HOLMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just read this morning in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 8, page 712, your comments regarding the Army motion pictures, and in particular the first of a series of five, A Prelude to War, which General Osborn explained to an audience of the American Legion the other day.

I want to say this: That I personally found the lectures of officers to the men, as to what we were fighting for and what the enemy had done, so unsatisfactory because of the mediocrity of presentation that I directed the preparation of this series of films. Further, that the President, Mr. Roosevelt, had never heard of their preparation, because this was a matter of Army training responsibility, until after A Prelude to War had been shown to probably a million troops.

The few civilians who did see the picture were so insistent that the public should be given the benefit of seeing it that I had the reel sent to the White House and suggested that the President see it, with a view to its release for public distribution, less the quotation from a talk by me to the graduating class at West Point. Up to the present time this release has not been authorized.

From reading your remarks I felt that you had been misled as to the responsibility for these films. It is purely mine. The actual preparation of the films, of course, was worked out by General Osborn and Frank Capra, one of the most skillful movie directors. We are in this war to defeat the Germans and the Japs, and I consider that this series of films will be definitely helpful toward that end.

Faithfully yours,

G. C. MARSHALL,
Chief of Staff.

---

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
February 16, 1943.

Gen. GEORGE C. MARSHALL,
Chief of Staff, War Department,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GENERAL MARSHALL: I acknowledge your note of the 9th instant and reply to it now since I have just returned to my office after spending the last hour and 45 minutes in the caucus room of the Senate Office Building, where for more than 40 minutes, myself and others were required to view a picture which I had never before seen and had not requested be shown. Then the picture which I saw at the American Legion annual dinner on the evening of January 11 last was shown, but not in its entirety according to my impressions and memory of the text.

Very cordially yours,

RUFUS C. HOLMAN.

LINCOLN DAY ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILEY

[Mr. WILEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a Lincoln Day speech delivered by him at a dinner sponsored by the Manitowoc County Republican Club, Manitowoc, Wis., which appears in the Appendix.]

JUDGE JOHN B. WHITFIELD, OF FLORIDA

[Mr. PEPPER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Gazette of Kissimee, Fla., of October 17, 1941, entitled "A Great Judge Retires," which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 739) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the attendance of personnel of the Army of the United States as students at educational institutions and other places," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 58) thereon.

MERGER OF TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 142)

Mr. McFARLAND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 158) to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, to permit consolidations and mergers of domestic telegraph carriers, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is amended by adding at the end of Title II the following new section:

"'CONSOLIDATIONS AND MERGERS OF TELEGRAPH CARRIERS

"'SEC. 222. (a) As used in this section—

"'(1) The term "consolidation or merger" includes the legal consolidation or merger of two or more corporations, and the acquisition by a corporation through purchase, lease, or in any other manner, of the whole or any part of the property, securities, facilities, services, or business of any other corporation or corporations, or of the control thereof, in exchange for its own securities, or otherwise.

"'(2) The term "domestic telegraph carrier" means any common carrier by wire or radio, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues is derived from domestic telegraph operations; and such term includes a corporation owning or controlling any such common carrier.

"'(3) The term "international telegraph carrier" means any common carrier by wire or radio, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues is derived from international telegraph operations; and such term includes a corporation owning or controlling any such common carrier.

"'(4) The term "consolidated or merged carrier" means any carrier by wire or radio which acquires or operates the properties and facilities unified and integrated by consolidation or merger.

"'(5) The term "domestic telegraphic operations" includes acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery of record communications by wire or radio which either originate or terminate at points within the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, Saint Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, or Newfoundland and terminate or originate at points within the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, Saint Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, or Newfoundland, and includes acceptance, transmission, reception, or delivery performed within the continental United States between points of origin within and points of exit from, and between points of entry into and points of destination within, the continental United States with respect to record communications by wire or radio which either originate or terminate outside the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, Saint Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, and Newfoundland, and also includes the transmission within the continental United States of messages which both originate and terminate outside but transit through the continental United States: Provided, That nothing in this section shall prevent international telegraph carriers from accepting and delivering international telegraph messages in the cities which constitute gateways approved by the Commission as points of entrance into or exit from the continental United States, under regulations prescribed by the Commission, and the incidental transmission or reception of the same over its own or leased lines or circuits within the continental United States.

"'(6) The term "international telegraph operations" includes acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery of record communications by wire or radio which either originate or terminate at points outside the continental United States, Alaska, Canada, Saint Pierre-Miquelon, Mexico, and Newfoundland, but does not include acceptance, transmission, reception, and delivery performed within the continental United States between points of origin within and points of exit from, and between points of entry into, and points of destination within, the continental United States with respect to such communications, or the transmission within the continental United States of messages which both originate and terminate outside but transit through the continental United States.

"'(7) The terms "domestic telegraph properties" and "domestic telegraph facilities" mean properties and facilities, respectively, used or to be used in domestic telegraph operations.

"'(8) The term "employee" or "employees" (i) shall include any individual who is absent from active service because of furlough, illness, or leave of absence, except that there shall be no obligation upon the consolidated or merged carrier to reemploy any employee who is absent because of furlough, except in accordance with the terms of his furlough, and (ii) shall not include any employee of any carrier which is a party to a consolidation or merger pursuant to this section to the extent that he is employed in any business which such carrier continues to operate independently of the consolidation or merger.

"'(9) The term "representative" includes any individual or labor organization.

"'(10) The term "continental United States" means the several States and the District of Columbia.

"'(b) (1) It shall be lawful, upon application to and approval by the Commission as hereinafter provided, for any two or more domestic telegraph carriers to effect a consolidation or merger; and for any domestic telegraph carrier, as a part of any such consolidation or merger or thereafter, to acquire all or any part of the domestic telegraph properties, domestic telegraph facilities, or domestic telegraph operations of any carrier which is not primarily a telegraph carrier: Provided, That, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, no domestic telegraph carrier shall effect a consolidation or merger with any international telegraph carrier, and no international telegraph carrier shall effect a consolidation or merger with any domestic telegraph carrier.

"'(2) As a part of any such consolidation or merger, or thereafter upon application to and approval by the Commission as hereinafter provided, the consolidated or merged carrier may acquire all or any part of the domestic telegraph properties, domestic telegraph facilities, or domestic telegraph operations of any international telegraph carrier.

"'(c) (1) Whenever any consolidation or merger is proposed under subsection (b) of this section, the telegraph carrier or telegraph carriers seeking authority therefor shall submit an application to the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall order a public hearing to be held with respect to such application and shall give reasonable notice thereof, in writing, and an opportunity to be heard, to the Governor of each of the States in which any of the physical property involved in such proposed consolidation or merger is situated, to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Attorney General of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, representatives of employees where represented by bargaining representatives known to the Commission, and to such other persons as the Commission may deem advisable. If, after such public hearing, the Commission finds that the proposed consolidation or merger, or an amended proposal for consolidation or merger, (1) is authorized by subsection (a) of this section, (2) conforms to all other applicable provisions of this section, (3) is in the public interest, the Commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation or merger, and thereupon any law or laws making consolidations and mergers unlawful shall not apply to the proposed consolidation or merger. In finding whether any proposed consolidation or merger is in the public interest, the Commission shall give due consideration, among other things, to the financial soundness of the carrier resulting from such consolidation or merger.

"'(2) Any proposed consolidation or merger of domestic telegraph carriers shall provide for the divestment of the international telegraph operations theretofore carried on by any party to the consolidation or merger, within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Commission, after the consideration for the property to be divested is found by the Commission to be commensurate with its value, and as soon as the legal obligations, if any, of the carrier to be so divested will permit. The Commission shall require at the time of the approval of such consolidation or merger that any such party exercise due diligence in bringing about such divestment as promptly as it reasonably can.

"'(d) No proposed consolidation or merger of telegraph carriers pursuant to this section shall be approved by the Commission if, as a result of such consolidation or merger, more than one-fifth of the capital stock of any carrier which is subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission will be owned or controlled, or voted, directly or indirectly, (1) by any alien or the representative of any alien, (2) by any foreign government or the representative thereof, (3) by any corporation organized under the laws of any foreign government, or (4) by any corporation of which any officer or director is an alien, or of which more than one-fifth of the capital stock is owned or controlled, or voted, directly or indirectly, by any alien or the representative of any alien, by any foreign government or the representative thereof, or by any corporation organized under the laws of a foreign government.

"'(e) (1) In the case of any consolidation or merger of telegraph carriers pursuant to this section, the consolidated or merged carrier shall, except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, distribute among the international telegraph carriers, telegraph traffic by wire or radio destined to points without the continental United States, and divide the charges for such traffic, in accordance with such just, reasonable, and equitable formula in the public interest as the interested carriers shall agree upon and the Commission shall approve: Provided, however, That in case the interested carriers should fail to agree upon a formula which the Commission approves as above provided, the Commission, after due notice and hearing, shall prescribe in its order approving and authorizing the proposed consolidation or merger a formula which it finds will be just, reasonable, equitable, and in the public interest, will be, so far as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers, and will effectuate the purposes of this subsection.

"'(2) In the case of any consolidation or merger pursuant to this section of telegraph carriers which, immediately prior to such consolidation or merger, interchanged traffic with telegraph carriers in a contiguous foreign country, the consolidated or merged carrier shall distribute among such foreign telegraph carriers, telegraph traffic by wire or radio destined to points in such contiguous foreign country and shall divide the charges therefor, in accordance with such just, reasonable, and equitable formula in the public interest as the interested carriers shall agree upon and the Commission shall approve: Provided, however, That in case the interested carriers should fail to agree upon a formula which the Commission approves as above provided, the Commission, after due notice and hearing, shall prescribe in its order approving and authorizing the proposed consolidation or merger a formula which it finds will be just, reasonable, equitable, and in the public interest, will be, so far as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers, and will effectuate the purposes of this subsection. As used in this paragraph, the term "contiguous foreign country" means Canada, Mexico, or Newfoundland.

"'(3) Whenever, upon a complaint or upon its own initiative, and after a full hearing, the Commission finds that any such distribution of telegraph traffic among telegraph carriers, or any such division of charges for such traffic, which is being made or which is proposed to be made, is or will be unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable, or not in the public interest, the Commission shall by order prescribe the distribution of such telegraph traffic, or the division of charges therefor, which will be just, reasonable, equitable, and in the public interest, and will be, so far as is consistent with the public interest, in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers.

"'(4) For the purposes of this subsection, the international telegraph operations of any domestic telegraph carrier shall be considered to be the operations of an independent international telegraph carrier, and the domestic telegraph operations of any international telegraph carrier shall be considered to be the operations of an independent domestic telegraph carrier.

"'(f) (1) Each employee of any carrier which is a party to a consolidation or merger pursuant to this section who was employed by such carrier immediately preceding the approval of such consolidation or merger, and whose period of employment began on or before March 1, 1941, shall be employed by the carrier resulting from such consolidation or merger for a period of not less than four years from the date of the approval of such consolidation or merger, and during such period no such employee shall, without his consent, have his compensation reduced or be assigned to work which is inconsistent with his past training and experience in the telegraph industry.

"'(2) If any employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger, who was employed by such carrier immediately preceding the approval of such consolidation or merger, and whose period of employment began after March 1, 1941, is discharged as a consequence of such consolidation or merger by the carrier resulting therefrom, within four years from the date of approval of the consolidation or merger, such carrier shall pay such employee at the time he is discharged severance pay in cash equal to the amount of salary or compensation he would have received during the full four-week period immediately preceding such discharge at the rate of compensation or salary payable to him during such period, multiplied by the number of years he has been continuously employed immediately preceding such discharge by one or another of such carriers who were parties to such consolidation or merger, but in no case shall any such employee receive less severance pay than the amount of salary or compensation he would have received at such rate if he were employed during such full four-week period: Provided, however, That such severance pay shall not be required to be paid to any employee who is discharged after the expiration of a period, following the date of approval of the consolidation or merger, equal to the aggregate period during which such employee was in the employ, prior to such date of approval, of one or more of the carriers which are parties to the consolidation or merger.

"'(3) For a period of four years after the date of approval of any such consolidation or merger, any employee of any carrier which is a party to such consolidation or merger who was such an employee on such date of approval, and who is discharged as a result of such consolidation or merger, shall have a preferential hiring and employment status for any position for which he is qualified by training and experience over any person who has not theretofore been an employee of any such carrier.

"'(4) If any employee is transferred from one community to another, as a result of any such consolidation or merger, the carrier resulting therefrom shall pay, in addition to such employee's regular compensation as an employee of such carrier, the actual traveling expenses of such employee and his family, including the cost of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household goods and personal effects.

"'(5) In the case of any consolidation or merger pursuant to this section, the consolidated or merged carrier shall accord to every employee or former employee, or representative or beneficiary of an employee or former employee, of any carrier which is a party to such consolidation or merger, the same pension, health, disability, or death insurance benefits, as were provided for prior to the date of approval of the consolidation or merger, under any agreement or plan of any carrier which is a party to the consolidation or merger which covered the greatest number of the employees affected by the consolidation or merger; except that in any case in which, prior to the date of approval of the consolidation or merger, an individual has exercised his right of retirement, or any right to health, disability, or death insurance benefits has accrued, under any agreement or plan of any carrier which is a party to the consolidation or merger, pension, health, disability, or death insurance benefits, as the case may be, shall be accorded in conformity with the agreement or plan under which such individual exercised such right of retirement or under which such right to benefits accrued. For purposes of determining and according the rights and benefits specified in this paragraph, any period spent in the employ of the carrier of which such individual was an employee at the time of the consolidation or merger shall be considered to have been spent in the employ of the consolidated or merged carrier. The application for approval of any consolidation or merger under this section shall contain a guaranty by the proposed consolidated carrier that there will be no impairment of any of the rights or benefits specified in this paragraph.

"'(6) Any employee who, since August 27, 1940, has left a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger, for the purpose of entering the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be considered to have been in the employ of such carrier during the time he is a member of such forces, and, upon making an application for employment with the consolidated or merged carrier within forty days from the time he is relieved from service in any of such forces under honorable conditions, such former employee shall be employed by the consolidated or merged carrier and entitled to the benefits to which he would have been entitled if he had been employed by one of such carriers during all of such period of service with such forces; except that this paragraph shall not require the consolidated or merged carrier, in the case of any such individual, to pay compensation, or to accord health, disability, or death insurance benefits, for the period during which he was a member of such forces. If any such former employee is disabled and because of such disability is no longer qualified to perform the duties of his former position but otherwise meets the requirements for employment, he shall be given such available employment at an appropriate rate of compensation as he is able to perform and to which his service credit shall entitle him.

"'(7) No employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidation or merger shall, without his consent, have his compensation reduced, or (except as provided in paragraph (2) and paragraph (8) of this subsection) be discharged or furloughed during the four-year period after the date of the approval of such consolidation or merger. No such employee shall, without his consent, have his compensation reduced, or be discharged or furloughed, in contemplation of such consolidation and merger, during the six-month period immediately preceding such approval.

"'(8) Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the discharge of any employee for insubordination, incompetency, or any other similar cause.

"'(9) All employees of any carrier resulting from any such consolidation or merger, with respect to their hours of employment, shall retain the rights provided by any collective bargaining agreement in force and effect upon the date of approval of such consolidation or merger until such agreement is terminated, executed, or superseded. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, any agreement not prohibited by law pertaining to the protection of employees may hereafter be entered into by such consolidated or merged carrier and the duly authorized representative or representatives of its employees selected according to existing law.

"'(10) For purposes of enforcement or protection of rights, privileges, and immunities granted or guaranteed under this subsection, the employees of any such consolidated or merged carrier shall be entitled to the same remedies as are provided by the National Labor Relations Act in the case of employees covered by that Act; and the National Labor Relations Board and the courts of the United States (including the courts of the District of Columbia) shall have jurisdiction and power to enforce and protect such rights, privileges, and immunities in the same manner as in the case of enforcement of the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act.

"'(11) Nothing contained in this subsection shall apply to any employee of any carrier which is a party to any such consolidition or merger whose compensation is at the rate of more than $5,000 per annum.

"'(12) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (1) and (7), the protection afforded therein for the period of four years from the date of approval of the consolidation or merger shall not, in the case of any particular employee, continue for a longer period, following such date of approval, than the aggregate period during which such employee was in the employ, prior to such date of approval, of one or more of the carriers which are parties to the consolidation or merger. As used in paragraphs (1), (2), and (7), the term "compensation" shall not include compensation attributable to overtime not guaranteed by collective bargaining agreements.'

"SEC. 2. Section 214 (a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 214. (a) No carrier shall undertake the construction of a new line or of an extension of any line, or shall acquire or operate any line, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transmission over or by means of such additional or extended line, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line: Provided, That no such certificate shall be required under this section for the construction, acquisition, or operation of (1) a line within a single State unless such line constitutes part of an interstate line, (2) local, branch, or terminal lines not exceeding ten miles in length, or (3) any line acquired under section 221 or 222 of this Act: Provided further, That the Commission may, upon appropriate request being made, authorize temporary or emergency service, or the supplementing of existing facilities, without regard to the provisions of this section. No carrier shall discontinue, reduce, or impair service to a community, or part of a community, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that neither the present nor future public convenience and necessity will be adversely affected thereby; except that the Commission may, upon appropriate request being made, authorize temporary or emergency discontinuance, reduction, or impairment of service, or partial discontinuance, reduction, or impairment of service, without regard to the provisions of this section. As used in this section the term "line" means any channel of communication established by the use of appropriate equipment, other than a channel of communication established by the interconnection of two or more existing channels: Provided, however, That nothing in this section shall be construed to require a certificate or other authorization from the Commission for any installation, replacement, or other changes in plant, operation, or equipment, other than new construction, which will not impair the adequacy or quality of service provided.'

"SEC. 3. Section 214 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(b) Upon receipt of an application for any such certificate, the Commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to, and shall cause a copy of such application to be filed with, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Governor of each State in which such line is proposed to be constructed, extended, acquired, or operated, or in which such discontinuance, reduction, or impairment of service is proposed, with the right to those notified to be heard; and the Commission may require such published notice as it shall determine.'

"SEC. 4. Section 214 (c) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(c) The Commission shall have power to issue such certificate as applied for, or to refuse to issue it, or to issue it for a portion or portions of a line, or extension thereof, or discontinuance, reduction, or impairment of service, described in the application, or for the partial exercise only of such right or privilege, and may attach to the issuance of the certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. After issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, extension, acquisition, operation, or discontinuance, reduction, or impairment of service covered thereby. Any construction, extension, acquisition, operation, discontinuance, reduction, or impairment of service contrary to the provisions of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Commission, the State commission, any State affected, or any party in interest.'

"SEC. 5. Section 214 (d) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(d) The Commission may, after full opportunity for hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, authorize or require by order any carrier, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with adequate facilities for the expeditious and efficient performance of its service as a common carrier and to extend its line or to establish a public office; but no such authorization or order shall be made unless the Commission finds, as to such provision of facilities, as to such establishment of public offices, or as to such extension, that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension or facilities that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public. Any carrier which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the Commission made in pursuance of this paragraph shall forfeit to the United States $100 for each day during which such refusal or neglect continues.'

"SEC. 6. Section 5266 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 47, sec. 3), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5266. Telegrams between the several departments of the Government and their officers, relating exclusively to the public business, in their transmission over the lines of any telegraph company to which has been given the right-of-way, timber, or station lands from the public domain, shall have priority over all other business at such rates as the Federal Communications Commission shall annually fix. No part of any appropriation for the several departments of the Government shall be paid to any company which neglects or refuses to transmit such telegrams in accordance with the provisions of this section: Provided, That nothing in this section shall limit the authority of the Federal Communications Commission, under section 201 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, with respect to the classification of communications and the prescribing of different charges for different classes of communications, and such authority of the Federal Communications Commission to fix rates for Government communications may be exercised with respect to any or all communications to which section 201 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and this section apply: Provided further, That the term "Government" as used in section 201 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and the term "departments of the Government" as used in this section, shall be held to refer only to the established departments, independent establishments, and agencies in the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Federal Government.'"

And the House agree to the same.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course, under the rule it is a privileged matter. I should like to have an explanation of the new language inserted in the bill.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, before moving the adoption of the conference report on Senate bill 158, the so-called telegraph merger bill, I will make a brief factual explanation of the provisions of the bill, as finally agreed to by the managers representing the Senate and those representing the House of Representatives on the conference committee.

If Members will bear with me without interruption, at the conclusion of the explanation I shall also comment generally on the purpose and intent of the measure, and perhaps answer some of the questions which were raised on the floor during the consideration of the bill, and subsequent to its passage by the Senate.

First, as to the form of the bill: The Senate conferees have receded from the Senate's disagreement to the amendment of the House, and have agreed to the House amendment, as amended. What this means, in nontechnical language, is that the conferees have agreed to a measure which represents, in the viewpoint of the conferees on the part of the Senate, the best features of both the House and the Senate bills. We have accepted the House arrangement of the bill, placing the definition subsection first, instead of last, as in the Senate bill.

Subsection (a) is the definition subsection. For the most part, the definitions in both bills were either identical or substantially the same. The House conferees accepted several clarifying changes to make more clear the meaning of several definitions by inserting the words "or merged" in referring to a "consolidated carrier" so as to make the bill read "consolidated or merged carrier." The House conferees also accepted a Senate proviso in one definition to make clear that international communications' companies may continue to operate offices in certain gateway cities in the United States.

Subsections (b) (1) and (2) gives authority for the merger of domestic telegraph companies or properties. The authority is permissive, not mandatory. It is subject to the approval of the Federal Communications Commission. It does not permit merger of international communications' carriers, nor the merger of a domestic carrier with an international carrier. The House and Senate language was practically identical in these paragraphs, and the House language was accepted.

Subsection (c) (1) sets out the method and conditions for submission of a merger proposal to the Federal Communications Commission. The House conferees receded and accepted Senate language which included the Attorney General of the United States as one of the officers to be notified of the proposed merger plan. They also accepted a Senate provision requiring notice to representatives of employees when represented by bargaining agents, or otherwise known to the Commission.

Paragraph (2) of this subsection provided for the divestment by the merged carrier of any international operations which it was carrying on, so that the merged domestic carrier would not be put in a position to compete unfairly with other international carriers by giving preference to its own international lines. The House bill had no such section, and the House conferees receded and accepted the Senate amendment.

Subsection (d) carried forward the present proscription against more than 20-percent foreign ownership of stock in the merged carrier. House and Senate subsections were identical on this point.

Subsection (e) (1), (2), (3), and (4) provided for an interchange of traffic between the merged domestic carrier on the one hand, and international carriers, or foreign carriers operating in contiguous foreign countries such as Canada, Mexico, Newfoundland, St. Pierre and Miquelon, or Alaska, on the other hand. The carriers are permitted to work out their own traffic arrangements, but failing in such an agreement, the Federal Communications Commission is given authority to fix a formula which will be fair and equitable, in the public interest, and in accordance with the existing contractual rights of the carriers.

In this connection, I should like to point out that some question was raised as to whether the Senate language in regard to the contractual rights of the carriers would permit the Federal Communications Commission to take into consideration the public interest when determining the formula to be prescribed. It was feared that the Senate provision might lead to an interpretation which would require the Commission to recognize contracts which were directly against the public interest. The House provision was therefore accepted because it eliminated this question. The accepted language means that the Federal Communications Commission shall give due regard to the contracts which each carrier had before the merger in prescribing a formula. However, in any event, the formula must be in the public interest. The reference to the contractual rights of the carriers is not intended to continue the life of the contracts beyond the period provided therein. These four paragraphs were substantially identical in both bills, but the House language was used in the interest of slightly greater clarity of meaning.

Subsection (f) is the so-called labor provision of the bill. Paragraph (1) extends to senior employees; namely, those employees who were employed before March 1, 1941—protection against discharge for a period of 4 years from the date of the approval of the merger, except that if an employee has had less than 4 years' service, he will have job protection only for the period equal to the time he has been an employee. The Senate conferees receded and accepted the House provision for 4-year protection instead of 5 years, as the Senate bill provided originally. The House conferees receded and accepted the remainder of the Senate language.

Paragraph (2) provides severance pay for employees who were employed after March 1, 1941. The severance pay is limited in the following particulars: It shall not be paid to any employee who is discharged 4 years after the merger, it shall not be paid to an employee who is employed after the merger, it shall not be paid to an employee who is employed after the merger for a period equal to the time he worked before the merger, severance pay is 1 month's salary for each year of employment by any carrier which is a party to the merger or the merged carrier itself. The House conferees receded and accepted the Senate provision on severance pay.

Paragraph (3) extends a preferential hiring status to all discharged employees. House and Senate provisions were identical on this point.

Paragraph (4) provides for the payment of traveling expenses for any employee who may be transferred as a result of merger. The House bill provided for traveling expenses for the employee and his family and the crating and removal of his household effects. The Senate limited the traveling expense to the family and provided a bonus of 2 months' pay in addition thereto. The difference was that the House provided for payment of expense of moving household effects, and the Senate provided for the 2 months' salary. The Senate conferees receded and accepted the House provision.

Paragraph (5) provides for extending to employees the protection accorded to them by pension, health, disability, or other benefit plans which had been operated by their employers. The Senate provision would have required existing pension and benefit plans of both carriers to be maintained in full force and effect by the merged carrier. The House provision would have permitted that pension plan which covered the greatest number of employees in the merged carrier to cover all employees.

As a practical matter, in the event of merger, this means that the Western Union plan would be the operative plan for all employees. Under certain circumstances, the Postal pension plan is slightly more beneficial, particularly to dependent beneficiaries of deceased employees, the Senate conferees were reluctant to waive those benefits. However, employees who are already retired under the Postal plan will continue to receive all the benefits provided under the Postal plan; moreover, Postal employees would, in the event of a consolidation or merger, be looking toward a solvent company for their benefits, instead of running the risk incident to receiving slightly larger benefits from the hands of a company which is steadily losing large sums of money. Those factors impelled the Senate conferees to recede, and to accept the House paragraph.

Paragraph (6) gives to those employees of the merged carrier, or parties to the merger, who have entered the armed service a seniority standing for purposes of employment upon their return from the war. The section is similar to one enacted for Government employees, and was substantially similar in both bills. Because the House provision contained a clause which made clear that the employer was not liable for benefits for any injury sustained while the employee was on active service, the Senate conferees receded, and accepted the House provision.

Paragraph (7) provides that, except as provided for in other paragraphs, no employee may, without his consent, have his compensation reduced, or be discharged or furloughed, within the period of 6 months before the merger, in contemplation of merger, or within a period of 4 years after the merger. This paragraph does not, of course, vitiate provisions already referred to, which do permit discharge or severance pay to certain classes of employees; nor does it prohibit employees, through their collective bargaining agencies, from negotiating wage changes. The provision as agreed to by the conferees represents a redraft of comparable Senate and House language. Mr. President, its only purpose is to prevent the reduction of wages at the time of the approval of the measure. In the case of wages which may be increased after the merger, the language is not intended to prohibit the company from reducing them to the amount of the wages received by the employees at the time of the approval of the consolidation or merger.

I believe it is desirable to interpolate here that the term "without his consent," used in several paragraphs of the labor protection subsection and which refers to the employee's consent, is intended to include consent by bargaining agents. It is not intended to prevent employer and employee from negotiating new agreements affecting wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment. It is the intent of the conferees that the employee, through his collective-bargaining agents, shall be free to make whatever changes or modifications he deems desirable with respect to his working conditions.

Paragraph (8) makes clear that any employee may be discharged for incompetency, insubordination, or other good cause; paragraphs (9) and (10) provide, respectively, that the merger shall not vitiate collective-bargaining agreements now in force between employer and employees with respect to hours of employment and give the National Labor Relations Board authority under the Labor Relations Act with respect to any matters arising under those paragraphs. The language of all three paragraphs was practically identical in both bills.

Paragraph (11) provides that employees paid more than $5,000 per annum shall not come within the provisions of the labor subsection of the bill. This paragraph was identical in both bills.

Paragraph (12) makes clear that the protection afforded to employees under paragraphs (1) and (7) shall not extend for a longer period after merger than the period during which the employee worked before merger. In short, an employee who had worked for 1 year before merger would have 1 year's protection, a 2-year employee would have 2 years' protection, and so on. This paragraph also provides that overtime not guaranteed by collective-bargaining agreements shall not be included in the term "compensation," where such term is used in paragraphs (1), (2), and (7) of this labor subsection.

Sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the bill are amendments to the existing sections 214 (a), (b), (c), and (d), respectively, of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, in order to make them conform to and be pertinent with respect to the merger authorized by the pending bill.

Section 2 in the Senate bill would have required Commission authorization before a carrier could abandon a line, plant, office, or other physical facility. The House bill provided that the measuring stick should be service to a community and required Commission authorization if service were to be discontinued to a community or a part of a community. The Senate conferees agreed that the Senate language might act too restrictively upon carriers, requiring them to file literally thousands of applications for what are, in effect, minor installations or abandonments. The Senate, however, insisted upon language somewhat more restrictive than that employed by the House. The conferees agreed that no carrier shall discontinue, reduce, or impair service to a community or a part of a community without first receiving Commission approval. The effect of the amendatory words "reduce or impair," it is believed, will be to make certain that no community or part of a community anywhere in the United States will be deprived of any element of service presently received from telegraph or telephone companies.

The House subsection also included a definition of the word "line." This has long been a troublesome point, the Communications Act not having heretofore included such a definition. The absence of such a definition in statute law has led to the practice of having the regulating agency define what is a "line." The tremendous scientific advance in communications has outmoded the old belief that a line is a copper wire strung on poles. Modern scientific development has made it possible by the installation of such gadgets as "phantom circuits" and "repeater coils" to carry on as many as 244 simultaneous conversations over a single pair of wires. As a result, carriers have felt that they have been unduly burdened by having to file applications for installations, or for abandonments, in which major installations, or reductions of major installations, were not at issue. This has added to the book and paper work of the Communications Commission and of the carriers. The definition of "line" proposed in the House bill conforms in substantial degree with the definition heretofore exercised by the Commission, and it is my understanding that the Commission has no objection to its inclusion in the law. The Senate conferees, therefore, receded and accepted the House definition of "line."

The House subsection also carried a proviso which seeks to make clear that any installation, replacement, or other changes in plant, operation, or equipment, other than new construction, shall not require a certificate or other authorization from the Federal Communications Commission. The Senate conferees accepted this proviso. However, I desire to make clear at this point that it is not my understanding, nor do I believe is it the understanding of other members of the Senate conference committee that this proviso is intended to permit communications carriers to escape Commission regulation in any major degree. I believe it is the intent of the framers of this legislation and those who worked on the adjustment of differences between House and Senate bills, that the carriers shall not be unduly burdened by unnecessary paper work, particularly in these wartimes. On the other hand, I am equally sure that it is not intended that this proviso shall permit communications carriers to make major installations or abandonments, or to modify existing installations to a degree that service is affected, without first going to the Government regulatory agency for the authorizations duly provided by law. It was for this very reason that the Senate conferees insisted upon the inclusion in this section of the words "reduce or impair" the service.

Sections 214 (b), (c), and (d) were modified to conform with section 214 (a) which I have just explained in detail. The principal changes concerned the addition of the words "reduction, or impairment" so that service may not be "discontinued, reduced, or impaired" to a community, or a part of a community without prior Commission authorization.

Section 6 is an amendment of the old Post Roads Act of 1866, which, among other things, provided that carriage of Government telegrams was to have priority and a preferential rate. The bill, as it passed the Senate, would have eliminated this preferential rate to the Government, on the theory that the benefits to the carriers have long ceased to exist, or have been paid for, and that there exists no equity when telegraph carriers are required to give a preferential rate while telephone carriers are not. However, this amendment was stricken by the House during consideration of the bill on the House floor. The Senate conferees receded and adopted the original provision of the Post Roads Act which leaves intact the authority of the Federal Communications Commission to fix a preferential rate for Government telegrams. However, the conferees have adopted amendatory language of some importance, which would remove the present preferential Government rate for telegrams of cost-plus and fixed-fee contractors.

I believe a word of explanation is necessary here, so that the Senate may understand what is taking place, and what the bill would do in this respect.

The present preferential rate for Government telegrams is 60 percent of normal; in other words, telegraph companies transmit Government mesages at 40 percent under established tariff rates. Some months ago, the Comptroller General, in a formal ruling, held that this same Government rate shall be extended to all cost-plus and fixed-fee contractors of the Government. This means that every prime contractor holding Government contracts sends messages at the special Government rate. It also means that such contractors have the privilege of this special rate in telegraph communications with their subcontractors, and the subcontractors with their subcontractors, and so on ad infinitum. The managers of the conference on the part of the House and the Senate agreed unanimously that this is an unhealthy practice—a form of subsidization exacted from the telegraph carriers which is warranted neither by the intent of the law nor by the facts. To meet this situation, the conferees have adopted an amendment which defines the word "Government" in section 201 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and the words "departments of the Government" in the Post Roads Act to mean established departments and agencies of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Federal Government. It is clearly the intent and purpose of the conferees that this amendment shall stop the practice of making available to cost-plus-and-fixed-fee contractors the special Government preferential rate for telegrams.

Moreover, I believe this is an excellent point at which to call the Senate's attention to a situation which has been referred to and deplored on numerous occasions by able Members of this body, namely the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce [Mr. WHEELER] and the ranking minority member of that committee, the able Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. That practice is the wasting of public moneys by officials of the Government departments and agencies by the inordinate and extravagant use of telephone and telegraph. I cannot overemphasize the extent to which this has gone. The annual telephone and telegraph bill of the Federal Government is fantastic; it is virtually impossible to get accurate figures, because of the intermingling of appropriated funds. I am well aware that this Nation is at war, and that wartime exigencies do not allow of cautious use of communications facilities; but this waste of public moneys for communications existed before the war, and has merely grown with the war. There is, for example, no excuse for a Government agency to send out several thousand identical telegrams having to do with a rationing order which was not to take effect for 30 days thereafter. Too many Government officials think nothing of propping their feet on the desk, picking up the telephone receiver, and telling the operator, "Get me San Francisco," or Hawaii. They would probably call Australia if they could get a line through, just for the sake of calling. I do not intend to criticize the armed services in their use of world-wide communications; I believe we all realize that the strict chain-of-command procedure under which they work makes it very likely that there is no needless or wasteful use of communications facilities by the services; but I am quite sure that a competent communications supervisor, should it be possible to have such a person exercising authority over the civilian departments, could cut the cost of Government communications services by one-third without impairing in the slightest degree the efficiency or speed of Government agency functioning.

I have concluded my explanation of the telegraph merger bill, as agreed to by the conferees of the two Houses. Before requesting adoption of the report, I should like to make clear to the Senate certain other facts in connection with this legislation.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. HILL. As a member of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, which had original jurisdiction over the bill, and as a member of the conference committee, I wish to say that I agree with the Senator from Arizona as to the intents and purposes of the different provisions of the bill as he has given expression to them. I think he has very accurately and very clearly interpreted the provisions of the bill and their meaning and purposes.

I think I should add that the Senator from Arizona has done yeoman service in carrying this bill through the different parliamentary stages. It was not an easy bill to draft; it was one which presented many difficulties, and which involved conflicting interests of various kinds. I congratulate the Senator on the splendid work he did as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce and on all the good work he has done in bringing this proposed legislation out to its final stages.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator for his kindly remarks.

Mr. President, I am a relatively new Member of the Senate, but I am reliably informed that few bills in the last decade have had as much time, attention, study, and serious questioning devoted to them as has the telegraph merger bill.

I do not intend at this time to go into a long recital of the history of this bill. I think I can say without hesitation or equivocation that no essential fact relating to this subject has escaped those who have worked on this matter.

It has been stated here on the floor that this bill would "bail out" some Wall Street speculators. To my knowledge, this Government has not yet passed a law prohibiting its citizens from purchasing and selling securities, nor specifying who may and who may not purchase or sell securities. I do not see anything wrong about making known who are owners of Postal or Western Union securities. Nor do I know any way by which people can be prevented from purchasing the securities of these companies. However, for the information of the Senate, I am very reliably informed that slightly more than 70 percent of the securities of the Postal Co. are held by the former bondholders; and if anyone believes that such bondholders are going to get rich out of this merger, let me inform the Senate that the present market value of all of the securities held by a former $1,000 bondholder—securities which he got in exchange for his $1,000 bond when the Postal Co. went through a Federal court supervised reorganization—is about $360. In other words, the man who invested $1,000 in Postal bonds some years ago can now get for his $1,000 investment $360. It is true that Postal preferred stock, the senior security of the present landline company, has risen from $9 a share to $19 or $20. However, I desire to point out the fact that there is no way of determining at this time what the value of this security will be in the event of a merger. We all know that securities fluctuate frequently on the market upon a mere suspicion or hope that their value will be increased. I, for one, am not guided or interested by what the people in Wall Street do in this regard. My chief interest in this proposed legislation is to give the people of the United States a better communications service, and to give protection to the employee who has spent years in preparation for his profession.

There also was inserted in the RECORD some days ago a copy of the reorganization plan of the Postal Co. Some Members may have thought that this was a hard-to-get document; that the Senate was being let in on something hot and exclusive. The reorganization plan has been in the files of our Telegraph Investigating Committee for more than 2 years; it has been studied by members of the committee. Incidentally, it is, in my opinion, an excellent reorganization plan, and Federal Judge Alfred Coxe, of New York, is to be complimented in supervising a reorganization which did not lead to the iniquities of so many other reorganization plans about which we have heard.

It has also been said here, and in another Chamber, that we are creating monopoly by this legislation. I should like to call the Senate's attention to the fact that some very famous antimonopolists have had a very important and guiding hand with respect to the pending legislation. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, who supervised the investigation of the telegraph industry which led to the official Senate report recommending merger in this industry, is no friend of monopoly, I am sure most Members will agree. Nor is the Senator from Arizona an advocate of monopoly.

The plain facts of the matter are, as adduced after the most careful and searching examination, that merger of these competing telegraph companies is a public convenience and necessity. It is no more rational, in fact, far less rational, to have two national telegraph companies than it is to have two national telephone companies. One company is losing large sums of money each month, from $300,000 to $400,000. That company has borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation some $9,000,000, which is, incidentally, a first lien on its property and must be repaid first by any purchaser. It is only a matter of time—a very short time—before that company will be forced to the wall, or be taken over by the Government. To abandon essential communication facilities in wartime is nonsensical and hazardous, and I, for one, do not approve the Government going into the private business field.

Should a merger eventuate—and I am sure that one will—the Nation will have a sound and strong telegraph company. The employees of Postal, who could not expect to have either job security or better wages from a weak company which could not make ends meet, will be in a much improved situation. They will be employed by a financially sound carrier which should be in a position to raise wage standards to levels in comparable industry, and to give them job security.

Moreover, so long as we have the telephone and the air mail there is little danger of monopoly in the domestic communications field. Properly regulated in the public interest, there is every reason to believe that not only will there be a great improvement in service to the public by both the telephone and telegraph after the war, but that the user can confidently expect major rate reductions in both fields.

One word in conclusion. I believe it is incumbent upon me to state that the objective of those in charge of the proposed legislation was to legislate with the purpose of achieving a merger. We have sought to avoid any harm to the interests of the employees; and I believe we have succeeded. Certainly we have gone further in affording labor protection than Congress ever has gone heretofore. But at the same time we have here a bill which should afford every facility in consummating a merger. We confidently expect the carriers to get together—and to get together quickly—in the public interest, and in their own interest. There can be no valid reason, with enactment of such legislation, why there should not be a quick merger in the telegraph industry, and I am sure that the Federal Communications Commission will exercise every facility and precaution to see to it that merger is consummated without delay.

I desire at this time to express my deep appreciation and thanks to the members of the conference committee for their patience and devotion to duty in working out this proposed legislation. I should be less than frank if I did not pay my respects to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]; the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TUNNELL]; the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], whose excellent background knowledge of this subject has been invaluable to us; and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], whose patient and expert advice on legal points has materially helped in perfecting the bill.

Unless there are questions to be propounded, I move the adoption of the conference report on Senate bill 158.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the report?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this conference report refers to one of the most important bills that has been before the Congress in a great many years. It would create monopoly in the hands of one of our great service companies. I am not urging that thought in opposition to the report. The Senator has made a long and an able speech, little of which I have been able to obtain through the sense of hearing because of noise in the Senate Chamber. Because of the importance of the report, and the measure with which it deals, I should like to have the report go over until Monday, so that we may have an opportunity to read in the RECORD the very able speech of the Senator from Arizona, and to study the report. Personally, I have a matter which I desire to discuss, after a little study regarding an addition to the last section of the bill, which provides more particularly with reference to the Government agencies which control the cost of Federal communications. I point that out only as an incident. Several Senators who were unable to follow completely and closely the splendid speech of the Senator from Arizona have spoken to me of their desire to study the speech and the report. For these reasons I should like to have the report go over until Monday.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before the request is acted on, I desire to be recognized for about 3 or 4 minutes.

Mr. McNARY. I think we can settle this matter now.

Mr. McFARLAND. I desire to point out to the Senator from Oregon that the proposed legislation has been pending a long time. I have been anxious for some time to devote myself to several other important matters, but the pendency of this proposed legislation has prevented me from doing so, and I am desirous of completing action on this matter.

The Senator understands that I shall be glad to answer any questions in respect to the conference report. I call his attention to the fact that the conferees worked on the bill 4 days. I am sure it is the best bill that can be worked out, that it is the only one to which we can agree. I do not believe there could be any advantage in delaying this report or returning it to the conference committee.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want the report to go back to the committee of conference. I ask for a delay of 3 or 4 days so that some others may have an opportunity to read the Senator's speech and study the conference report. I am merely asking delay in the consideration of the conference report; I do not want the report to go back to the conference committee. It may be a perfect report, it may have analyzed the whole situation precisely as it should be analyzed. I have no criticism to offer at this time, but, along with many other Senators who have not been members of the conference committee, I desire to have an opportunity to read the very able speech of the Senator, and to study the long report, inasmuch as it involves a very important piece of legislation. I can see no reason for acting at this moment, for acting impetuously. I am merely asking for accommodation, not for myself so much but for other Senators who are not familiar with the conference report.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I can see nothing to be gained by putting off the enactment of the legislation. There is nothing new involved in the report, nothing that was not involved in the bill and discussed on the floor of the Senate heretofore. The bill is substantially the same, except in the few particulars which have been pointed out.

I should like very much to finish the consideration of the conference report today. Handling this bill was a job which I assumed at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I have worked on it for a long time. I have other important matters which I cannot turn to until this bill shall be finally completed; and the other matters are extremely important. I assure the Senator that it is important that we dispose of the proposed legislation today.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is rather unusual to have denied a request of the kind I have made. Of course, the able Senator from Arizonia is familiar with the conference report and with the bill; but he is only one out of 96 Senators. I am not familiar with the report. I am not familiar with the contents of the speech of the able Senator from Arizona. Other Senators are in the same situation in which I find myself in that regard. I desire to have an opportunity to study the report. I do not accept conference reports merely because someone says they are perfect, or that they satisfy his judgment. I am asking as a matter of courtesy that I may have an opportunity to study the conference report.

Otherwise, I shall resort to whatever parliamentary action I may invoke.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I do not want to deprive the Senator from Oregon of the opportunity of studying the report. If I agree that the conference report go over until Monday will the Senator agree to permit the Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures a little additional time in which to finish its work and make a report?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am dealing with one piece of legislation or one matter at a time. I am asking that the report go over so that we may have the benefits which will come from a study of the report and of the Senator's speech.

Mr. McFARLAND. I ask only for a few days additional time to prepare a report from the committee.

Mr. McNARY. What is the report?

Mr. McFARLAND. The report of the Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to that. I suppose I am trading.

Mr. McFARLAND. No; I am not trying to trade with the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I say that I should like to dispose of one thing at a time. If the Senator will let the conference report go over, very well, otherwise I shall oppose its consideration today.

Mr. McFARLAND. Will the Senator consider it sufficient time if consideration of the conference report be postponed until Monday?

Mr. McNARY. I am only asking for postponement until Monday, and I will cooperate with the Senator from Arizona in bringing it before the Senate then.

Mr. McFARLAND. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. It may be that the conference report is a perfectly fine one. It may be that the proposed legislation is in the best of form. I want the opportunity, however, and other Senators join with me in wishing to have an opportunity to read the Senator's speech—we are all sorry we did not hear it in detail—and also to read the conference report.

Mr. McFARLAND. I appreciate the kind remarks of the Senator that my explanation of the bill was a good speech.

Mr. McNARY. It was an excellent speech, one of the best I have heard this month. I am sure it is the best I have heard this week.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. Then I understand that the conference report will go over until Monday, and that the request is made by the Senator from Arizona for additional time for the Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures to make a report?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. May we agree upon the amount of additional time to be given the committee?

Mr. McFARLAND. Would 10 days additional time be agreeable?

Mr. McNARY. That would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. McFARLAND. I will make the motion, then, that——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senator from Arizona makes his motion, I ask him if he will yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are in the morning hour, and I wish to address the Senate for about 4 or 5 minutes. I am not willing to agree to the motion until I shall have addressed the Senate for 4 or 5 minutes. I ask the Senator from Arizona to withhold his motion for a few minutes.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE SENATORIAL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to obtain unanimous consent for additional time in which the Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures may make its report.

Mr. McKELLAR. So far as I am concerned, I will give my consent to that request after I shall have finished my address.

Mr. McFARLAND. My request is that the Committee to Investigate Senatorial Campaign Expenditures be continued in full force and effect for 10 additional days. On January 25, 1943, the time was extended by Senate Resolution 86 until March 6, 1943. I now ask that the time be further extended to March 16, 1943.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MERGER OF TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let us finish the matter which is now before us before proceeding to something else. Then, consideration of the conference report will go over until Monday next?

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is recognized.

CONFIRMATION BY SENATE OF ADDITIONAL FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there was published in Wednesday morning's Washington Post an article describing a press conference with the President, in which appears a question by Irving Brandt, editorial writer of the Chicago Sun, who asked the President about the McKellar bill to take 70,000 employees out of the civil service and require Senate confirmation of their appointments.

Brandt said that if there was a Senate debate on one out of every hundred of the appointees, and even if the debate lasted only 5 minutes, it would take 45 minutes out of each day that the Senate is in session for the entire year. He figured this out based on the 157 legislative days of last year.

I read from the article, as follows:

"I should like to ask you," he inquired of the President, "couldn't the Senate, in wartime, be better employed."

The President said he would reply by quoting a little line in the Bible: "Thou hast said it."

Mr. President, I shall not criticize either the President or Mr. Brandt, but in order to keep the record straight I desire to say that during 1942 the Senate confirmed 3,118 postmasters, and 1,039 other civilians, 5,068 Army officers, 2,868 Navy officers, and 766 Marine Corps officers, or a total of 12,859, and that the confirmation of these officers did not take one one-hundredth of the time suggested by Mr. Brandt and apparently acquiesced in by the President. The Senate has confirmed 100,328 such officers and officials in about 9 years, and in not more than one one-fiftieth of the time suggested by Mr. Brandt.

Not only that, Mr. President, the Senate has confirmed 33,966 postmasters, and the best kind of postmasters, without a charge having been made, so far as I can recall, of there being a Communist, a defaulter, or an unpatriotic person among them. The nominations of 34,020 Army officers of the highest grade and character have been confirmed without a charge being made, so far as I have heard, that any one of them was tinctured with a lack of patriotism, or was communistic or dishonest.

The nominations of 20,928 naval officers of the highest type and kind have been confirmed, without any one of them being charged with dishonesty, communism, lack of patriotism, or being inefficient. Likewise, the nominations of 3,964 Marine officers, fine fighting men, the best ever, were confirmed without a charge having been made, so far as I have heard, that they were unpatriotic, communistic, or inefficient in any way.

In like manner, 7,450 civilian officers of the finest kind have been appointed, concerning whom there has been no scandal, so far as I know.

The statement that the confirmation in 1942 of more than 12,000 officers took something like 17 days of the Senate's time is so incorrect as to be laughable. I shall submit a table giving the facts and figures.

The statement that my bill takes 70,000 Federal employees out of Civil Service is without foundation in fact, and therefore, Mr. Brandt's question to the President was entirely misleading and not founded on facts, though I am sure he did not intend it to be.

He was simply misinformed about the matter.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table to which I previously referred be printed in the RECORD, as well as the article entitled, "Roosevelt Says He's Post-War Money Saver," published in the Washington Post of February 17.

There being no objection, the table and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Classified table of nominations, with totals and grand totals received each session of Congress, Mar. 4, 1933, to Dec. 16, 1942

ROOSEVELT SAYS HE'S POST-WAR MONEY SAVER—SEES CONGRESS AS SPENDTHRIFT IF IT KILLS PLAN AGENCIES

President Roosevelt said yesterday at his press conference that, so far as post-war planning was concerned, he was a great saver of money, a watchdog of the Nation's pocketbook.

The spendthrifts, he said, will turn out to be Members of Congress if Congress votes to abolish agencies like the National Resources Board, which are planning for a post-war America.

Mr. Roosevelt's eyes twinkled when he referred to himself as a Treasury watchdog—a role of his, which, he said, had not been given sufficient publicity—but his smile disappeared when he began defending the National Resources Board.

FUND ELIMINATED

Members of Congress, told about the President's statement, said that they too favored post-war planning, but were opposed to any more "superboondoggling."

The House Appropriations Committee recently eliminated from the Independent Offices bill an estimate of $1,400,000 to run the National Resources Board, which is headed by the President's uncle, Frederic A. Delano. The appropriation bill is now before the House.

President Roosevelt praised the Board warmly, saying it had been doing good work in planning a backlog of jobs for the day when the soldiers come marching home. Most people, he said, think that it is only necessary for Congress to appropriate money to create jobs in public-works projects and the like.

But the fact is, the President said, that there must be a great deal of planning in advance—planning by engineers, architects, and others. This, he said, is the kind of planning the National Resources Board has been doing, and he estimated that this planning would save the country several billions of dollars in preventing unemployment and other post-war problems.

If we are going to wait until the war is over to do such planning, he went on, it is going to cost the American taxpayers a lot of money.

At this point, the President pictured himself as a watchdog and placed the onus of spendthrifts on Members of Congress if they let the National Resources Board die.

What started the President off was a question by Irving Brandt, editorial writer of the Chicago Sun, who asked him about the McKellar bill to take 70,000 Federal employees out of the civil service and require Senate confirmation of their appointments.

Brandt said that if there was a Senate debate on 1 out of every 100 of the appointees, and even if the debate lasted only 5 minutes, it would take 45 minutes out of each day that the Senate is in session for the entire year. He had figured this out on the 157 legislative days of last year.

"I should like to ask you," he inquired of the President, "couldn't the Senate, in wartime, be better employed."

The President said he would reply by quoting a little line in the Bible:

"Thou hast said it."

PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF PIPE LINE FROM TEXAS TO INDIANA

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, Senate Resolution 103, to investigate certain matters in connection with the proposed construction of an additional pipe line from Texas to Indiana, would automatically come before the Senate under the rule. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has agreed that the resolution go over without prejudice until Monday. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, newspaper columnists have expressed their views on many subjects, whether always justly or not, depending on what they were discussing, but surely they have not spared the administration policies.

When one finds a columnist so eminent as Frank R. Kent, of the Baltimore Sun, in the issue of February 3, 1943, prophesying dire calamity to the Republican Party should it fail to support the administration's economic program in promulgating trade agreements, one may say "this is news." Mr. Kent is to be congratulated on his alertness in respect to the subject he discusses, and I think he is reasoning very clearly when he points out in his article entitled "Traps for Republicans"—extracts from which I shall quote—that the Republican Party will make a great mistake if it does not support the Hull trade agreements when the time comes for their renewal, but I think he is more than slightly mistaken when he says that the administration does not rank these treaties as wholesome and far-reaching.

Mr. Kent stated in his article:

The administration politicians are proceeding on the assumption that, politically, the Republican leadership in Congress is foolish and, itself, can be depended upon to nullify the advantage which the November elections have given its party. Perhaps they are right about that, and within a short while the Republican attack will be of such character as to rob their 1944 prospects of their present charm.

Certainly, it requires no particular discernment to see one of the pitfalls into which the rejuvenated and strengthened Republicans may easily fall.

These are the treaties with which for 10 years Secretary of State Cordell Hull steadfastly has tried to break down the tariff barriers that blocked the international channels, and open up a clear and unrestricted flow of trade between nations. Against opposition (or, anyhow, lukewarmness) inside the administration as well as outside, with undeviating persistence, he achieved a remarkable degree of success. The strength of his ideas and his quiet courage in fighting for them have made him the outstanding member of the Roosevelt Cabinet, and rendered him immune to the sniping from the inside as well as the outside, to which he is constantly subjected. Recent bitter criticism of his north African policies, which were fully approved by the President, has been singularly ineffective in shaking confidence in either his integrity or his wisdom.

Though the new dealers do not list them as such, these reciprocal trade treaties rank as the most wholesome and far-reaching achievement of the Roosevelt regime. They constitute the one expression of international cooperation during the years when the administration was as isolationist in its color as any we have had. If, now, these treaties should be repudiated, it would be a disastrous backward step toward the old high-tariff protection system for which there would be neither defense nor excuse.

In this connection, I should like to quote from the remarks made by the titular leader of the Republican Party, Mr. Willkie, in his address at Indianapolis on February 11, last Saturday night, taken from the New York Times:

In his address tonight Mr. Willkie criticized the "stenciled" characterization of a Republican as "a socially unconscious, hidebound conservative," and said that the principle of reciprocity in trade had been advocated by such "high tariff" Republicans as President McKinley, James G. Blaine, and William Howard Taft.

"The Hull trade treaties are an adaptation of that principle," he said.

Declaring that the present trade treaties and lend-lease had become "symbols to millions of an enlarged vision of the world's economic problems," Mr. Willkie said:

"Our opponents are trying to create the impression that we lack that vision, though we first developed the principle of reciprocity and though lend-lease was passed only with the help of millions of Republican citizens."

"There can be no doubt concerning our responsibilities toward the great social aims of our times," Mr. Willkie went on. "But we must take the leadership in converting those aims into realities. There must never again be any question of the right of workers to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, or of the fundamental right of all our citizens to be free of racial discrimination.

"And we must recognize that we, through our Government, have a duty toward every citizen in this land to protect him or her against economic calamity. For every citizen owes to every other citizen basic protection against the hazards of unemployment, old age, accident, and ill-health."

I note with pleasure that the titular leader is still 100-percent Republican, and I quote the closing paragraph of his speech:

This should be a challenge to Republicans. For the Republican Party is the party of production. It should be the party of expansion as well, and of dynamic industrial evolution.

I know my friends on the other side are glad to hear him again announce his position as a Republican for that, I know, should assure and encourage them as they approach the campaign of 1944.

MANPOWER — ARTICLE BY SENATOR LODGE AND LETTER FROM SOLDIER ON GUADALCANAL

Mr. O'MAHONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to make two unanimous-consent requests. One of them relates to the study which has recently been made in Congress of one of the most important questions, namely, that relating to manpower.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an article entitled, "Why an Army of Seven and One-half Million Men?" written by our distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and published in The Republican, the national party magazine, for February 1943.

I wish to commend the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for this great public service. Our people need to know the facts relating to the number of men who are necessary for the armed forces in order to know what to do about mobilization of all our men and women who are competent to serve in noncombatant duties. The two subjects must be united in order to arrive at any rational balance between men who are in the armed services and those who are engaged in industry, as well as to establish a necessary and proper balance among the various kinds of work, namely, agriculture, industry, mining, and miscellaneous war activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD following my remarks a letter which bears directly upon the question of manpower. It was published in the Virginia Legionnaire for February 1943. The letter is from a boy in the service on Guadalcanal, and it pictures a situation which is sure to fix the interest of the people of the United States upon a comparison between the man over there in the swamps, sacrificing or willing to sacrifice his life for the cause, and the man in the shop, or shipyard, who is referred to in the postscript of the letter as follows:

P. S.—Was just talking with the pilot of a B–17 that arrived from the States less than an hour ago. He said that one day last week there was quite a heavy rain at Seattle and that at a certain shipyard 1,064 men didn't come to work. I wish he hadn't told me that.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"I WISH HE HADN'T TOLD ME THAT"

A letter written by a former employee of the Lake Washington Shipyards at Houghton, Wash., to two of his friends working at the yard was printed recently in the employee's paper, On the Ways.

Written from Guadalcanal where this ex-shipyard worker is now fighting with America's armed forces, the letter, which appears below, packs a punch that ought to make us here at home stop short and think anytime we are tempted to give our jobs anything but the very best we've got as we begin this new year.

HENDERSON FIELD,
Guadalcanal.

DEAR TOM AND HARRY: I've wanted to write you for some time but for the past 10 days our gang has been in hell. We chased the Japs across the river and held our ground against mortars, dive bombers, artillery, snipers, bayonets, and belly knives.

Eight of us had to lay in jungle slime up to our mouths for a whole day because the Japs had the bead on us from two sides. Charlie, next to me, whispered, "I think I can make it," and raised his head for a cautious look. I saw him grin as he drew his Garand forward. That was all. Thank God he died instantly. But his blood oozing out over the slime, reaching at us in waving fingers, nearly drove us mad.

A Jap mortar almost got us when a shell exploded about 40 feet away. We practically dug our graves that time. I spit blood for an hour. After nightfall the seven of us quietly slithered out of that stagnant pool like crocodiles. The Japs knew we were flanking them and fired wildly. There was about 6 inches of water and when Ed got hit in the spine with shrapnel, I think he purposely went under. A single sound would have told the Japs our location.

About the time you fellows on the swing-shift were knocking off to go home, we hooked up with our platoon again, gave the captain the exact position of the Japs. A runner crawled to the rear and in 15 minutes our artillery finished off that pocket of rice-eaters.

An hour after dawn we had our first food in 24 hours. Dead tired, we tried to sleep on some palm fronds. But a bunch of Zeros came over and spit at us. Louis was carrying some canteens of drinking water and—his number was up.

Yep, this is quite a war. You live your life in a split second lots of times. Sometimes I wish every fellow I know could spend just 1 day and 1 terrifying night out here with us. There would be more aching bellies and not so much bellyaching.

One of the great thrills—if there can be thrills in this business—is to see men come of age under fire. They grow up as shells burst. They work like mad. They fight like mad. Time and again I've seen one of our boys dash across open country, directly in the line of fire, to help a buddy in trouble. The only whistles on Guadalcanal are the screaming kind that go overhead.

Got a job to do tomorrow I don't particularly like. We've got to bury about 200 Japs. They are commencing to stink up the place pretty bad.

Wish there was more to write about, but there isn't. Remember me to the gang in the yard. I'll write again if I get a chance.

So long and good luck,

PETE OLESON.

P. S.—Was just talking with the pilot of a B–17 that arrived from the States less than an hour ago. He said that 1 day last week there was quite a heavy rain at Seattle and that at a certain shipyard 1,064 men didn't come to work. I wish he hadn't told me that.

PETE.

MINING ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] under a misapprehension. I was certain that the distinguished Senator rose to make some comment concerning the able speech of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] about the alleged Republican policy on trade agreements.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I was so pleased with the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania that I did not feel impelled to make any allusions to his address.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sorry that the Senator was so pleased because for myself I dislike to see the Democratic Party follow the errors of the persons mentioned by the able Senator from Pennsylvania. Reciprocity without the concurrence of the Congress or of the Senate on the specific agreements is an example of what I regard unwise delegation of legislative power, a position which I have taken before in this body and which I think I shall take in the future.

However, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing that subject. For the past year and a half or more the Senate Committee on Public Lands has been conducting through a subcommittee a study of the possibility of developing mineral resources upon the public lands of the United States.

I rise now to introduce a bill which has been the result of the time and attention which I have given to that problem. I believe the bill is worth mentioning even at this hour, because it attempts to correct a recent tendency, which has been manifest in some of the executive departments, to expand their jurisdiction and activities without the benefit of statute.

From the earliest time the public lands of the United States have been administered by the General Land Office which is now a part of the Interior Department. Recently, however, there has been a disposition on the part of some agencies to handle the public lands without regard to the specific policies which have been laid down by Congress.

For example, in recent years the Department of Agriculture has, in accordance with law, acquired some 30,000,000 acres of land. Some of that land was purchased under the laws providing for the extension of the national forests. Some of it was acquired under the Bankhead-Jones Act. Some of it was acquired under the laws of Congress authorizing, for the purposes of the emergency, the purchase of submarginal lands. Some 900,000 acres, for example, have been acquired in that manner.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am interested in knowing the amount of acreage owned in fee simple by the United States Government at the present time. Could the Senator enlighten me? I make the inquiry for the reason that recently I have read in the press various criticisms of the United States Government for acquiring so much land. Yesterday or the day before I read an article by a newspaper columnist to the effect that the Government had acquired land equal in area to a large part of the New England States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Actually the United States owns considerably less land now than it previously had in its history. However, that, of course, is because the public domain has been largely disposed of, although there are millions of acres of national forests, grazing districts, oil reservations, Indian reservations, and the like. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina is referring to the fact that since we became involved in the war the Government has been compelled to acquire very large areas for bombing sites, air training centers, ammunition depots, and facilities of similar nature. The Defense Plant Corporation has acquired huge areas for building plants for the construction of airplanes and other instruments of war. That is a part of the recent trend of which I speak. The acquisition of those properties was necessary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I understand that criticism has been directed to various departments of the Government for having purchased outright certain property. The Senator from Wyoming, being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, will recall that when the subject of manpower was being considered a few days ago before our committee there was some discussion regarding the purchase of the Stevens Hotel and the Congress Hotel, both being located in Chicago, as well as the outright purchase of other real-estate properties in America. A great many persons believe that the Government should have acquired those properties temporarily by way of lease rather than by purchase, and that prompted my inquiry.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That policy was adopted largely, I think, by reason of the fact that it was impossible to build the facilities which were needed by the Army. For example, it is now impossible to obtain priorities for the construction of adequate housing. How much more sensible it is for the War Department and the Navy Department to acquire a hotel for use as a school or training place for aviation cadets—as has been done in the case of the Stevens Hotel—than for them to try, and to fail, in the effort to construct such a place.

However, Mr. President, that was not what I had in mind. We have, for example, on the statute books, and have had since February 25, 1920, a law providing for the leasing of oil lands upon the public domain. The Department of Agriculture has developed its own leasing program, and has already made, I am told, some 15 or 16 oil and gas leases upon the lands which have been acquired by the Department. The leases no doubt have protected the interests of the Federal Government, but they were not issued under the leasing act enacted by the Congress. They were not administered by the Department of the Interior. The Department of Agriculture, having acquired the lands for other purposes, assumed to itself the power and authority to develop a leasing system of its own without reference to Congress, without consulting any of the committees of Congress.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that since it has been the universal practice of the Government to act under laws of Congress, not by Executive order alone, Congress should do something about this system, particularly because of the extreme need for efficient administration.

Of what value is it—perhaps I should say how absurd it is—to have two or three departments of Government operating in exactly the same field? Why have the Geological Survey, the General Land Office, and the great public land department in the Department of the Interior administering the leasing of oil and gas lands, and then have the Department of Agriculture set up a competitive system?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to suggest that the Senator from Wyoming is a member of the Appropriations Committee and, I believe, of the agricultural subcomittee of that committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. At any rate, that is my recollection. I am wondering if the Senator cannot use his very ingenious and very efficient mind to put a stop to that practice by means of granting or not granting appropriations. Manifestly, the Department of Agriculture is exceeding its powers. Manifestly, the oil lands of the country should be controlled by the Department of the Interior; and for the Department of Agriculture to obtain the lands for other purposes and then set up a bureau of its own is entirely without constitutional grounds. The Department of Agriculture should be made to carry out the law and the Constitution, just as other organizations are made to do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as the Senator from Tennessee has well said, the constitutional duty and the responsibility of disposing of the public domain, of the public property of the United States, belong to the Congress, and only the Congress can lay down the law under which such disposition may be made. Whenever any executive bureau of its own volition, without consultation with Congress, undertakes to set up machinery for administering the lands of the United States, acquired for another purpose, for purposes for which Congress has created the Department of the Interior, its policy is obviously a mistaken one, to use very mild language. I use that mild language because I know that the Department of Agriculture has been actuated by the best of good motives; but sometimes I am inclined to believe that those who have entered the executive arm of the Government without proper training in the Constitution and the law and the history of the Government, seem to imagine that the executive bureaus have the power and the right to lay down policies of their own, without reference to Congress.

Mr. President, without taking up more of the Senate's time, I introduce the bill and ask that it be appropriately referred. Of course, I think that an appropriate reference would be to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. President, before I take my seat let me add that the leasing act to which I have referred provides that the royalties which are received by the Federal Government, under the leases which are granted to oil and gas and other mineral lands, shall be distributed in a particular manner. It was provided, for example, that 37½ percent of the royalties should go to the States within the boundaries of which the deposits were found. The purpose of that provision obviously was to compensate the States for the loss of revenue by reason of the retention in the Government of title to the lands.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me ask at this point whether the Department of Agriculture recognizes that law?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It does not. That is the point I was about to make.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me say to the Senator that, so far as I personally am concerned, I shall be glad to join him in helping to regulate the Department of Agriculture in that respect.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was about to add that from the very beginning of the Reclamation Service, 52½ percent of the royalties have gone to the reclamation fund, to be used for the construction of reclamation projects throughout the United States, and only 10 percent have gone to the Federal Treasury for its administration. The bill I have introduced would extend that system to the lands acquired by the United States.

Mr. President, lest there be some misapprehension, I should add a further word: The measure specifically exempts national parks and national monuments and holdings of that kind. There is no intention to set up a system which would militate against the proper use of lands properly acquired by the United States. So the bill provides that if there is a conflict of use between the surface use for which the lands were acquired by any department and the use for mining, the matter may be determined; and the paramount use, if it be the use for which the lands were acquired shall, of course, have control. There is a specific exemption, so that there shall be no interference with the military use of lands, with power projects, with reclamation projects, or with any other essential service which the United States has set up.

The bill (S. 736) to promote the mining of minerals on lands acquired by the United States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the morning hour has automatically terminated and further morning business is thereby precluded.

MANPOWER HEARINGS BY COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that the Committee on Military Affairs is nearing the conclusion of the manpower hearings which have engaged the attention of the committee since last October. Week after next, Mr. President, we will conduct hearings upon what is known as the Austin-Wadsworth mobilization bill, Senate bill 666, which, I might say, is the first bill arising out of the volume of hearings, during which we have heard many witnesses relative to this all-important subject which is engaging the attention of the American people at this time. I wish to say that the hearings on the bill will be public; they will be held in the Senate Office Building in an appropriate place, and will begin on Tuesday, March 2, 1943, at 10:30 a. m. I wish further to say that we shall welcome any and all individuals or organizations who may wish to be heard, for or against the bill, and, to use the language of one of the authors of the bill, "employees, employers, contractors, patriotic and civic organizations and any other citizens, will be heard, and their statements considered."

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] continued: "This is a people's war, and legislation must express the people's views and cooperation."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and a joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H. R. 133. An act to amend and clarify certain provisions of law relating to functions of the War Shipping Administration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 1294. An act to authorize the sale or transfer of property belonging to the Government, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 1762. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943; to the Committee on Appropriations.

APPOINTMENT OF CHARLES E. WILSON AS EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD following my remarks the press release of Hon. Donald M. Nelson of February 16, 1943, relative to the accession of Mr. Charles E. Wilson to a position which gives him now a new opportunity to further war production in this country, and to enable us to keep the commitments this Nation has made to our allies and to our gallant men and women of the armed forces.

Following this, I ask that there be printed in proper succession the Executive orders of the President, beginning with the order of January 16, 1942, setting up the War Production Board and providing for the duties of the Board and the Chairman thereof relative to war production.

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Chairman Donald M. Nelson today appointed Charles E. Wilson as executive vice chairman of the War Production Board, in charge of all War Production Board programs, and asked Ferdinand E. Eberstadt, program vice chairman, for his resignation.

In assuming authority over all phases of War Production Board programs and activities, Mr. Wilson will report to the Chairman. He takes over all the duties formerly vested in the program vice chairman, including control of industry divisions and the operations of the controlled materials plan.

Mr. Nelson said:

"I have made this move in order to solve organizational problems which have come about because carefully scheduled production is now the most pressing problem before us.

"It is my conviction that this change will bring harmony to War Production Board and end the jurisdictional questions which, if permitted to continue, could only hamper the war effort.

"Mr. Eberstadt has worked hard and diligently in setting up the controlled materials plan, and I regret the circumstances which make it necessary for me to transfer his functions to another. However, Mr. Wilson is a production man and our job today is primarily a production job.

"Because our entire effort must now center about the production line, and because this involves the closest control over scheduling, it is essential that two things be true—first, that a production man be in full charge; second, that all related problems be within the jurisdiction of that production man.

"In the early days of this organization and its predecessors, we faced problems of a somewhat different nature. Even a few months ago, the problem of controlling materials flow was of major importance. It does not now lose any of its importance, but the emphasis has shifted; scheduling—both of end items and components—is the over-all job of first importance that must be pushed.

"And because the total war program has become more closely integrated, it follows that the man in charge of production cannot discharge his duties adequately unless he also controls the flow of materials into production channels.

"In other words, materials control and production control today are all one integrated job. They cannot be considered separately. They must be directed as one job, not two.

"Under my supervision, Mr. Wilson will have full authority to make the necessary decisions to carry out the War Production Board production programs for aircraft, escort vessels, rubber, high-octane gas, merchant vessels, and all other war items. I am confident that he will continue to keep production going up."

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 9024 ESTABLISHING THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD IN THE EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT AND DEFINING ITS FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes of the United States, as President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and in order to define further the functions and duties of the Office for Emergency Management with respect to the state of war declared to exist by joint resolutions of the Congress, approved December 8, 1941, and December 11, 1941, respectively, and for the purpose of assuring the most effective prosecution of war procurement and production, it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. There is established within the Office for Emergency Management of the Executive Office of the President a War Production Board, hereinafter referred to as the Board. The Board shall consist of a chairman, to be appointed by the President, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Federal Loan Administrator, the Director General and the Associate Director General of the Office of Production Management, the Administrator of the Office of Price Administration, the Chairman of the Board of Economic Warfare, and the special assistant to the President supervising the defense aid program.

2. The Chairman of the War Production Board, with the advice and assistance of the members of the Board, shall:

a. Exercise general direction over the war procurement and production program.

b. Determine the policies, plans, procedures, and methods of the several Federal departments, establishments, and agencies in respect to war procurement and production, including purchasing, contracting, specifications, and construction; and including conversion, requisitioning, plant expansion, and the financing thereof; and issue such directives in respect thereto as he may deem necessary or appropriate.

c. Perform the functions and exercise the powers vested in the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board by Executive Order No. 8875 of August 28, 1941.

d. Supervise the Office of Production Management in the performance of its responsibilities and duties, and direct such changes in its organization as he may deem necessary.

e. Report from time to time to the President on the progress of war procurement and production, and perform such other duties as the President may direct.

3. Federal departments, establishments, and agencies shall comply with the policies, plans, methods, and procedures in respect to war procurement and production as determined by the Chairman, and shall furnish to the Chairman such information relating to war procurement and production as he may deem necessary for the performance of his duties.

4. The Army and Navy Munitions Board shall report to the President through the Chairman of the War Production Board.

5. The Chairman may exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this order through such officials or agencies and in such manner as he may determine; and his decisions shall be final.

6. The Chairman is further authorized within the limits of such funds as may be allocated or appropriated to the Board to employ necessary personnel and make provision for necessary supplies, facilities, and services.

7. The Supply Priorities and Allocations Board, established by the Executive order of August 28, 1941, is hereby abolished, and its personnel, records, and property transferred to the Board. The Executive Orders No. 8629 of January 7, 1941, No. 8875 of August 28, 1941, No. 8891 of September 4, 1941, No. 8942 of November 19, 1941, No. 9001 of December 27, 1941, and No. 9023 of January 14, 1942, are hereby amended accordingly, and any provisions of these or other pertinent Executive orders conflicting with this order are hereby superseded.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 16, 1942.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 9040, DEFINING ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS AND DUTIES OF THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes, as President of the United States and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and for the purpose of assuring the most effective prosecution of war procurement and production, it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. In addition to the responsibilities and duties described in paragraph 2 of Executive Order No. 9024, of January 16, 1942, the Chairman of the War Production Board, with the advice and assistance of the members of the Board, shall:

(a) Perform the functions and exercise the powers heretofore vested in the Office of Production Management.

(b) Perform the functions and exercise the powers vested in the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board, by Executive Order No. 8942, of November 19, 1941.

(c) Perform the functions and exercise the authority vested in the President by section 120 of the National Defense Act of 1916 (39 Stat. 213).

2. Paragraph 1 of said Executive Order No. 9024 of January 16, 1942, is amended to provide that the lieutenant general in charge of War Department production, and the Director of the Labor Division of the War Production Board shall be members of the War Production Board vice the Director General and Associate Director General of the Office of Production Management.

3. The Chairman of the War Production Board may exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this or any other order through such officials or agencies and in such manner as he may determine; and his decisions shall be final.

4. The Office of Production Management, established by Executive Order No. 8629 of January 7, 1941, is abolished and its personnel, records, property, and funds are transferred to the War Production Board.

5. Executive Order No. 8629, of January 7, 1941, is rescinded, and Executive Order No. 9024, of January 16, 1942, and any other Executive orders the provisions of which are inconsistent with the provisions of this order, are amended accordingly.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 9125 DEFINING ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS, DUTIES, AND POWERS OF THE WAR PRODUCTION BOARD AND THE OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and statutes of the United States, as President of the United States and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and for the purpose of assuring the most effective prosecution of war procurement and production, it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. In addition to the responsibilities and duties described in Executive Order No. 9024, of January 16, 1942, and in Executive Order No. 9040, of January 24, 1942, the Chairman of the War Production Board, with the advice and assistance of the members of the Board, shall perform the additional functions and duties, and exercise the additional powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon the President of the United States by title III of the Second War Powers Act, 1942.

2. The Chairman of the War Production Board may perform the functions and duties, and exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this or any other order through such officials or agencies, including the Office of Price Administration (created by the act of January 30, 1942, Pub. Law 421, 77th Cong., 2d sess.), and in such manner as he may determine. In any and all such cases the decision of the Chairman of the War Production Board shall be final.

3. The Chairman of the War Production Board is authorized to delegate to the Office of Price Administration or the Price Administrator such of his functions, duties, powers, authority, or discretion with respect to priorities or rationing, as he may deem to be necessary or appropriate for the effective prosecution of the war; and in the administration of enforcement of any such priorities or rationing authority or any priorities or rationing authority heretofore conferred upon the Office of Price Administration or upon the Price Administrator by the Office of Production Management or by the Chairman of the War Production Board, the Price Administrator is hereby authorized:

(a) To exercise all functions, duties, powers, authority, or discretion with respect to such priorities or rationing in the same manner, and to the same degree and extent, as if such functions, duties, powers, authority, or discretion had been conferred upon or transferred to the Office of Price Administration directly by Executive order.

(b) To delegate the functions, duties, powers, authority, or discretion mentioned in subparagraphs (a) and (d) hereof, including the authority and power to sign and issue subpenas, to such person or persons as he may designate or appoint for that purpose, to be exercised by such person or persons in any place and at any time.

(c) To institute civil proceedings in his own name to enforce any such priority or rationing authority or any regulation or order heretofore or hereafter issued, or action taken, pursuant to such authority, and to intervene in any civil proceedings in which any such regulation or order is or could be relied upon as ground for relief or defense or is otherwise involved, in any Federal, State, or Territorial court. The Price Administrator shall be represented in any such proceedings by attorneys appointed or designated by him.

(d) To exercise, to the extent necessary for the purposes of this order, the functions, duties, powers, authority, or discretion conferred upon the President by paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (a) of section 2 of the act of June 28, 1941 (54 Stat. 676), as amended by the act of May 31, 1941 (Pub. Law 89, 77th Cong.), and by title III of the Second War Powers Act, 1942 (act of March 27, 1942, Pub. Law 507, 77th Cong.).

4. War Production Board Directives No. 1 of January 24, 1942 (7 F. R. 562), No. 1A of February 2, 1942 (7 F. R. 698), No. 1B of February 9, 1942 (7 F. R. 925), No. 1C of February 28, 1942 (7 F. R. 1669), and any other authorizations of the Office of Production Management or the War Production Board with respect to priorities or rationing, and all regulations or orders issued, or actions taken, by the Office of Price Administration or the Price Administrator pursuant to such directives or authorizations, are hereby, until withdrawn or superseded, continued in full force and effect, as if issued pursuant to this order or under authority conferred pursuant to this order. No provision of this order shall be construed to impair the right of the Administrator to maintain pending, or to institute, civil proceedings, or to take any other action with respect to violations prior to the date of this order of any priorities or rationing regulation or order heretofore issued.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 7, 1942.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in addition to the offering of these statements, I wish to say that those of us who have had opportunity to see Mr. Charles E. Wilson, who was the head of the General Electric Co. until he came to the War Production Board here, feel great confidence in Mr. Wilson's ability, in his courage, and in his character.

He is a practical production man. I understand that one of the reasons why he was chosen was the fact that his company, the General Electric Co., has made such an outstanding production record. They have had very large responsibility and have discharged it with great credit.

I believe Mr. Wilson will break the bottlenecks of production which have been retarding production progress. I believe he has the skill, the experience, the personality, and the strength of will which will make it possible for him very noticeably and conspicuously to forward our whole production effort. I know that the Congress is going to look upon Mr. Wilson's assuming this responsible place with confident hope, and that we will back him up and allow nothing to interfere with him in doing the big job which he has undertaken for the country and our kind of a world.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In Thy name, O Saviour of the world, we offer our prayer to the Father of the children of men. Enable us to realize that the epochs in our lives are not in our calling nor in the things seen, but in prayer and in silent meditation by the way. Thus we learn to understand ourselves, our perceptions, our judgments, and the wise road to take. In the chamber of the soul weaknesses are disclosed and the armor of defense is made. This above all: "To thine own self be true and it must follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man."

Almighty God, we rejoice that the age of chivalry continues and that the blessings of heaven come to those who seek, hope, and quietly wait. When hunger and suffering were old and getting older there were those who saw above the torn clouds and heard the whisper of the morning. Oh, we praise Thee for those who stand resolute, strong of will, even while the warm blood of their native soil is filling the cup of hate. Voices are calling while doors of humanity are bolted, as the shadows of slavery and death are hanging above them like a pall. Oh, help America to spread the reign of justice with open hands, and with earnest minds, dispelling the gloom, and forget them not who fight as the vanguard of freedom in yonder distant land. In the name of our Elder Brother. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON of Missouri, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented the following report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943 (Rept. No. 137), which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Joint Resolution 82 to provide urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could reach some agreement with the gentleman from New York, inasmuch as time is limited, that discussion be limited to 5 minutes a side, at the end of which time a motion will be offered.

Mr. TABER. That will be satisfactory to us.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the resolution be limited to 5 minutes a side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, namely:

LEGISLATIVE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Special and select committees: For an additional amount for expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House, fiscal year 1943, $250,000.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

OFFICE FOR EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT

War Manpower Commission

Selective Service System: For an additional amount for the operation and maintenance of the Selective Service System, including the objects specified under the head "Selective Service System" in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1943, $21,160,000: Provided, That such combined appropriation shall not be subject to the provisions of section 5 of such appropriation act nor to the provisions of the First Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943, in paragraphs 3 and 13 under the head "Office for Emergency Management," title I, and section 203, title II.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

OFFICE OF TREASURER OF UNITED STATES

Salaries: For an additional amount for salaries, Office of Treasurer of the United States, fiscal year 1943, $1,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this bill is limited to three items: The first provides a quarter of a million dollars for the expenses of the special and select committees of the House of Representatives. The second appropriates $21,160,000 for the Selective Service System of the War Manpower Commission. And the third supplies a million dollars to take care of the deficit in the Office of the Treasurer of the United States.

These three items would, in the regular course of events, have been included in the general deficiency bill which is to be reported to the House next week. But as the result of unforseen contingencies, due entirely to the war, funds for these three agencies have been exhausted, or will be exhausted before the end of the month, and immediate funds must be provided unless all three are to be appropriation bill can be enacted.
brought to a standstill before the general

In the first instance, all funds available for the expenses of the select and special committees of the House have been completely exhausted. The amount available for this purpose for the current fiscal year is $150,000. But the number of these committees has been increased until authorizations for the purpose now total $222,000 and further authorizations are yet to be made.

The $34,745,000 appropriated for the fiscal year 1943 for the Selective Service System was estimated prior to Pearl Harbor. That figure was based on the proposed induction of a maximum of 800,000 selectees. Due to the subsequent declaration of war the number actually inducted exceeds 4,000,000, and, of course, the original appropriation is wholly inadequate.

The Office of Treasurer of the United States was granted an original appropriation of $1,700,000 for salaries for the current fiscal year. This likewise was prior to the declaration of war. The increased volume of Government disbursements for the war program is expected to practically double that originally anticipated, and as result the additional $1,000,000 carried by the bill will be required to take care of the necessary personnel.

All three are routine activities which must be provided for. The additional fiscal requirements are due entirely to war conditions. And the imperative nature of their requirements makes it necessary to take them up in a separate bill which can have prompt attention in both Houses.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Can the gentleman give us the names of the special and select committees whose expenditures are involved in this measure?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. All of the special and select committees are involved. All are without funds.

Mr. RANKIN. Does it cover the appropriation for the Dies committee?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes, the Dies committee is included along with all other special and select committees.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. How much is provided for the select committees, for what committees, and how much for each?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is provided. It is the amount authorized by Congress on reports from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SABATH. How much is provided for the different committees, may we know? I think we are entitled to know how much is for each committee.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The amount is named in the various resolutions reported by the Committee on Accounts and varies with each committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is brought in by unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations. I do not see how we can possibly escape approving it.

For the special committees the amount of $250,000 goes into the general contingent fund of the House, and it is available only by resolution that has been adopted or will be adopted by the House with reference to any committee. The committees can have no funds until the Committee on Accounts has audited and approved the bills. There are five or six such committees, the Dies committee, for which a resolution has not yet been adopted from the Committee on Accounts, the Committee on Appropriations, for which resolution has not yet been adopted, and the Smith committee to investigate the different activities of the Government. Undoubtedly the resolutions that are approved for all these committees will exceed the amount that is carried here, but it is only desired to provide here for enough money to cover these activities until the 1st day of July, and we hope that it will do that.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand it, after this resolution is passed, then resolutions will come in from the Committee on Accounts covering these individual allotments, is that correct?

Mr. TABER. That is correct, and that is the time the House will pass on them. This goes into the pot subject to draft by the Clerk of the House with the approval of the Committee on Accounts after the House has passed a specific resolution authorizing the spending of that money. This really sets up a fund in the hands of the Committee on Accounts and the Clerk of the House subject to draft upon it by resolution of the House itself.

Mr. RANKIN. Then the resolution for the funds for the Dies committee will have to be approved by the House?

Mr. TABER. The time to talk about that is when that particular resolution comes from the Committee on Accounts, and the time to talk about the Smith resolution is at that time, and likewise in reference to money for the Appropriation Committee. There are two or three other committees besides that. This is not the giving of any specific money to any specific committee. You do not get that until we get to the other proposition.

Mr. FOLGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. FOLGER. If I understand this correctly, this carries these activities only to July 1?

Mr. TABER. It is only intended to put up money enough to carry the special committees until July 1. It may not do it. On the other hand, there might possibly be a balance. We cannot tell. We have done the best we could to estimate it correctly.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, this resolution has just been reported.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell the House how much is the total amount covered by the resolution and how much for each of these three propositions indicated?

Mr. TABER. There is a total of $22,410,000. The first item is for the select committees of the House, $250,000. The second item is for the Selective Service operations, $21,160,000, and the third item is for the Treasurer of the United States, $1,000,000.

I will tell you what these items are other than for the select committees of the House. At the time the original appropriation was made, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has stated, the estimates were gotten up before Pearl Harbor and they were put through the House on that basis. They called for $34,000,000 plus. I cannot give you the exact figure at this time. The result of the increased number of people who have had to be inducted into the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps has meant additional expenses for the local boards, for the administration here, and other things to such an extent that we are obliged to send in this recommendation of $21,160,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. The Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, for the benefit and convenience of the Members of the House and Senate, has arranged for an exhibit of photographs demonstrating the extent of damage inflicted upon our German enemies by airplane bombing raids to be placed on display in the House caucus rooms through the courtesy of Mr. Robert Lovett, Assistant Secretary of War for Air.

The photographs are enlargements from negatives made by the Royal Air Force and also may be inspected in three dimensional form by use of special stereoscopic equipment which has been installed.

Similar photographs were exhibited to members of Parliament in London and to legislators of other Allied Nations and have proved most helpful in clarifying their impressions of the ability of bombing aircraft to inflict damage on the enemy.

An officer of the R. A. F. and also an officer of the United States Army Air Forces will be present in the House caucus room to interpret the photographs and to answer questions while the exhibit is open.

Members of the House and Senate and their assistants will be welcome between the hours of 9 a. m. and noon and between the hours of 2 and 4 p. m. daily starting Friday, February 19.

MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a committee to escort Mme. Chiang Kai-shek into the Chamber the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Pursuant to the order of the House of February 10, 1943, heretofore adopted, the Chair declares the House now in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

RECESS

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess at the call of the Speaker.

At 12 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m., the committee, headed by the Sergeant at Arms and the Doorkeeper, escorted Mme. Chiang Kai-shek into the Chamber, and she took her place on the Speaker's rostrum, at the side of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Members of the House of Representatives, it is a proud day for the United States of America to receive and to do honor to one of the outstanding women of all the earth. She is the helpmeet and the coworker of one of the outstanding figures of the world. It is my great pleasure, my high privilege, and my distinguished honor to present to you Mme. Chiang Kai-shek.

ADDRESS OF MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Mme. CHIANG KAI-SHEK. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the United States, at any time it would be a privilege for me to address Congress, more especially this present august body which will have so much to do in shaping the destiny of the world. In speaking to Congress I am literally speaking to the American people. The Seventy-seventh Congress, as their representatives, fulfilled the obligations and responsibilities of its trust by declaring war on the aggressors. That part of the duty of the people's representatives was discharged in 1941. The task now confronting you is to help win the war and to create and uphold a lasting peace which will justify the sacrifices and sufferings of the victims of aggression.

Before enlarging on this subject, I should like to tell you a little about my long and vividly interesting trip to your country from my own land which has bled and borne unflinchingly the burden of war for more than 5½ years. I shall not dwell, however, upon the part China has played in our united effort to free mankind from brutality and violence. I shall try to convey to you, however imperfectly, the impressions gained during the trip.

First of all, I want to assure you that the American people have every right to be proud of their fighting men in so many parts of the world. I am particularly thinking of those of your boys in the far-flung, out-of-the-way stations and areas where life is attended by dreary drabness—this because their duty is not one of spectacular performance and they are not buoyed up by excitement of battle. They are called upon, day after colorless day, to perform routine duties such as safeguarding defenses and preparing for possible enemy action. It has been said, and I find it true from personal experience, that it is easier to risk one's life on the battlefield than it is to perform customary humble and humdrum duties which, however, are just as necessary to winning the war. Some of your troops are stationed in isolated spots, quite out of reach of ordinary communications. Some of your boys have had to fly hundreds of hours over the sea from an improvised airfield in quests often disappointingly fruitless, of enemy submarines. They, and others, have to stand the monotony of waiting—just waiting. But, as I told them, true patriotism lies in possessing the morale and physical stamina to perform faithfully and conscientiously the daily tasks so that in the sum total the weakest link is the strongest.

Your soldiers have shown conclusively that they are able stoically to endure homesickness, the glaring dryness, and scorching heat of the Tropics, and keep themselves fit and in excellent fighting trim. They are amongst the unsung heroes of this war, and everything possible to lighten their tedium and buoy up their morale should be done. That sacred duty is yours. The American Army is better fed than any army in the world. This does not mean, however, that they can live indefinitely on canned food without having the effects tell on them. These admittedly are the minor hardships of war, especially when we pause to consider that in many parts of the world, starvation prevails. But peculiarly enough, oftentimes it is not the major problems of existence which irk a man's soul; it is rather the pin pricks, especially those incidental to a life of deadly sameness, with tempers frayed out and nervous systems torn to shreds.

The second impression of my trip is that America is not only the cauldron of democracy, but the incubator of democratic principles. At some of the places I visited, I met the crews of your air bases. There I found first generation Germans, Italians, Frenchmen, Poles, Czechoslovakians, and other nationals. Some of them had accents so thick that, if such a thing were possible, one could not cut them with a butter knife. But there they were—all Americans, all devoted to the same ideals, all working for the same cause and united by the same high purpose. No suspicion or rivalry existed between them. This increased my belief and faith that devotion to common principles eliminates differences in race, and that identity of ideals is the strongest possible solvent of racial dissimilarities.

I have reached your country, therefore, with no misgivings, but with my belief that the American people are building and carrying out a true pattern of the Nation conceived by your forebears, strengthened and confirmed. You, as representatives of the American people, have before you the glorious opportunity of carrying on the pioneer work of your ancestors, beyond the frontiers of physical and geographical limitations. Their brawn and thews braved undauntedly almost unbelievable hardships to open up a new continent. The modern world lauds them for their vigor and intensity of purpose, and for their accomplishment. You have today before you the immeasurably greater opportunity to implement these same ideals and to help bring about the liberation of man's spirit in every part of the world. In order to accomplish this purpose, we of the United Nations must now so prosecute the war that victory will be ours decisively and with all good speed.

Sun-tese, the well-known Chinese strategist said:

In order to win, know thyself and thy enemy.

We have also the saying:

It takes little effort to watch the other fellow carry the load.

In spite of these teachings from a wise old past, which are shared by every nation, there has been a tendency to belittle the strength of our opponents.

When Japan thrust total war on China in 1937 military experts of every nation did not give China even a ghost of a chance. But when Japan failed to bring China cringing to her knees as she vaunted, the world took solace in this phenomenon by declaring that they had overestimated Japan's military might. Nevertheless, when the greedy flames of war inexorably spread in the Pacific following the perfidious attack on Pearl Harbor, Malaya, and lands in and around the China Sea, and one after another of these places fell, the pendulum swung to the other extreme. Doubts and fears lifted their ugly heads and the world began to think that the Japanese were Nietzschean supermen, superior in intellect and physical prowess, a belief which the Gobineaus and the Houston Chamberlains and their apt pupils, the Nazi racists, had propounded about the Nordics.

Again, now the prevailing opinion seems to consider the defeat of the Japanese as of relative unimportance and that Hitler is our first concern. This is not borne out by actual facts, nor is it to the interests of the United Nations as a whole to allow Japan to continue not only as a vital potential threat but as a waiting sword of Damocles, ready to descend at a moment's notice.

Let us not forget that Japan in her occupied areas today has greater resources at her command than Germany.

Let us not forget that the longer Japan is left in undisputed possession of these resources, the stronger she must become. Each passing day takes more toll in lives of both Americans and Chinese.

Let us not forget that the Japanese are an intransigent people.

Let us not forget that during the first 4½ years of total aggression China has borne Japan's sadistic fury unaided and alone.

The victories won by the United States Navy at Midway and the Coral Sea are doubtless steps in the right direction—they are merely steps in the right direction—for the magnificent fight that was waged at Guadalcanal during the past 6 months attests to the fact that the defeat of the forces of evil though long and arduous will finally come to pass. For have we not on the side of righteousness and justice stanch allies in Great Britain, Russia, and other brave and indomitable peoples? Meanwhile the peril of the Japanese juggernaut remains. Japanese military might must be decimated as a fighting force before its threat to civilization is removed.

When the Seventy-seventh Congress declared war against Japan, Germany, and Italy, Congress for the moment had done its work. It now remains for you, the present Representatives of the American people, to point the way to win the war, to help construct a world in which all peoples may henceforth live in harmony and peace.

May I not hope that it is the resolve of Congress to devote itself to the creation of the post-war world? To dedicate itself to the preparation for the brighter future that a stricken world so eagerly awaits?

We of this generation who are privileged to help make a better world for ourselves and for posterity should remember that, while we must not be visionary, we must have vision so that peace should not be punitive in spirit and should not be provincial or nationalistic or even continental in concept, but universal in scope and humanitarian in action, for modern science has so annihilated distance that what affects one people must of necessity affect all other peoples.

The term "hands and feet" is often used in China to signify the relationship between brothers. Since international interdependence is now so universally recognized, can we not also say that all nations should become members of one corporate body?

The 160 years of traditional friendship between our two great peoples, China and America, which has never been marred by misunderstandings, is unsurpassed in the annals of the world. I can also assure you that China is eager and ready to cooperate with you and other peoples to lay a true and lasting foundation for a sane and progressive world society which would make it impossible for any arrogant or predatory neighbor to plunge future generations into another orgy of blood. In the past China has not computed the cost to her manpower in her fight against aggression, although she well realized that manpower is the real wealth of a nation and it takes generations to grow it. She has been soberly conscious of her responsibilities and has not concerned herself with privileges and gains which she might have obtained through compromise of principles. Nor will she demean herself and all she holds dear to the practice of the market place.

We in China, like you, want a better world, not for ourselves alone, but for all mankind, and we must have it. It is not enough, however, to proclaim our ideals or even to be convinced that we have them. In order to preserve, uphold, and maintain them, there are times when we should throw all we cherish into our effort to fulfill these ideals even at the risk of failure.

The teachings drawn from our late leader, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, have given our people the fortitude to carry on. From 5½ years of experience we in China are convinced that it is the better part of wisdom not to accept failure ignominiously, but to risk it gloriously. We shall have faith that, at the writing of peace, America and our other gallant allies will not be obtunded by the mirage of contingent reasons of expediency.

Man's mettle is tested both in adversity and in success. Twice is this true of the soul of a nation.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings occurring during the recess will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 122, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the study and investigation by the select committee created by House Resolution 21, not to exceed $60,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee conducting such investigation and study or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia unless otherwise officially engaged.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXAMINATIONS CONDUCTED BY COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 116, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and examinations authorized by House Resolutions 69 of the Seventy-eighth Congress, incurred by the Committee on Appropriations, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $100,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee thereof conducting such study and examination or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. The official stenographers to committees may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia, if not otherwise officially engaged.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, may I say, in response to applications for positions under this resolution that no new personnel will be appointed. All employees will be drawn from persons now employed in the various departments. While the committee will have authority to employ personnel without restriction, under the plan agreed upon all auditors and examiners will be appointed from those now serving in civil-service positions.

In this way we expect to secure trained and experienced personnel and—inasmuch as the salaries of the staff constitute the largest item of expense in such investigations—we expect to conduct these investigations at the lowest cost of any investigations authorized by the House involving comparable scope and subject matter. Employees requisitioned from the departments will be taken from their rolls and entered on our rolls at the same rate of pay. When returned to the departments they will be separated from the committee rolls and again entered on the departmental rolls without prejudice. If in the employ of the committee only a few days, it will not be necessary to fill their places in the department and the cost to the Government will be nothing as the committee pay will merely take the place of the departmental pay. Of course if retained by the commiteee long enough to require an additional employee in the department it will constitute an additional charge on the Treasury, but even then the rate of pay will be that of the classified service from which drawn.

We do not expect to require anything like the $100,000 asked, but request this amount in order to be equipped to undertake any investigation requiring attention.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The $100,000 provided in this resolution applies to the committee that has been appointed, the special committee of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PATTON. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No; that is true of the appropriations provided for the special committee authorized to investigate subversive affiliations, but not to this appropriation. This appropriation merely implements the additional powers of investigation given to the committee for the purpose of authorizing inquiries in the various departments. It does not relate to a new subcommittee but to an extension of the powers of the present committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. As my colleague knows, this is a matter in which I have been very specially interested and have a bill pending that goes further than the present one. Personally, I do not think there should be any limitation whatever upon the competence and efficiency of those selected for this service. I think it would be quite in order to go outside of the governmental ranks for such personnel, because there we might find some especially able people to carry on this work, who would not be under any suspicion whatever of being in sympathy with things we are trying to abrogate and rid ourselves of.
